GRANDPARENTS DAY

HON. HARRY REID

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, Sunday marked the ninth annual tribute to one of our Nation's most precious natural resources, grandparents. "Grandparents Day" was first observed in 1978 after years of work to establish the special observance day by retired advertising executive and real estate developer, Mike Goldgar.

One of the many triumphs of growing old in America is becoming a grandparent, and the unique and important relationships between grandparents and grandchildren is invaluable to both generations. Approximately 75 percent of all persons over the age of 65 are grandparents, and each one provides family and friends with a special opportunity to share the experience of the past.

"Grandparents Day" is a perfect way to acknowledge the contributions made by our Nation's grandparents every day, and I hope everyone remembered Sunday, September 7, with an expression of love and appreciation for the gift of grandparents.

TRIBUTE TO BEN LEAL

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 9, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to Ben Leal for being presented the Memorah Award by the Israel Histadrut, which is the General Federation of Labor in Israel, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, on September 24.

Ben has been an outstanding labor leader as well as an example to us all of an individual who has dedicated his life to the advancement and betterment of the laborer. He first became associated with the local Teamsters chapter in Washington State in the late 1940's serving as the recording secretary. Since that time, he has served in a number of capacities on the boards of Teamsters groups. He presently serves as trustee on the executive board of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and as executive officer of local 856, San Francisco Bay area.

For over 10 years, he has served as trustee on the Western Conference of Teamsters pension trust plan, as president of the Northern California United Food and Drug Council and as chairman of Teamsters Local 856 health and welfare trust.

Ben is clearly deserving of the Memorah Award for his dedication to the laborer and to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. I hope that you will join me in extending my best to him on this accomplishment.

SENATE—Wednesday, September 10, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, September 8, 1986)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge; he putteth down one and setteth up another.—Psalms 75: 6 and 7.

Almighty God, Eternal Father, Your servants take up their critical, demanding legislation resolved to close the books on the 99th Congress, October 3. But simple political reality threatens their finest resolve. The stakes are high November 4—a fact which will not go away and will insinuate itself into every hour of these next 4 weeks—challenging harmony, unity, and the best of intentions. Determined as Your servants are to conduct business with dignity and decorum, political competition will be stirring relentlessly beneath the surface. These next 4 weeks will be like sitting on a volcano with the potential of unpredictable eruptions at any moment.

God of peace and love, pervade this place with Your supernatural presence. Overrule fragile human emotions. Bank the fires of controversy and prove beyond any doubt that You are alive and real and relevant. Enable Your servants to exceed their most optimistic hopes for these next 18 days and grant that they may enter the intense campaign period after October 3 with a sense of satisfaction, achievement, cool heads, warm hearts, and high purpose, remembering that, "Man proposes but God disposes." In the name of Him Who is incarnate truth, peace, and love. Amen.

Mr. WILSON. I reserve the leader's time.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic leader, Senator BYRD, of West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

DRUGS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, yesterday Senate Democrats introduced a comprehensive drug control package. The package is the product of the Democratic Working Group on Drug Abuse I appointed earlier this summer. Yesterday, it was unanimously endorsed by the Democratic conference.

We have heard the American people on this subject. The lastest polls tell us that our citizens view the drug problem as the most important problem facing the country. The statistics on the extent of the problem may vary, depending upon the source, but one thing is clear: One American child lured into the destructive nether world of drug abuse is one child too many. One employee who uses drugs on a job dealing with the health and safety of others is one employee too many. One shipment of heroin or cocaine into our country is one shipment too many. Tragically, we are seeing tens of thousands of Americans lured into this dead end alley. We must stop this scourge and stop it quickly.

Senate Democrats, Mr. President, are ready to act quickly and to act decisively.

Our bill, introduced yesterday, is the toughest, most comprehensive drug control bill to be introduced in the U.S. Senate. It is comprehensive:

It provides for coordinated leadership at the Federal level in our fight to control drug abuse;

It includes, for the first time, a meaningful Federal Drug Abuse Education Program;

It more than doubles the present Federal funding available for treatment and rehabilitation;

It doubles the amount of Federal funds for interdiction programs;

It includes funding for international cooperative efforts in drug control;

It includes funds for correctional institutions housing convicted drug law offenders;

It tightens antismuggling laws; and

It includes a grant program to State and local agencies for law enforcement.

All of these components are important, Mr. President. But I am particularly interested in strengthening the penalties for sale or possession of controlled substances, and consequently I am the principal sponsor of the title of the bill which does that.

For too long, Mr. President, we have seen a revolving door in our criminal justice system. We have seen occasions when major criminals are arrested, prosecuted, and convicted, and then put back on the street where they commit the same crime again and again. And then the same process is repeated, only to end up the same way. Judges look at the law, look at the penalty provisions which give them total and absolute discretion, and decide all too often to put a convicted individual on probation, and the defendant is, of course, then free to commit the same crime all over again. Or even when a jail term is imposed, parole is too often given to the convicted criminal and he serves only a small part of his sentence and is back on the streets committing a crime all over again.

Our proposals would put a stop to all that. The revolving door process is wrong. There are drug offenses for which convicted defendants should be required to serve years—years—in the penitentiary. Big time dealers should know with certainty that if they are caught and convicted, they will be headed for the penitentiary and they will stay there for years. There will be no parole. They will have to serve out their sentences. In other words, for a number of years the key will be thrown away. That is the penalty. These people have to be made to pay for their crimes.

I know we are going to hear from those quarters that are usually soft on criminals. But the American people are not asking that we be soft on criminals. The American people want drug dealers, drug pushers to be treated in the same way that hijackers should be treated. Hijackers take innocent lives. And the American people are rightly upset and indignant when hijackers take innocent lives. Well, drug pushers are taking innocent lives and drug pushers are making money, billions of dollars, out of taking innocent lives in this country—young lives, kids going to school.

We hear about crack. It is available, it is cheap, it is addictive, and it is deadly.

Why shouldn't these people be put in the penitentiary? Why should they not have to stay there? As far as I am concerned, they could rot there. And as far as I am concerned, they could be executed. We would have no hesitancy about executing hijackers. What about the drug pushers? They are making billions of dollars out of the commission of this crime, killing our young people, destroying lives. And we ought not be softheaded when it comes to dealing with these people.

So I have insisted that our antidrug proposals include a mandatory prison term for major drug dealers, and an even stiffer mandatory prison term for the "kingpins" of the trade.

This bill includes my proposals for a mandatory minimum sentence of 10 years without parole—that is a minimum sentence—and the judge can give the individual up to life, which suits me fine. But it is mandatory—10 years, no less; you go to the penitentiary, you stay, no parole, period—and a mandatory minimum sentence of 20 years the second time he is convicted. In both situations, the convicted criminal cannot get a parole. And for the kingpins we are increasing the top maximum sentence which a judge can choose to impose. As I have said, these bigtime dealers in both instances can be sentenced to life imprisonment without parole, if the judge believes that such a penalty is warranted.

Other dealers, not as big as the kingpins, but still considered major dealers, would also be subject to mandatory minimum penalties—5 years for the first offense; 10 years for a second offense. That is not too much penalty to slap on these individuals.

Ten years, for a second offense, again a mandatory minimum and without parole. And these dealers too could be sentenced to life—life. And why shed a tear if they are sentenced to life?

Finally, no matter how small an amount of drugs any particular person sells to another, if that sale results in a death, our proposal requires that a minimum jail term of 20 years, without parole, would have to be imposed. And a judge again would have the discretion to impose a life sentence.

I believe these mandatory minimum penalties combined with the elimination of parole, will go a long way toward furthering our effort to rid our streets of the drug menace.

I also wholeheartedly endorse the other increased penalty provisions which my colleagues have decided to include in our proposal. I am referring especially to the doubling of the penalties when a dealer uses children—think of that, uses children—to distribute his poison, and also when the drugs are distributed near a school.

Enactment of these tough new penalties will constitute a statement by our society—and I think our society has been looking for that kind of statement—through its elected representatives, that this country will no longer tolerate this illegal drug epidemic.

Mr. President, I commend the excellent job the members of the democratic working group did in drafting this legislation. The group, consisting of Senators DECONCINI, DODD, LEAHY, NUNN, SASSER, CRANSTON, ROCKEFELLER, MITCHELL, MOYNIHAN, and cochaired by Senators CHILES and BIDEN, deserves thanks for working so swiftly and thoroughly to craft this excellent package.

Our bill is comparable in many respects to the legislation which will be before the House today. It is our hope that the Senate can move swiftly to the comprehensive drug abuse control legislation so that we may settle any differences with the House and get a bill on the President's desk this year.

I urge the majority leader to schedule debate on drug legislation as soon as possible.

This is a nonpartisan problem. It cries out for a nonpartisan solution. And I am sure that working groups on both sides of the aisle are acting swiftly to deal with this serious problem. We are well into the final 20 scheduled days of the 99th Congress, and there is no time to lose.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR WILSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Senator from California, Mr. WILSON, is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

(Mr. TRIBLE assumed the chair.)

THE DRUG PROBLEM

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, shortly before the last recess, a bipartisan coalition of Senators introduced a more sweeping effort than had been undertaken in history to provide for the interdiction of the supply of dangerous drugs into this Nation.

Senator DECONCINI, Senator HAWKINS, Senator D'AMATO, Senator MURKOWSKI, myself, and others joined in an effort to provide the muscle necessary to provide to the valiant few who are at the borders and in the streets of this city and cities all across the land the necessary resources.

Mr. President, suddenly, there is a public awareness reflected in this Chamber and in the other one of the urgency to which the people of America as parents now attach to dealing with this problem. And I can only say, better late than never.

It is ironic that both as parents and as Members of Congress we have spent such time as we have in virtually every regard trying to create a climate of opportunity for America's youth, for our children, for our grandchildren. As parents, we save for their education. We look to the day when they can fulfill our hopes for them, as did the parents of Lenny Bias and others who have fallen tragically victims to this mysterious malady that has struck terror into the hearts of all of us as parents and as Members of Congress.

Mr. President, how do you measure the cost of the drug problem in the United States? Well, I would suggest there are many ways. We can look at the increase in the number of street police officers who are required just to deal with the incredible rising problem of dealing, at retail, with the drug traffic when we have failed to interdict the supply into the United States. Or we could measure it by looking at the increase in the number of victims of burglaries and armed robberies, the dangerous crimes performed in many instances, perhaps most, to support a drug habit that is both ruinous and ruinously expensive.

We can look at the increased number over the past 20 years of new programs created especially to deal with this rising volume of crime, not just drug offenses themselves, but the crimes of violence performed to support the habit.

We can look at the creation of the new judgeships, the addition of new probation officers, new correctional facilities, and those who are required to staff them to operate and maintain them.

And obviously when we look at all of those increases, one way to measure this terrible tragedy is to look at the increase in the tax bill of state and local taxpayers, to look at the incredible increase in cost that they are bearing because of it.

Businessmen will tell you that they must look to an increase in insurance premiums both as businessmen and as householders when they seek to guard against theft, burglary, and violence. Or we could, through the first efforts made under money laundering statues, try in some way to quantify the the illicit profits, but those frankly at the present moment are beyond measurement. Speculation is that America spends $100 billion a year on drugs, more than we spend for food, for clothing, or for shelter. Most important, most tragic is the incalculable costs, impossible to measure of the increase in the number of deaths of young people from drug overdose.

Mr. President, I do not know how you measure the anguish in the parent who discovers that his child is a user. I do not know how you measure the despair in the child user who makes the wrong and the tragic choice to support his habit by becoming a robber or a prostitute. I do not know how you measure the heartbreak on the part of the parents of a Len Bias or of the hundreds, the thousands, the tens of thousands more young Americans who, without his celebrity, have met the same tragic early death as Len Bias.

The worst thing, Mr. President, is that many of the complaints that I am reciting this morning were recited 20 years ago when as a relatively young candidate for State legislative office I said that we must educate our youth, that we must spend money to avoid spending more, and to avoid uncalculable costs. That was long, long before I came to the Senate. Unhappily, America has failed in the interval to deal with the growth and the magnitude of this incredible problem—almost unquantifiable as measured by all the indices of misery that I have referred to this morning. It is not that valiant efforts have not been made, Mr. President. There have been many especially courageous efforts by law enforcement agents, and by those who have dealt with the almost heartbreakingly difficult task of rehabilitation and treatment.

But, Mr. President, we as a Nation and as a society come to focus on the problem very late. We have not yet made an adequate response. There is blame aplenty to go around. The victims are not Republicans and Democrats and Independents. They are Americans. They are not just young, but mostly the young. They are not just the rich or the poor. Mr. President, we must interdict supply. We must curb demand. We must enact harsher penalities. We must decide how we are going to deal with the user. Critical questions that relate to testing and to the civil rights of those tested confront us. But I think we will find they are not intractable. The services have had to deal with this. The armed services have done a very good job of challenging the problem of drug abuse that threatened to cripple their effectiveness, to undermine morale. They have used testing to find and to deal with the problem to help those who want to be helped and to separate from the services those who apparently are incapable of being helped.

Education is a phrase that we have used rather loosely. It could include any number of efforts, 30-second TV spots, and efforts in the schools. The most successful have been the one-on-one intensive treatments. But, Mr. President, we must before we leave undertake in this body to supply the resources necessary to match the expressed concern, to interdict supply, to eradicate it at its source, to interdict aerial smuggling of the most sophisticated kind, and we need resources. That is why before we left for the recess Senator DECONCINI, Senator HAWKINS, and others introduced this legislation to spend a lot of money, but that money was a small fraction of what we spend for our national security, and it seeks to deal with the menace perhaps even greater to our national security from the conventional threat.

Mr. President, today I, together with other Senators, am going to introduce legislation that will seek to add money from the source from which it should come, from the illicit profits made by those drug traffickers whom we so condemn.

We should remove the caps that now exist in the law, those caps that prohibit the use of more of those laundered funds, more of those captured assets if we are to beef up the effort at interdiction by the Customs Service, and by the Drug Enforcement Agency in foreign lands. We are going to find it necessary, Mr. President, to exert ourselves in a way that we have not. If we are going to talk about a war on crime, the time has come to wage it. Thus far, we have engaged in a brief skirmish.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. PROXMIRE] is now recognized for a period not to exceed 5 minutes. I will insist on that time, I will tell Members of the body, in the future.

A NEW LIFE FOR ARMS CONTROL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, an encouraging development for arms control may offer a resurrection of arms control from the dead. It is a joint compromise proposal by six of the most highly respected military experts who have served our Government over the past 20 years. The group is bipartisan. Four served Republican administrations. Two were in Democratic administrations. Three of the six served as Secretary of Defense. Two were national security advisers to the President. One was Secretary of State. These six experts have been rightly referred to by the New York Times as "the six wise men." They are former Defense Secretaries Laird, Schlesinger, and Brown; former National Security Advisers Scowcroft and McFarland; and former Secretary of Defense Vance. Their recommendations would go a long way to advance a military policy that would: First, improve this country's national security; second, advance the cause of peace; third, greatly improve the likelihood of superpower arms control agreements that would slow and perhaps enentually stop the nuclear arms race.

The group recommends a reduction in the rate of increase for spending on the strategic defense initiative or star wars from the administration's 80 percent requested increase down to 10 percent. They would confine star wars spending to research for 10 years. They favor full compliance with the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. They call on our Government to honor the limits set by the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty [SALT II]. This expert group would restrain further production of the MX missile. In doing so, they would tie in the rate of MX production with the willingness of the Soviets to reduce their land-based ICBM missiles. They would keep the MX production line open to provide a viable incentive for Soviet agreement to restrain their offensive missile buildup. They would continue to rely on the U.S. nuclear deterrent—that is our country's nuclear retaliatory capability—to make it clear to the U.S.S.R. that any attack on the United States would provoke a retaliation that would exact an unacceptable price from the U.S.S.R. in nuclear devastation.

Now let us face it, Mr. President. This package might be viewed by some in the arms control community as an attempt to kill the remarkable series of arms control initiatives put together in the House Armed Services authorization bill that passed the House last month by a smashing 60-vote margin. That measure was the stuff that all-out arms control advocates dream of. It would cut off funds for 1 year for nuclear weapons testing above 1 kiloton.

The House bill also cut appropriations for SDI to a bare 3-percent increase. It stopped funding of weapons deployment that would violate the SALT II treaty. The House also deleted funding for antisatellite tests and for the buildup of new chemical warfare supplies. The Senate Armed Services authorization bill carries none of these limitations.

The proposals by the six wise men could constitute a reasonable basis for compromise. Many in the arms control community would be disappointed. Many in the administration would be disappointed. But arms control would still be alive. And the national security would be advanced.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Frank Aukofer in the August 31 edition of the Milwaukee Journal on the subject be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Aug. 31, 1986]

EX-OFFICIALS DEVISE A NUCLEAR STRATEGY

(By Frank A. Aukofer)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—In a rare display of bipartisan harmony, five former high ranking defense and foreign policy officials, including Wisconsin's Melvin R. Laird, have proposed a comprehensive new nuclear arms-control strategy for the United States.

Among other things, it advocates continued research and technological development of President Reagan's space-based defense system, popularly known as "Star Wars," but also says the US should seek an agreement with the Soviet Union that would bar testing of space-based weapons for up to 10 years.

In addition, the group's proposal calls for preservation of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty between the US and the Soviet Union, and says the US should continue to honor the limits on long-range nuclear weapons in SALT II, the 1979 strategic arms limitation treaty. Salt II was never ratified by the Senate but both the US and the Soviets have honored its provisions. However, Reagan has announced that the US will stop complying later this year.

Because it represents a consensus from a disparate group, the proposal by the former policymakers has the potential to win the support of both Reagan and Congress, who have been at odds on some of the issues, according to Laird.

Laird, a former Republican member of Congress from Wisconsin and defense secretary under President Richard Nixon, said in an interview that the participants had not planned to make their proposals public. He said they had hoped to win support quietly from congressional leaders and administration officials. The group already has briefed leading members of Congress, arms control officials and Secretary of State George Shultz.

Besides Laird, the group included Cyrus R. Vance, secretary of state under President Jimmy Carter; Brent Scowcroft, national security adviser to President Gerald Ford; Harold Brown, Carter's defense secretary; Robert C. McFarlane, former national security adviser to President Reagan, and James R. Schlesinger, who served as defense secretary under Nixon and Ford, and energy secretary under Carter.

Although McFarlane participated in the discussions and supported the group's positions, Laird said he did not sign the final 3,500-word document because he had only recently left the Reagan administration.

Laird described the group's work as a remarkable exercise in compromise, with each member giving a little. For example, he said that Vance had never before supported Star Wars, Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

"Reagan is talking about an increase of 75% in SDI spending in the next few years," Laird said. "When we started out, Vance wanted no SDI at all. I wanted a 25% increase, but only in research and development. When we finally worked it out, Vance had gone for an increase, but not as big as I wanted. We all agreed 10% would be adequate to fund essential research and development."

Laird said the impetus for the group's work came from members of Congress, particularly Senators Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) and John Warner (R-Va.), who were concerned about the current lack of a bipartisan approach toward arms production and control. Nunn is the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee and Warner, a former secretary of the Navy, is chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Strategic and Theater Nuclear Forces. Rep. Les Aspin (D-Wis.), chairman of the House Armed Service Committee, also was involved, according to Laird.

Laird said there was concern over the rift between the Defense Department and Congress. He did not directly criticize Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, but a House Armed Services Committee staff member said Weinberger had annoyed even Republican members by "asking for the world" and refusing to compromise on the Pentagon's budget requests.

"We've come to the point in national security where we have to return to some types of leadership that are more bipartisan or this whole defense thing will go down the drain," Laird said.

"When I was over there [as defense secretary], I worked very closely with Congress and never lost a vote. But you have to be in a position where you're willing to accommodate some of their positions. They're just as important as the executive branch."

Besides their compromise positions on the arms treaties and the SDI, Laird and the other former policymakers supported a low rate of production of the MX missile, with the numbers determined by how much the Soviet Union was willing to reduce its arsenal of land-based missiles. At a mimimum, they said, "US leverage should be maintained by keeping open a [MX] production line."

Despite their support for continued "Star Wars" research, the former policymakers advocated continued reliance on the threat of retaliation as a deterrent to nuclear attack.

"The overall purpose," they said, "is to convince the Soviets that, whatever the situation, they would be worse off if they initiated a strategic nuclear exchange than if they did not, because US forces would not be greatly degraded by a pre-emptive attack . . . The US retaliation would cost the Soviet Union much more than it could possibly gain."

The policy proposals could have an impact on the coming debate over the Pentagon's 1987 budget. The House has passed an authorization bill that contains a number of arms-control amendments, including a one-year ban on underground tests of nuclear weapons over one kiloton; an extension of a moratorium on tests of antisatellite weapons in space; a one-year delay in the production of new chemical weapons; and a provision requiring adherence to the SALT II treaty.

None of those provisions is in the bill passed by the Senate. As a result, Laird predicted that there would be no compromise between Senate and House negotiators, and that Congress would have to pass a continuing resolution to keep the Pentagon operating.

However, advocates of the arms-control amendments are expected to try to attach the amendments to any and all legislation involving defense spending.

DEFENSE INFLATION—THE $50 BILLION MISTAKE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the way the Defense Department budgets for inflation has become a $50-billion mistake.

In response to my request, GAO has revised its estimate of "inflation dividends" within the Department of Defense Budget. The revised estimates show the Pentagon received $46.8 billion since 1982 to cover expected inflation that never occurred. This does not include an amount for excess inflation in the fuel account which was estimated by GAO at $5 billion in May 1986.

This is GAO's third and largest estimate of the "inflation dividend" in the past year, and it is a whopper.

The figure is based on the difference between the amount appropriated by Congress to the Pentagon for inflation and the inflation rate that actually occurred.

I intend to present this report at the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee markup and press for action that will put a stop to these excesses.

The inflation dividend estimated by GAO includes procurement, operations and maintenance, and R&D, but excludes fuel.

If fuel is included, the excess defense appropriations would be as much as $10 billion greater, or approximately $56 billion.

Included in GAO's estimate is $3.5 billion for fiscal year 1987; an amount that differs from the $900 million estimated by the Congressional Budget Office. GAO says CBO's estimate is low because that office assumed inflation will be higher in the next few years than the rates projected by the administration.

The fact that the Pentagon and the administration overestimates the amount it needs for inflation year after year demonstrates that the procedures being followed are fundamentally flawed.

In candor, it should be acknowledged that Congress is as much at fault for this problem as the Pentagon and the administration. We have known since at least 1985, when the problem first surfaced, that we were appropriating billions of dollars for defense inflation that does not exist. We have failed since that time to take any remedial actions to prevent the problem from recurring.

Congress needs to take two steps. It should require the Pentagon to make it clear how much is being requested for inflation in its budget, account by account. This will make it possible to examine the budget proposal and determine whether inflation assumptions are reasonable.

Congress should also require that any excess inflation funds at the end of the year be returned to the Treasury.

In the seventies, when inflation was underestimated, the Congress promptly passed a supplemental appropriations to make up the difference.

At present, GAO, the Pentagon, and several committees of Congress cannot agree on how much excess inflation funds were appropriated or what happened to the money.

This is bizarre. The way to stop it is to set up a system where money is earmarked for inflation and if it is not spent it automatically lapses.

I request unanimous consent that the report from the General Accounting Office dated September 5, 1986, be inserted in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1986.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
Joint Economic Committee, Congress of the United States.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: On August 7, 1986, your office requested that we provide you with our latest estimates of inflation dividends within the Department of Defense (DOD) budget. We have reestimated the total of the inflation dividend, excluding fuel, which DOD has received since 1982, and we have identified possible reductions in DOD funding related to inflation adjustments.

Our latest estimate shows $46.8 billion in inflation dividends between 1982 and 1987. This estimate uses the projections of inflation used by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for the August 1986 Mid-Session Review of the 1987 budget. The amount is $7.4 billion greater than the amount reported in Potential for Excess Funds in DOD-March 1986 Update (GAO/NSIAD-86-76). Changes in inflation funding for the DOD fiscal year 1987 budget have occurred since the budget was submitted in February 1986. The fiscal year 1987 budget includes $3.5 billion which may be considered for potential reduction. Enclosure I provides additional information regarding our estimates of DOD's inflation dividend.

Of the remaining $3.9 billion of the updated inflation dividend, some of this amount is in prior year funds and has already been obligated. We have calculated the new dividend on the unobligated balances of prior year funds as of October 1, 1986. The potential reductions are $0.5 billion for fiscal year 1985 and $1.1 billion for fiscal year 1986. We have reviewed DOD's projected unobligated balances as of October 1, 1986 and believe they are underestimated. Therefore, the potential non-fuel inflation savings on unobligated balances may be higher.

Enclosure II shows inflation dividends by account for the 1987 budget request and for unobligated balances for fiscal years 1985 and 1986. We have not calculated an inflation dividend for fuel because we were not able to determine for fiscal years 1986 or 1987 the extent of short-term repricing flexibility for these procurements. We also have not included an adjustment for pay because escalation amounts for pay increases are not included in the budget request.

In recent testimony, CBO reported that it estimated a $900 million inflation dividend in DOD's 1987 budget. This contrasts to the $3.5 billion estimate based on inflation projections used in OMB's August 1986 Mid-Session Review. CBO used significantly higher inflation indices than OMB projects for fiscal years 1988 through 1992. The higher estimates for outyears affect the estimation of the fiscal year 1987 inflation adjustment because the funds appropriated in fiscal year 1987 may not actually be spent until some future year. In addition, CBO did not use the same deflator or outlay rates which DOD used in preparing the fiscal year 1987 budget which also reduced its estimate of the inflation dividend.

We discussed our inflation calculations with the Deputy Director, Plans and Systems, Office of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, Program/Budget, who is responsible for inflation adjustments. He agreed with the procedures we used to derive the amounts.

We hope that the enclosed information will be of use to you in your deliberations on the fiscal year 1987 budget. If we can be of further assistance, please call Bill McNaught on 275-4206 or Joan Hawkins on 557-1480.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK C. CONAHAN,
Assistant Comptroller General.

DOD'S INFLATION DIVIDENDS

We have issued three previous reports on the topic of inflation dividends in the defense budget.[1] In these reports, we defined the inflation dividend as the amount of excess funds received by DOD due to overestimation of future inflation in developing defense budget requests. A full description of our methodology for estimating the inflation dividend can be found in Appendix VI of our September 1985 report and in Appendix I of our March 1986 report.

In this report, we update our estimate of the inflation dividend to include the Auguest 1986 OMB forecast of inflation. Our latest estimate shows the total amount of this inflation dividend to be $46.84 billion. This does not include any inflation dividend received in the purchases of fuel. It does include an inflation dividend received in the purchase of nonfuel, nonpay items (purchase dividend) and an inflation dividend received because a special multiplier was used to calculate weapons system inflation in the fiscal year 1983 through 1986 budgets (multiplier dividend). The table below shows the inflation dividend by fiscal year.

[1] Potential for Excess Funds in DOD (GAO/NSIAD-85-145) September 1985, Potential for Excess Funds in DOD—March 1986 Update (GAO/NSIAD-86-76) March 1986, and Budgeting for Inflation in DOD Purchases of Petroleum Products (GAO/NSIAD-86-125) May 1986.

ESTIMATED INFLATION DIVIDEND BY FISCAL YEAR AND SOURCE OF DIVIDEND

[In billions of dollars]

	Purchases dividend	Multiplier dividend	Total dividend
Fiscal year:
1983	7.330	4.117	111.447
1984	6.035	3.457	9.552
1985	5.772	3.336	9.108
1986	4.400	3.117	7.517
Total	32.657	14.117	46.894

Our estimate of the size of the inflation dividend has increased by nearly $15 billion since our first estimate in September 1985. Of this amount, $11 billion occurs because we have added inflation dividends for fiscal year 1986 and 1987 to the original September 1985 estimate. The remainder of the increase occurs because of continued declines in anticipated inflation. The table below shows the growth in the inflation dividend over the past year. There is no change in our estimate of the amount of the dividend accruing due to the use of a special multiplier for weapons system inflation because no special multiplier was included in the fiscal year 1987 budget request.

DRUG TESTING: AN IDEA WHOSE TIME HAS COME

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, thus far, I have delivered over 230 different speeches on a daily basis on the subject of drugs. I would like to state for the public record that there is no magic bullet in the war on drugs. There is a combination of many items we are talking about today—education, eradication, enforcement, and interdiction.

Mr. President, drug testing is an idea whose time has come, in Government and in the private workplace. President Reagan in August called for mandatory drug testing for Federal employees in sensitive positions. Attorney General Edwin Meese proposed that drug tests be made compulsory for half of the Nation's Federal workers.

The Chief of the Federal Aviation Agency, Donald Engen, said he thinks all air traffic controllers, and any FAA employee who flies in an airplane, who works on aircraft or inspects them for air worthiness should be tested for drugs.

In the private sector, many companies already test their employees and many other firms are planning to begin testing new employees. General Electric Co., has announced it will start testing job applicants on October 1. Eastman Kodak plans to test successful job applicants, beginning in mid-October. Kodak will continue the practice of testing current employees when they have reason to believe it would be prudent to do so.

Some of the corporate giants that now have testing programs are IBM, Alcoa, Boise-Cascade, Ford Motor Co., American Airlines and the New York Times. In fact, 26 percent of the Fortune 500 companies have some kind of drug testing procedure in place and 20 percent plan to start drug testing programs within 2 years. This is a far cry from the 5 percent of the leading business organizations who bothered with drug testing in 1982.

What business is doing is simply facing up to the fact that our Nation is awash in drugs and that drugs are bad for business. According to the National Institute for Drug Abuse, drug users are 28 percent less productive than nonusers, and they are three times as likely as nonusers to injure themselves or their coworkers on the job.

Blue collar workers and white collar workers alike are involved. The office boy, the secretary, the computer operator, the assembly line worker and the corporate executive are all threatened by the drug temptation. Stock exchanges and brokerage houses have found that an alarming number of their employees are drug users.

Workers at financial institutions operate under great stress and must make on-the-spot decisions involving thousands, and sometimes millions, of dollars. But accuracy and honesty are demanded of this kind of specialized worker as well as speed and sound judgment. Employees have concluded there is no room in their business for drug abusers.

Many hospitals have begun testing their new employees to insure a drug free environment. Some hospitals test doctors starting their internships. Two of the Nation's largest pharmaceutical companies—Merck and Hoffman-Laroche—test new employees for drugs.

Peter Bensinger—who headed the Federal Drug Administration in its early days—predicts a sharp increase in the number of companies that test employees for drugs. Mr. Bensinger says this will be particularly true in financial, transportation, manufacturing, service and construction firms. He says further that many of the companies that require tests for only new employees now will expand their testing program to include regular workers.

There are those who still raise a hue and cry about compromising individual rights and personal liberties. They are mistaken. Rights are not compromised by highway speed limits or age limitations on drinking alcohol. Neither are fundamental liberties sacrifices by drug testing. We are not finding to fire but finding to help. I applaud those companies, organizations and governmental bodies which are employing drug testing to help fight the insidious drug menace that threatens to engulf us all.

MAJOR DRUG DEALER PENALTIES ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1986

Mr. TRIBLE. Madam President, on this day I offer two bills that I commend to the attention of my colleagues as part of our comprehensive response to the menace of drugs in our society.

As a former State and Federal prosecutor, I believe strongly in the value of punishment and deterrence. I believe it is time to make harsher penalties available for a growing and deadly crime—the large-scale distribution of illicit drugs. To that end, I am offering legislation to provide for life imprisonment without possibility of parole for major drug traffickers. This bill will also raise the fines applicable to such crimes so that they more accurately reflect the huge amounts of money involved in the drug trade.

Simply put, the benefits of drug trafficking appear to far exceed the risk imposed by society. One transaction will produce millions of dollars in profit, yet the likelihood of arrest, conviction, and punishment is slight.

It is time for more vigorous law enforcement and it is time for tough penalties that will put major traffickers out of business forever.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2801

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Major Drug Dealer Penalties Enhancement Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. ENHANCEMENT OF CRIMINAL FINES

Section 408(a) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848(a)) is amended as follows—

(a) by striking out the phrase "to a fine of not more than $100,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if the defendant is an individual or not more than $4,000,000 if the defendant is other than an individual," and

(b) by striking out the phrase "to a fine of not more than $200,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if the defendant is an individual or not more than $8,000,000 if the defendant is other than an individual,".

SEC. 3. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act is amended as follows:

(a) by inserting the following new subsection after subsection (a):

"(b) Any person who engages in a continuing criminal enterprise shall be sentenced to life imprisonment without possibility of parole if such person is the principal director, organizer, manager, or sponsor of the enterprise, and—

(1) the enterprise results in the death of any individual other than a participant in the enterprise; or

(2) the enterprise earned $1 million in gross revenues during any twelve-month period from the manufacture, importation, or distribution of a substance described in section 401(b)(1)(A) of this Act; or

(3) the offense referred to in subsection (c) involved at least 100 times the amount of a substance described in section 401(b)(1)(A) of this Act.

Such person shall not be granted a suspended or probationary sentence and shall not be eligible for parole with respect to such violation; provided that no person who was less than eighteen years of age at the time of the offense may be sentenced under this section to life imprisonment without possibility of parole."

(b) by redesignating the present subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(c) by redesignating the present subsection (c) as subsection (d).

DRUG MONEY LAUNDERING PREVENTION ACT OF 1986

Mr. TRIBLE. Madam President, I am also introducing legislation today aimed at breaking the vital economic link in the international drug chain—the laundering of profits from the production and sale of illicit drugs.

This legislation will prohibit foreign assistance to those nations that refuse to prevent and punish the laundering of drug related profits. It also requires that the international narcotics control strategy report identify those nations that are significant centers of drug money laundering, and report on the efforts those nations are making to eliminate laundering activities within their territory. I am pleased that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator LUGAR, has joined me as a cosponsor of this legislation.

Today, Federal law has prohibited foreign assistance to nations that fail to prevent drug cultivation and trafficking in their territory. This lever over foreign nations has proved tremendously effective. I believe we must adopt the same approach with respect to drug money laundering activities.

The methods by which drug runners conceal their illicit profits and reinvest them in the drug trade are a vital part of the overall drug problem. The Senate recognized this reality when it voted 98–0 recently for a bill making willful laundering of profits from criminal enterprises a Federal offense.

Surely we must also attack this problem on an international scale. It is no secret that many countries are havens for drug money launderers. Nations with strict bank secrecy laws attract laundering operations because there is little or no risk of their being caught. Panama, Columbia, Mexico, and Hong Kong are among the world's principle laundering centers. Earlier this year, for example, the State Department testified that Panama is "virtually made to order" for laundering U.S. currency. The Treasury Department estimates that up to $600 million may be laundered every year through Panama alone.

Madam President, America's war on drugs can and must be won. However, as long as larger amounts of cash abound in the drug trade, our efforts to wipe out crops or stop the distribution of deadly drugs to our children will not succeed.

That is why this legislation is essential to our success. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this time and urge my colleagues to support those initiatives.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2802

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 481 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 is amended—

(1) in the text of subsection (h)(1) above clause (A), by inserting after "United States" where it appears at the end of that text the following: ", or if the President determines that a country has failed to take adequate steps to prevent and punish the laundering in that country of drug-related profits or drug-related monies";

(2) in subsection (h)(2)—

(A) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (2)(A); and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The President shall also consider whether such government has taken the legal and law enforcement steps necessary to eliminate, to the maximum extent possible, the laundering in the country of drug-related profits or drug-related monies, as evidenced by the anactment and enforcement of laws prohibiting such conduct, the willingness of such government to enter into mutual legal assistance agreements with the United States governing money laundering, and the degree to which such government otherwise cooperates with United States law enforcement authorities on anti-money laundering efforts.".

(3) in clause (B) of subsection (h)(3), by inserting after "controlled substances" the following: ", or to enforce prohibitions on the laundering in that country of drug-related profits or drug-related monies"; and

(4) by adding at the end of subsection (e) following new paragraph:

"(6) Each report pursuant to this subsection shall identify those countries which are significant centers of drug-money laundering and shall contain a description of the plans, programs, and timetables adopted by such country for the deterrence, prevention, and punishment of acts involving the laundering of drug-related profits and drug-related monies in that country and a discussion of the adequacy of the legal and law enforcement measures taken and the accomplishments achieved in accordance with these plans.".

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEVIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

TAX REFORM

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, the American people have learned a lot about economics in the past decade. They have, for example, watched in wonder as the administration muttered the incantation of "altered expectations" in an effort to get a combination of tax cuts and huge defense spending increases to add up to a balanced budget. People were moved by the ritual, but they saw that the magic did not work.

And so, when people were shown tax reform, the latest magic offering, they were willing to see through the illusion. They recognize that all the talk about revenue neutrality and tax cuts for middle-income Americans and true equity is a sidewalk spiel designed to lure them into thinking that there is a free lunch out there. And they know better.

According to the polls, only 25 percent of the people think their taxes will go down if the conference report is adopted; a full 36 percent think their taxes will go up.

The American people are clearly skeptical—and they are right. Twenty percent of all middle-income Americans get a tax increase in this bill. And the rest of us will pay more because of this bill. It is that concept of paying more—of the hidden costs of the tax bill—which I want to explore today. Specifically I want to look at those hidden costs which we will have to pay as individuals and those hidden costs which we will have to pay as a society.

The winners and losers calculations which have been issued by the joint committee are an attempt to create an on-balance, net assessment of the impact of tax reform on individuals. That is the calculation which indicates that 20 percent of all middle-income taxpayers are net losers. And that is just the initial loss: in reality, even more people will pay more.

In computing the net tax cut, we must subtract more than the cost to individuals of eliminating specific tax breaks; we must also subtract any cost increases which will be passed on to us as a direct result of the tax plan. And there are a lot of them. Let us look at some.

First, we should remember that the individual tax cuts are financed largely by business tax increases—roughly $124 billion worth. Now it was just a few years ago that the President confessed that he was tempted to try to eliminate business taxes altogether because, as he explained, businesses don't pay taxes, people do. The President overstated the case, but it is clear that businesses do not automatically swallow the increased costs created by increased taxes; they try to pass those costs through to consumers in the form of higher prices. Of course, not all the costs can be passed through—competitive pressures, among other factors, prevent that. But a substantial percentage can be. And that percentage should be subtracted from any individual after-tax savings created by this tax bill.

That subtraction, however, will not be equally distributed throughout the economy. For those lower- and middle-income Americans who get tax cuts in the $200 to $400 range, the increased consumer costs will take a larger bit out of their newfound wealth than they will for the richest among us—those making over $200,000—half of whom will get a tax cut averaging $25,000 or so.

Second, if someone wants to send their children to college, their costs may increase because of this bill. Tuition costs may go up as a result of the way this bill treats charitable contributions. Gifts of appreciated property—which help many colleges and universities keep tuition down—will only be partially deductible. As a result, colleges expect a decrease in those contributions. Nonitemizers—and remember, this new simplified code is supposed to increase the number of nonitemizers—are also expected to decrease their level of giving since their contributions are no longer deductible. The net result: higher tuition as higher education scrambles to cover its costs.

Third, consider the plight of the renter. We have all heard about how the bill hits the real estate industry, and to the degree that is true, it also gets to renters. Construction of rental units is expected to decline, rents are expected to increase. That increase will have to be subtracted from the tax cut some get in this bill.

Finally, State and local taxes may increase. To begin with, if State income taxes are linked to the Federal tax base—as most are—this bill has the effect of increasing the amount of money States collect unless State income tax rates are reduced to avoid a windfall. Beyond that, a revenue-neutral tax bill does nothing to reduce the Federal deficit. Since we are legally obligated by Gramm-Rudman to reduce the deficit, we may end up slashing programs—including programs which provide assistance to State and local governments. Those governments will either reduce their service levels or try to raise more revenue. Either way, individual taxpayes will suffer, and ultimately, they will pay.

In those and a number of other ways, this bill has hidden costs for us as individuals. But it also affects us as a society. Let me give you an example.

We have spent a lot of time bemoaning the trade deficit that we face. One of the reasons we face it is that other countries give direct subsidies to their industries. In the face of a growing trade deficit, it does not make sense to take away the limited support we do give to our companies through the Tax Code.

Why cut back on the investment tax credit when we so desperately need new investment? Why reduce the research and development credit when we are starting to lag behind our competitors in innovative technology? We are placing American industry at a competitive disadvantage. Ultimately, that may place American workers in unemployment lines.

Consider a final brief illustration of the social costs involved in the bill. I have already mentioned the expected reduction in charitable giving in connection with college costs. But, obviously, the same problem impacts on other nonprofit charitable institutions ranging from hospitals to art museums. The expectation is that the charitable contributions which all of them depend on will decline. As one observer indicated, "I don't think people give because of tax breaks, [but] I think they give more because of tax breaks." If those tax breaks are reduced and the giving declines, then those institutions will either cut back on their operations or increase their fees. When that happens, society suffers—we become less healthy, less culturally enriched, less able to care for each other, and less capable of taking care of our heritage as human beings. That is not a cost I can quantify in economic terms, but it is a social cost we should not be asked to pay.

Those are just some of the hidden costs of this bill. Taxpayers—our constituents—will find them in the months and years ahead. When they do, they are going to ask just why we did it. Why did we engage—why are we engaging—in this elaborate charade of giving with one hand while creating a situation in which someone else will take with the other? The time is short and the pressure may seem great, but we still have a chance to prove that we have learned as much as the people have over the past few years. We can decline this latest invitation to try to secure the financial future of our constituents and our country with magic and myth.

We know there are no free lunches; now we have to determine if we are willing to pay the real price for the fast-food meal we are being served in this bill.

Madam President, I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHILES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the Chair.

THE COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, the American people have acknowledged that drugs have become one of our major problems. Drugs are associated with growing health and treatment problems and they are certainly linked with terrorist and insurgent groups. As the Chair knows so well, drugs are a major problem in our schools. Certainly, they are destroying our neighborhoods.

As the police commissioner, Benjamin Ward, of New York City, describes it, the crime problem in this country is the drug problem.

In an effort to speak to this problem, yesterday, the Democratic task force, in connection with all of the Democratic Members of the Senate, introduced the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986.

Basically, we were trying to address the entire drug problem that we now see confronting us. Much of that problem has been magnified and come to our attention because of the deluge we have seen of crack-cocaine in this country. It has hit us like a tidal wave. I think it has made us look at the programs we have been perpetuating and assess whether they are working or not.

We are attempting in this package to provide for effective programs. As you know, today, we are spending considerable money in enforcement; yet somehow, we have more cocaine in this country than we have ever had before. The price is lower than it has been, approximately 50 percent lower than it was in January of this year. So we have not been able to claim success in interdiction but we wonder what the availability would be if our borders were entirely defenseless.

Our package addresses the compound needs associated with drug trafficking and abuse. The package authorizes $1.65 billion in enforcement, interdiction, eradication, research, treatment, and education programs.

With mandatory sentences up to life imprisonment and fines up to $10 million for drug syndicates, the Democratic bill toughens laws against drug traffickers with the most stringent penalties and fines aimed at large volume traffickers and drug syndicates with their huge financial assets. The bill recognizes the dangerous effects of newer street drugs like "crack" and designer drugs by listing them under the Controlled Substances Act and decreasing the amounts necessary for enhanced penalties and fines.

The bill provides for double penalties for those who employ children in illegal drug enterprises and manufacture narcotics within 1,000 feet of schools.

A new criminal offense is authorized for those who launder funds with penalties up to 20 years and fines as high as $250,000 or twice the amount of the transaction.

We are trying to provide some funds for State and local assistance. Specifically now, we are finding that our local police and our State agencies are simply overwhelmed with what is happening because of the crack invasion. Many of them have put on additional officers, spending additional resources, but still they find they are in a plight. It is not a local crime. It is an invasion. In my State, for example, much of it is perpetrated by illegal aliens. They may be from Colombia, they may be Marielitos, they may be Haitians. They are in this country illegally to start with, and then they are perpetrating these crimes. As we arrest these people, they give false names, they jump and go to the next city where again they are carrying out the same activities, so we are trying to provide assistance to local and State enforcement agencies against such felons who have made crime rates increase dramatically. Again, we are only talking about matching new dollars that State and locals will be putting up. This is not a new revenue-sharing program for local police to help them with their budgets. This is directed at helping them with this drug invasion.

To strengthen the legal system enforcing these penalties, the bill adds $1.3 billion for additional Federal prisons over the next 3 years and provides for $125 million to State and local law enforcement agencies for drug enforcement activities. In addition, the legislation directs the President to provide for military sites which can be used to detain felons, especially those who are a Federal responsibility such as illegal alien felons and major drug traffickers.

The Democrats double the amount of Federal dollars for interdiction programs by the Customs Service, Coast Guard, and other armed services. Included in the expanded efforts are a new United States-Bahamian Drug Task Force, an all-source intelligence center to provide information to all drug enforcement agencies, support under DOD for two long-range surveillance aircraft in the Caribbean and authority for DOD to loan equipment to drug enforcement agencies.

The State Department's International Narcotics Matter Bureau is provided with additional funds for eradication and a new "buffer fund" of $35 million for use in narcotics control upon submission of a plan by the President. In addition, the bill tightens immigration processing of suspected drug traffickers and requires an information system for U.S. Embassies to use in denying visas to such persons.

The bill recognizes the inadequacies of the existing $3 million program in drug education and commits $150 million for new education programs with a $125 million grant program for States and local districts which develop a K–12 comprehensive drug program and $25 million for five regional centers to provide necessary training and education of school administrators and teachers. The Secretary of Education is directed to provide all school districts by October 6 with information on drug abuse with a special emphasis on crack and its lethal nature and potential harm for children whom drug dealers prey on as customers and dealers. October 6 has been designated as National Drug Abuse Education Day based on a resolution authorized by the Senate Democratic Drug Task Force and passed by the Congress.

Noting the most obvious gap in current drug policy, the Democratic package provides for $394 million for drug abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation grants to States. In addition, the legislation directs more emphasis within the Department of Health and Human Services and the National Institute on Drug Abuse to conduct extended research on drug abuse and treatment methods and provide more information to practitioners as well as the public on specific drugs and their impacts and treatments.

Finally, realizing the need to better coordinate and implement Federal efforts in drug programs, the bill creates a new Cabinet-level official to be responsible for overseeing all drug programs and developing a long-range strategy for both domestic and international drug policy. We have the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing. So we are calling for an Office of National and International Drug Operations Policy. As such, we are trying to create a Cabinet-level Director to coordinate the Federal drug control policy. That Director's authority and responsibility would be analogous to that exercise by the Director of Central Intelligence over U.S. intelligence policy. The Director would be responsible for developing comprehensive and long-range strategy on drug control, both domestically and abroad.

In effect, Madam President, we are talking about creating a drug czar who would operate directly under the President, who would have the authority to coordinate and bring into a close working group all of the different areas and agencies that are responsible for drug programs.

Also, we would ask that the President convene a White House Conference on Narcotics Abuse and Control within 6 months of the enactment of the bill. We know the power of the Presidency. We know certainly the power of this President. We know his concern and that of Mrs. Reagan with regard to this scourge due to drugs. We are asking the President to use that power to call this White House conference.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, I notice my time has expired. I urge my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to join the sponsors of this comprehensive bill in seeking a new and better drug policy. There are other Senators here who are looking forward to speaking on this provision. I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CRANSTON

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. CRANSTON. Madam President, I join with my colleagues from the Democratic Task Force on Narcotics in making a steadfast commitment toward a drug-free America. The bill we have introduced, S. 2798, is a comprehensive approach to the menace of drugs. The drug problem can no longer be characterized as an urban one. Drug abuse and the consequent need for increased drug enforcement is a problem in small towns and rural areas as well as cities.

Our goal must be drug-free families, drug-free schools, drug-free communities, and a drug-free nation.

California's drug problems are more severe, and probably more complex, than those anywhere else in the United States. With its homemade drug laboratories and secluded hills and valleys, California has unfortunately become the industrial capital of America's illegal narcotics manufacturers; and California's ports and border make the State one of the largest entry points for foreign drugs.

We must attack the drug menace through eradication, interdiction, law enforcement, and education. Specifically, we must work with other nations and within our own country to eradicate drugs where they are produced. We must interdict drugs at the border before they penetrate our country. We must arrest the sellers through effective law enforcement, incarcerating the suppliers, and we must educate to lessen the demand, to destroy the market.

This bill provides the resources for increased manpower and equipment to halt the menace of drug trafficking. It also takes the first major step toward quelling America's growing lust for illegal narcotics. Last year, the head of the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency [DEA], John Lawn, said in an interview that—

> The problem is greater than law enforcement is able to cope with * * * we've got to put more emphasis on the demand side on education.

We need to address the demand for drugs effectively.

Customs agents all have made literally hundreds of thousands of drug arrests in the last several years, hundreds of thousands in California alone.

Attorney General John Van De Kamp, of California, has reported that State and local law enforcement officials make over 50,000 drug arrests each year.

Congress has even provided military helicopters and boats to help DEA agents capture smugglers who carry cocaine, heroin, and marijuana from South America and the Far East.

But despite many heroic efforts, and hundreds of millions of dollars, they are fighting a losing battle. Coca production in Peru, Colombia, Brazil, and Ecuador has increased, and the number of cocaine labs in the United States has tripled in the last 4 years. In the last 2 years alone, at least 75 tons of cocaine have been sold in America.

Drugs are flooding our neighborhoods and our schools faster than law enforcement people can confiscate them. The reason is demand.

Demand for drugs in this country is so high that it's worth whatever the risks for drug smugglers and illegal drug makers to sell their poisons.

The illegal drug business is a seller's market. Yet, less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the DEA's budget is spent for drug education and prevention, just $100,000 out of a $363 million budget. Less than 1 percent of the Education Department's $18 billion budget is spent for teaching kids how to say no to drugs. In fact, the Federal Government is now spending less on drug education and prevention than we did 6 years ago—even though the Nation's drug problems are worse.

This bill not only clamps down on suppliers, it begins to halt the insatiable demand for drugs. This bill will help States establish and expand their school-based drug abuse prevention programs.

It will provide vital assistance to communities that want to become actively involved in educating young people about the dangers of cocaine.

This bill is the beginning of a national initiative—because cocaine and other illicit drugs constitute a national disaster. But the programs the bill creates will be local. It provides the opportunity for communities and individuals—parents, teachers, coaches, local celebrities, business leaders—to join hands in the effort to help stop the drug epidemic.

Because the security of our families, our neighborhoods, and our Nation are all at stake, action on this legislation cannot come soon enough. I urge all my colleagues to recognize the urgent need for adoption of this legislation and lend it their full support so it can be enacted before next month's sine die adjournment.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ROCKEFELLER

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAXALT). Under the previous order, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, yesterday I joined a number of my colleagues in introducing the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986, which proposes to wage a major battle against America's drug problem. I sincerely hope that the rest of the Senate, and the President, will help to secure the passage of this bill in the next several weeks.

A recent poll by the New York Times and CBS reported that the American people regard drugs as the country's No. 1 problem, and that they believe education must be a significant part of the effort to fight drug abuse. I have just spent a week meeting with constituents througout my State of West Virginia, and heard this over and over again. Everyone I talked to—parents, grandparents, school principals, police officers—said the same thing: "We need help and resources to carry out effective drug education and prevention programs in our schools and communities." The public wants Congress to take immediate steps to combat drug abuse, especially through education aimed at young people.

Mr. President, a key provision of our legislation is the Student Drug Abuse Education and Prevention Act. We propose to set up a nationwide program to distribute $125 million annually to States for drug education and prevention in the schools. States would use 20 percent of the funds to develop model curriculum, to train teachers and other school personnel, and to provide additional services to communities and schools needed to carry out effective drug abuse programs. The remaining 80 percent of the funds would be allocated to school districts in need of financial assistance to incorporate drug education into their curriculum. Our legislation requires schools to involve parents, and to work closely with health agencies, law enforcement officials, and other professionals experienced in drug abuse.

The school year has begun. Once again, children and teenagers are facing peer pressure to experiment with drugs. Countless young people are getting hooked on alcohol, on marijuana, on cocaine, and other dangerous drugs. The Federal Government has to help. Many schools cannot afford to attack the problem—they need expert advice, training, and financial assistance to persuade their students to say no to drugs.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986. The American people have every right to expect Congress to put the drug problem at the top of our agenda. Before going back to our home States, we must act on the drug crisis. A battle on all fronts—education, law enforcement, eradication, interdiction, and treatment—must be fought and it must be won.

Mr. President, I particularly commend Senator CHILES from Florida and Senator BIDEN from Delaware for their outstanding leadership on this task force which ended up yesterday in the introduction of the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986. I very sincerely hope the Senate as a whole and the President will work toward securing passage of this bill during the course of the next several weeks.

During this past recess, I was back in West Virginia and I cannot tell you, Mr. President, how many people came up to me—parents, law enforcement officers, teachers—and simply said that they understood how bad the problem was in the New York Cities and Los Angeleses and Chicagos and other places but they hoped that we understand how difficult the problem also is in the rural parts of the United States of America. And that includes my home State of West Virginia. Crack is not as common in West Virginia as it is in some other places but we do have it in a number of our cities and that is a drug which is almost instantaneously addictive.

Another thing parents told me was that they understood they had a responsibility as parents and school systems and States had a fundamental responsibility, but that frankly they could not do it all by themselves; they needed to have the support and the help of the Federal Government. Mr. President, we are not really giving them that support up to this point. And that I think is what some of us want to see happen.

Part of the bill which we have introduced, Mr. President, has to do with education. I feel very strongly about that. Law enforcement people will tell you that whereas they hope that there will come a day when there is enough interdiction capacity and border capacity to stop the source of drugs, they know that fundamentally it has to be an American child's, American teenager's, American young person's willingness to say "no" to drugs, and that is going to come from two sources, from the home, from home and home values, and it is going to come from education.

Education has to take place in the schools, Mr. President, and that is one reason that part of this package is the Student Drug Abuse Education and Prevention Act. That is the education aspect of it.

In that part, we put $125 million into the distribution of money to our school system.

Mr. President, 20 percent of that would go to trying to find out what the best programs are in this country that work on drug education to train teachers and other personnel.

Let me give you an example. Massachusetts has first-rate education programs in its schools. Do those apply to a rural State like West Virginia? Where are the best rural programs in education that could be helpful to West Virginia? We do not really have any central collection body where this information becomes available to our people.

I want our school administrators from West Virginia to be able to know by going to a Federal source what are the best programs that are available to help us in West Virginia in terms of our drug problems.

Incidentally, it has to be something which works all the time. We are not talking about an occasional athlete coming in and talking to a high school assembly. We are talking about drug curriculum, in other words K through 12, every week of every month of every year of 12 years, all through high school, young people involved in drug curriculum education, so they know what the pharmacology of drugs are, what the drugs are, what the drugs do to their bodies and what drugs do to their minds, really, incremental long-term commitment to curriculum in high schools and public school systems so young people really know why it is they have to say "no" and they are educated as well as inspired to do that.

Twenty percent of the money would go to get what are the best programs, to develop the best programs if they do not exist. The rest of the money could go directly to the school districts so they could then take those best programs and put them to work on a continuing basis, kindergarten through 12th grade, week in and week out in the school system.

The problem is, Mr. President, the school systems do not have the money to do all of that now. For example, in West Virginia there is only 1 of our 55 counties which has a full-time drug coordinator, much less drug program or drug curriculum in our school system. So the school districts do need financial help, and 80 percent of the $125 million would go into that direct financial help to schools, but we would not give it to them continually for free.

Yes, in fiscal 1987 States would get 100 percent, but starting in fiscal 1988 States would have to pay more and by fiscal 1991 States would have to pay 25 percent of the cost.

In our legislation, Mr. President, we also require that schools involve parents, that they involve health agencies, that they involve law enforcement officials in this process.

Mr. President, the school year has begun. Once again children and teenagers are facing peer pressures with respect to drugs. It is a fact, Mr. President, that 50 percent of seventh graders, and seventh graders, mind you, say that they receive peer pressure to take drugs. So, therefore, a lot of people are now in the process of getting hooked on alcohol, on marijuana and on cocaine, and other dangerous drugs. The Federal Government, Mr. President, has to help in all of this.

Many schools cannot afford to attack the problem all by themselves. They need our help. We need to battle on all fronts: education, law enforcement, eradication, interdiction, and treatment, a battle which must be fought on all fronts and which must be won on all fronts.

I thank the Chair.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR DECONCINI

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I compliment the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER, for his participation in moving us in the direction that has been neglected for a long time, and that is education. Having been a prosecutor and involved in drug enforcement for a while, I think it is important that we not forget the fundamentals. I compliment the Senator for bringing this to the attention of all of us in this body and for his input in this effort that we introduced yesterday.

DEMOCRATIC NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, 47 Democrats, colleagues of mine, yesterday joined in the introduction of perhaps the most comprehensive omnibus drug enforcement bill in recent history. The Democratic bill calls for $1.65 billion in new spending for a series of important antidrug initiative, including $645.3 million for increased drug interdiction and the increased use of the military in our war on drugs. It is the interdiction and military components of the bill that I want to address today.

Mr. President, for many years I have said that in order to launch a comprehensive war against drugs we need to attack the problem on multiple fronts. We need to increase interdiction. We need to accelerate drug education and treatment. We need to attack the drug problem in source drug countries. We need to beef up penalties for major traffickers. We need to improve our drug intelligence and investigative capabilities. And we need central, independent coordination of our drug enforcement agencies. If we fail in one, the other elements suffer. But I firmly believe that interdiction must play the major role in any drug enforcement effort by this Nation.

Mr. President, the bill that we introduced yesterday contains a total of $645.3 million for increased drug interdiction, including an additional $317 million for the Department of Defense to turn over badly needed air interdiction resources to the U.S. Customs Service. The military must play a larger role in providing equipment, intelligence, and support for our civilian drug enforcement agencies and particularly to the primary air interdiction agency, the U.S. Customs Service. This bill expands the military role in our drug war in a responsible, cost-effective manner.

Our interdiction portion of the omnibus drug bill also provides increased funding for the Coast Guard and the Customs Service directly. It adds 969 new drug enforcement officers to the Customs Service and 1,520 additional positions for the U.S. Coast Guard—our primary drug interdiction agency on the high seas. The interdiction title of the bill also provides both agencies with additional drug interdiction equipment; radars; voice privacy capabilities; aircraft; interdiction vessels; and training that will finally give these two key agencies the weapons to compete head on with a well-financed drug menace. By providing an additional $162.3 million for Customs and $104 million for the Coast Guard, we are finally giving these two agencies a fighting chance against the narcotics trafficker.

Finally, this bill contains two major innovations that are important planks in our comprehensive drug interdiction platform. First, we establish a United States-Bahamas Drug Interdiction Task Force that will, for the first time in history, allow the Government of the Bahamas and our Government to fight side-by-side against the drug smuggler who uses the Bahamas as a major drug transshipment point for trafficking cocaine, marijuana, and other drugs. Unlike the situation with Mexico, the Government of the Bahamas has agreed to allow "hot pursuit" by U.S. Customs drug aircraft into Bahamian territory to participate in the arrest of airborne smugglers. They have agreed to joint drug interdiction operations. They have agreed to a tough new extradition treaty with our country. For these reasons, we must provide the resources to make this task force successful. The Democratic drug bill does exactly that.

The bill provides $25 million to begin to establish, for the first time, a broad network of command, control, communications, and intelligence [C-3I] center around the country that will serve to coordinate our national drug interdiction missions and operations.

These tactical intelligence centers will finally provide us with the technology necessary to truly launch all available interdiction assets against the drug smuggler from California to New York.

Mr. President, not everything that we need for a comprehensive interdiction program is contained in the Democratic bill. But when combined with what myself, and others, have already provided in the Department of Defense authorization bill, 1987 (S. 2638) and in appropriations bills that have been reported from our committee, we will have established the solid underpinnings of a real drug interdiction "army" that will serve this Nation well for the next decade. I am proud to have authored the interdiction portion of the Democratic Narcotics Control Act of 1986.

But I want to urge that this is not Democrat or Republican. This is a step forward. I understand and anticipate with great expectation that the Republican leadership will introduce a similar program either this week or next week. Senator D'AMATO and myself, along with Senator CHILES, Senator HAWKINS, Senator DIXON, Senator MURKOWSKI, and Senator WILSON introduced a massive drug proposal on August 15. The time is right.

Some might say, "Well, is it election time that has brought all of this about?" I do not care what has brought it all about. Some of us have stood here for years and years, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], who occupying the chair right now, has. And we know we have talked a lot and tried to get a lot of attention to various administrations and different agencies, and now it appears we have that attention.

We have an opportunity between now and the time of adjournment to do the first step toward the war.

I love quoting the chief of police of Los Angeles, Mr. Gates. When he was asked the question by Senator WILSON and myself in the hearings in Los Angeles, "Do we have a real war on drugs?" he said, "We have never had a war on drugs in this country."

He said:

> You politicians and perhaps some of us in law enforcement continuously talk about it, but we have never had a war on drugs because when you have a war you mobilize your country. You mobilize your military assets. You mobilize the civilian belief in the cause. You mobilize your civil resources in law enforcement and you have an objective and you go after it. We have yet to do that in this country.

So this may not really be a declaration of war, but at least it is putting together the pieces and the logistics that we can declare war. I am hopeful that the President will come forward with his program, which is badly needed, and will help. He can do so well to promote the education and enforcement and the public support for these antidrug programs.

I thank the Chair.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR DODD

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. DODD. Thank you, Mr. President.

THE COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, before proceeding with my own comments, let me join with my colleagues in commending Senator CHILES and Senator BIDEN; the leader, Senator BYRD, and others who have been so instrumental in trying to put together the package that has been alluded to by several of my colleagues, including, of course, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, Senator DECONCINI. I would point out to the Chair, that my colleague from Arizona has been involved in this issue for virtually his entire public career. Many people get involved in some of these issues, as they should, when they become important national questions. But others became involved in the days when you could not get two people from the press corps to listen to ideas of how to grapple with the drug problem. My colleague from Arizona is one of those leaders, so I want to commend him before he leaves the floor for his work in this area.

Mr. President, we have heard, of course, about all the various aspects of the legislation that was introduced yesterday. I am hopeful, as are all of us in this Chamber and in the other body, that we will have a Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act before we leave here at the end of September or early October. I think the iron is hot. The President certainly is deeply committed to this issue. And there is a bipartisan effort in this Chamber to come up with a sound and intelligent program that will marshal our resources well and not overpromise results to the American public.

I think we run a great risk, however, if we suggest we are going to solve this problem with just one bill. We make a mistake if we suggest we will take care of the drug abuse problem in this country by attaching x millions or billions to one bill. Because it is a long-term problem. And it is more properly termed a substance abuse problem.

We emphasize drugs or narcotics abuse, but we must not forget that alcohol abuse is also a major problem among younger people.

At any rate, the legislation proposed yesterday constitutes a good effort. It may be long overdue, but, nonetheless, I think it is only appropriate that we try to come to terms with this issue now.

Mr. President, I just want to focus, if I may on one aspect of the Comprehensive Nacrotics Control Act. My colleagues have spoken about education, interdiction, treatment, incarceration, several different penalties, and I support all those provisions in this legislation.

However, there is a group of young people in this country that are at far greater risk of substance abuse than others. I call these the high-risk youth, because the chances that they will abuse drugs or alcohol is so high it goes right off the charts. That is not to say, obviously, that you can point to a map of the country and say "there is the drug problem." You find a drug abuse problem in rural America and in our ghettos; on the farm and on Wall Street: it is right across the country.

But there is a particular group of younger people in this country that are at tremendous risk. Those are the children who have been the victims of physical, sexual, or psychological abuse. They are the runaways, the teenagers who drop out of school before getting a diploma, the unemployed youth, the teen parents or children who are the parents of children, the so-called juvenile delinquents, and the adolescents who attempt suicide. There are some 10 million children in this country who fall into those categories.

The likelihood that a child who has been physically or sexually abused, who drops out of school, who is unemployed, or who is the teenage parent of a child will become a drug or alcohol abuser is just so much greater than it is for other children without such problems. So it seems to me, in a time of limited resources, we ought to try and target some of our dollars on those groups we know are at the highest risk. And the children at greatest risk are those I have just described.

We have heard a great deal in the news lately about the victims of terrorists. Yesterday, properly so, the Senate passed a resolution condemning the terrorist attacks around the globe. These tragedies occur almost by the hour, it seems, on a daily basis. Certainly it is appropriate and proper that we condemn resoundingly such attacks.

But there is another form of terrorism and it is going on right here at home. Because high risk children are hundreds of times more likely to die or be disabled by drugs and alcohol than injured at the hands of terrorists.

High-risk youth are not abusing drugs in a vacuum. Until we solve some of the underlying problems behind their predicament, I think we are condemning thousands of them to a lifetime of drug or alcohol addiction. In a sense, such children at risk will be the victims of an insidious form of internal terrorism unless we start dealing with underlying problems. Tragically, some of these victims will victimize others. This is not a victimless crime; just the abuser.

When a teen parent abuses drugs and gives birth to a child who is an addict at the moment of birth, that infant is also a victim, an innocent victim.

The elderly person walking down the street who is mugged by a child who is a narcotic addict of one form or another and is seeking money to pay for that habit—that elderly person is a victim. This is the price we are paying. The victims of drug abuse are getting younger and they are victimizing others.

I went undercover in the State of Connecticut last year with local drug enforcement officers one evening just to watch the drug sales and transactions.

You can buy cocaine in my State of Connecticut, in nice Connecticut communities, faster on a street corner than you can get a hamburger at McDonalds. The drug problem is not just in the ghettos. It is in some of the most affluent suburbs and communities of my own home State.

I spoke to a 14-year-old boy who had started drinking at the age of 8. I listened to a young girl who had abused cocaine, angel dust, alcohol, marijuana, uppers, downers, and LSD, all by the time she was 14 years old.

I saw a 12-year-old earning more money by hawking drugs on street corners in my home State than he could ever hope to earn at a part-time job—money that he and others like him took home, I would add, to try to help make ends meet in some of their own family situations.

So the time to do something about "high risk youth" is now. Chances are, in my view, that we will never have a better chance to get something done in the Congress on this issue. I hope we will be able to focus some of the dollars we will be speaking about in the coming weeks on the children at risk.

Experts in my State have testified that if a child who abuses drugs stays in school, there is an 85 percent chance of curing that child. If such young people stay in school, we have an 85 percent chance of helping them get off drugs and stay off them. The minute a child drops out of school, those statistics drop to 15 percent. In other words, there is only a 15 percent chance that school dropouts will ever get off drugs. So it is very important that we have a good sound educational program.

I would add as an aside, Mr. President, that I am delighted the President signed the other day a resolution I authored that will declare this October 6th as National Drug Abuse Education Day. On October 6th, from 8 or 9 in the morning until the end of the day, the entire curriculum of every school in this country from Maine to California—from public and private elementary schools right through the university, will be focused on drug and alcohol abuse prevention. It is not much. But it will hopefully start to focus attention on what needs to be done—And, we need to get concrete help to high-risk youth by funding solid prevention and treatment programs in the communities where they live. I think we could accomplish a great deal by helping set up after-school programs in the inner cities, so we can keep 8- and 10-year-olds from having to make their alleyways where drug pushers stay their playgrounds.

We also need to help the victims of child abuse so that they do not have to turn to drugs as a way of shutting off painful memories.

Mr. President, this proposal to target high-risk youth spends $50 million on prevention and treatment programs.

Even by conservative estimates some 10 million people, as I said at the outset, will fall into the high-risk category—so we would be spending $5 a child. That is hardly enough. But it is a targeted effort.

Again, the high-risk youth provisions are only one piece of the larger bill. I am confident as I stand here this morning that before this Congress adjourns sine die in 1986 the American public can count on the Congress and the President signing into law a comprehensive, first-step effort.

We talk about wars on drugs. All wars in the minds of many people have beginnings and endings. Some are longer than others. I think it is important that we stop using the language of war when we refer to the problem of drug and alcohol abuse, although it is appealing and has a certain amount of clarity to it.

But the drug problem is not a problem that we are going to solve in a year, 2, 5 or 10. It is going to be with us as far as I can tell for the foreseeable future. If we think about it in terms of a long-term, persistent problem we are going to have to address year in and year out, then I am more confident that we will put in place appropriate programs. We will have to deal with this issue over the long term, and not at least create in the minds of many people that one piece of legislation years for a 5-year period is going to solve the problem. I do not believe that is the case. I do not think we will help our cause if we try to create that impression. In my own mind, this is going to be a problem for as far as the eye can see, well into the next century. My hope is, again of course, that we will adopt the legislation that was introduced yesterday or something very much like it in the coming weeks.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BENTSEN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Texas, Mr. BENTSEN, is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

NATIONAL SECURITY AND FOREIGN OIL

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, our Nation is the largest economy in the world. And we are the leader of the free world. That position carriers with it responsibility. And that responsibility imposes a burden I am not sure all of us are willing to face.

Twice in the last 13 years, our Nation and the free market economies allied with us have been successfully embargoed by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, or OPEC. It was not wood shingles or textiles or steel that our citizens lined up for miles to buy. It was oil.

The decision by OPEC to unsheath the oil weapon was a direct challenge at U.S. foreign policy. By depriving us of oil and lubricants, OPEC sought to sway our foreign policy. That did not work. But their embargo brought home to at least this Senator the fact that our Nation is vitally dependent on oil.

During the embargo, the Defense Department was frantically scrambling for alternative sources of oil and lubricants. Oil-sharing agreements with our allies were discussed. We began a major reorientation of our foreign policy to secure friends in the Middle East. We even began painting our armored vehicles desert brown. And we are taking millions of barrels of oil out of one hole in the ground and pumping it back in another hole just to ensure that our national security will not be jeopardized the next time we are threatened with the oil weapon.

The first OPEC embargo shocked our Nation. Yet, our total dependency on foreign oil in 1973 was 37 percent—and OPEC was providing 18 percent of this Nation's total oil consumption. Let me give you those numbers again. In 1973, when OPEC tied up this Nation and threatened our national security, oil imports comprised 37 percent of consumption. And OPEC supplied only 18 percent of that consumption.

Right now, today, our oil dependence is higher. That's right; higher. It was 40 percent last month. Even more alarming, our reliance on OPEC is rising once again to the levels we endured in the seventies.

After the first embargo, the air was filled with oil diversification schemes. But all that talk of diversification of supply notwithstanding, we have found that the only place to buy foreign oil in the quantities we need is OPEC. We talked bravely back in the seventies of new oil from Brazil or China, or oil from India and Malaysia. Well, I looked this morning at the Department of Energy's latest Monthly Energy Review. And I did not see those nations listed among our major oil suppliers up there with Saudi Arabia. In fact, I did not see them listed at all. They are asterisks in the world oil market. And that is why U.S. oil imports from OPEC are up 40 percent this year over last. And that is why OPEC oil comprises 14 percent of total U.S. consumption now, with the share rising monthly.

Our dependence on OPEC and the risks that is poses to national security are rising because we have not taken OPEC seriously. OPEC told us last winter they intended to drive world prices down in order to drive competitors out of business and expand OPEC's market power. That is exactly what they have done. They talked about limiting North Sea production. Why, I do not know. Production there will start declining on its own next year anyway. As a result, the major casualty of OPEC's market dominance strategy has been the U.S. oil industry—the world's largest free oil industry.

And that industry has been hit hard by the collapse in prices. According to Salomon Brothers, exploration and production spending is off 39 percent for the majors and 48 percent for the independents. Wildcatting is down so much that we will be lucky to bring in 1 new wildcat this year for every 10 brought in just 2 years ago. Drilling activity has fallen to the lowest levels recorded since early 1942 when every resource at hand was diverted to the war effort. And the only reason it has not fallen even further is that oil firms are tied into contracts which require them to drill or forfeit oil leases. Even so, drilling is barely one-sixth the peak level recorded in 1981. And my good friend George Mitchell, chairman of Mitchell Energy and Development Corp., now expects total energy exploration and development spending to only hit $17 or $18 billion this year, Compared to nearly $56 billion as recently as 1981.

OPEC price cutting burned like a firestorm through our vital oil patch. In my State of Texas, unemployment rose over 50 percent to 10.5 percent in June from 6.4 percent in January. The rate has eased somewhat since, but there are nearly 200,000 more Texans out of work now than in January as a direct result of OPEC's strategy. National data shows that 140,000 jobs have been lost since last year in oil and gas extraction alone. And many were in Texas. These lost jobs created ripples which continue to roll through Texas. Unemployment is 19.6 percent in Odessa in the heart of the oil patch. The vacancy rate for apartments and businesses in Houston is the highest in the United States. Real estate foreclosures in Dallas County surged 33 percent in August to record levels. Home sales in Texas during the second quarter fell 8.4 percent. And home values in the hardest hit areas of Texas are off as much as 20 percent this year. Over the last year, 24,500 new apartments were built in Dallas, but only 14,000 new units were rented. Moreover, declining receipts have pushed State and local budgets deep into the red all across the Oil Belt.

A large share of U.S. production comes from stripper wells producing less than 10 barrels daily. Dr. William Fisher from the University of Texas has studied our vulnerable stripper well production outlook. He found that tens of thousands of these small-volume wells will be shut down if prices remain below $15 per barrel. By 1990, U.S. production will be down one-third as a consequence. Other forecasters are showing the same thing. Put simply, the domestic oil industry is closing uneconomical wells as soon as they require the slightest additional maintenance outlay. They are not finding new reservoirs. Prudhoe Bay will begin to decline next year. And our oil industry is unable to bear the tremendous expense of finding new reserves to even keep pace with declining reservoir production.

That means falling U.S. production. Production here is already down 230,000 barrels per day this year. Yet, at today's low prices, demand is up a sharp 800,000 barrels per day. Imports are filling the gap. Those imports are coming from OPEC. And experts in the oil industry, at CBO, at the Library of Congress, and in the White House agree that foreign oil—and that means predominantly OPEC oil—will be the source of half of all U.S. consumption as soon as 1990. In the next year or two, we will become even more vulnerable to an OPEC embargo than we were in 1973—an open invitation for OPEC to once again unsheath the oil weapon.

We need not let our national security deteriorate in that fashion.

The administration is aware that rising imports from OPEC pose a national security threat. Admiral Poindexter, the President's National Security Adviser, acknowledged in a recent letter that there is "an emerging national security concern related to oil production in the Persian Gulf," and that by the early 1990's, "the Persian Gulf will once again become the major supplier to the free world." He noted that low prices are likely to boost oil imports from an average of 4.3 million barrels a day in 1985 to 7 to 10 million barrels a day in the early 1990's. He also asked that the present tax treatment of domestic energy firms be continued. He went on to conclude that raising oil industry taxes could cost the United States up to 700,000 barrels daily in lost production and higher oil imports.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Admiral Poindexter's letter appear following this statement in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit No. 1)

Mr. BENTSEN. Now is the time for us to come up with some solutions.

That is the purpose of the resolution I am introducing today. And I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the resolution appear in the RECORD following this statement.

(See Exhibit No. 2)

Mr. BENTSEN. My resolution requires the administration to prepare a national petroleum security plan by year's end to prevent further erosion in our oil independence and our national security caused by rising oil imports. The resolution does not tell the administration how to ease our rising dependence on oil imports. I have my own ideas on that. But I want to leave the door wide open if a better idea exists.

All my resolution really does is put the administration on alert that Congress expects results from them; it expects administration deeds to match administration rhetoric. Congress wants the administration to propose solutions to the national security problems it acknowledges to exist with rising oil imports.

To my mind, for example, any solution should attack both the demand side and supply sides of the oil equation.

And I refer the administration to the excellent testimony presented to the Finance Committee on August 13 by former Defense Secretary Harold Brown who urged that an oil import fee be imposed for national security considerations. That is my preferred option, as well. But as I say, there are a number of solutions the administration can propose.

Let me close by noting that the administration seems to be more alert and sensitive to the realities of the present day security threat posed by a weak domestic oil industry. That is a good first step. My resolution is designed to encourage them to take the second step—to join the national debate at a serious and constructive level on how best to prevent further erosion in our energy independence. They have a key role to play in that debate.

We cannot wait until 1988 or 1989 to worry about OPEC. We need to deal with OPEC now. My resolution can be the first step.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 5, 1986.

Hon. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I want to take this opportunity to raise with you an emerging national security concern related to oil production in the Persian Gulf. The low oil prices we are now experiencing have and will continue to benefit the U.S. economy through more rapid growth and lower inflation. In turn, lower prices stimulate oil imports and hence a resurgence in oil production from the Persian Gulf. Sometime in the early 1990's we are likely to see our oil imports rise to 7 to 10 million barrels per day and the Persian Gulf will once again become the major supplier to the free world.

The Persian Gulf is likely to remain an unstable region as we enter the 1990's. We cannot ensure against this instability merely by purchasing oil from non-Gulf sources. We live in a single, highly integrated world oil market. Any disruption of supplies is quickly realized by all oil-importing countries through higher prices and large GNP losses which are exacerbated by higher oil imports. In addition, a major oil disruption will place severe strains on our entire range of political-military resources.

The President has stressed over the last few months the importance of a viable domestic oil and gas industry to our national well being and energy security. As you are well aware, the dramatic oil price collapse of the past six months has severely hurt the oil and gas sector. Drilling activity is at a 46-year low with the latest rig count of about 700 in use, compared to a 1981 peak of 3970.

These trends underscore the critical importance, in my view, of retaining existing incentives for oil and gas exploration and development for the oil industry. To reduce the current depletion allowance of expensing of drilling costs would place an additional burden on an industry which is an important contributor to our security. Analysis by the Department of Energy indicates that retention of these incentives could avoid the loss of as much as 700,000 barrels per day of domestic oil production.

I ask that you keep these national security concerns in mind as you proceed with tax reform legislation.

Sincerely,

JOHN M. POINDEXTER.

EXHIBIT NO. 2

S. RES. 488

Whereas, the national security of the United States is directly related to the maintenance of secure and reliable supplies of petroleum and lubricants needed for national defense and economic growth;

Whereas, the only strategic commodity which has been embargoed and supplies withheld from the United States in recent years is petroleum;

Whereas, the collapse of domestic petroleum prices is reducing exploration and production, and increasing demand, causing foreign petroleum imports to rise dangerously to 40 percent of consumption in July from 27 percent in 1985;

Whereas, the surge in imports has occurred primarily from OPEC nations which are supplying 43 percent of all United States imports;

Whereas, the President's National Security advisor has acknowledged that such rising American and free world dependence on OPEC oil supplies threatens United States national security; Now therefore be it,

Resolved, That the President shall prepare and submit a National Petroleum Security Plan to Congress by December 31, 1986, designed to prevent further erosion in United States oil independence and national security caused by a growing reliance on unsecure foreign sources of petroleum.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m., with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call for the quorum be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE COMPREHENSIVE NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise with several of my colleagues to speak in support of S. 2798, the Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986, which was introduced by the Democratic Working Group on Narcotics, and which has received the unanimous support of all 47 Senate Democrats.

This bill represents what the Senate Democrats believe is the necessary legislation to commit the Federal Government to a long-term strategy to reduce drug abuse in America. Both Houses of Congress, both political parties, and the administration are working on major legislative proposals relating to drugs. S. 2798 is the contribution from the Senate Democrats, and I think it is a well considered and tight piece of legislation.

Rather than speak to the specifics of this bill, which each of my colleagues have addressed and I complement them for their contribution to this bill, I would like to address some of the attitudes and perceptions that have taken hold in this city in our recent efforts to reduce drug abuse. Their is a great deal of skepticism surrounding the congressional response to the drug issue, fueled by the belief that the issue will fade after the November elections. In response, I'd like to make two points. First, the American people have clearly spoken as to their concerns about drugs. Recent polls have shown that Americans are more concerned about solving drug abuse than they are about tax reform. For too many Americans, drugs have touched their lives in miserable ways, either directly, or through their families and friends. This, coupled with the tragic deaths of two major sports figures, has brought home the real dangers of drugs. It is time for Congress to respond decisively to what all Americans are saying; help us solve this scorching problem. We must take advantage of this mood. As one who has been working on the crime and drug issues for nearly a decade, I think that there is now a unique opportunity to move drug legislation, and we must not let it pass. The merits of this legislation provide a point from which to begin.

The second point I'd like to make is about the need for both parties to work constructively on this issue. The American people are understandably skeptical about "political" solutions to the drug problem. The rhetoric and hyperbole in the past in which we have declared war on drugs, that have failed or left hollow promises, have lead to this skepticism. Further, some are trying to paint the drug issue as a political issue, a point that is difficult to refute given the coming elections in November.

We cannot let this happen. We need to work together in passing a meritorious Senate drug bill. Not long ago, colleagues from both sides of the aisle worked together—negotiating, compromising—but above all, cooperating, in moving the most significant Criminal Code reform in this Nation's history. As one who was involved in that process in 1984, which was also an election year, I know that we can go beyond politics and pass meaningful legislation of this kind. In 1984, we did it. This year, we must do the same.●

TRADE AGREEMENT ON PASTA WAR

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on a tentative trade agreement that was reached between the United States and the European Economic Community recently. The agreement is supposed to settle the so-called "pasta war" that developed over the EEC's subsidization of pasta exports to the United States and a related dispute over our exports of citrus products to Europe.

I object to the fact that America's dairy farmers will pay the price for settling a dispute that they have nothing to do with. Under the terms of the proposed settlement, European concessions on pasta and citrus will be paid for by an increase in imports of Portuguese and Italian-type cheeses.

The agreement calls for an increase in the quota for Italian-type cheeses of 1,572 metric tons per year. The quota for Portuguese cheeses would be raised by 353 metric tons per year. Together, this represents an increase of almost 4.5 million pounds, with a milk equivalency of about 45 million pounds.

I have nothing against the idea of reaching a solution to the pasta and citrus disputes with the EEC. But I must point out that increasing dairy imports inevitably means the displacement of cheese produced from domestic sources. This, in turn, leads to increased outlays under the dairy price support program.

Mr. President, our dairy farmers are doing their best to bring supply in line with demand. Over the last few years, they have endured more cuts in Government price supports than producers of any other program commodity. They have paid assessments to reduce the cost to the Government of the price support program. They have paid assessments to fund a promotion and research program—all of this as part of a continuing effort to cut the cost of the price support program.

In this context—and in the context of the budget deficit—increasing cheese imports makes no sense. It undermines everything our dairy farmers have done to reduce the cost of the dairy program. The fact that Europe's dairy industry produces cheeses with the aid of heavy Government subsidies only adds insult to injury.

We ought to be able to do better than this. It should be possible to combat unfair European trade practices without increasing the cost of our own agricultural programs and doing injury to our own dairy farmers.

SENATOR DOLE: THE OUTSTANDING LEGISLATOR OF THE 99TH CONGRESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the U.S. Senate and our colleagues in the other body of Congress have, over the last 33 years, benefited considerably by those selected to be interns in a program called the Congressional Fellowship Program, run by the highly respected American Political Science Association.

Many of us in this Chamber today either currently have or have had the good fortune to be assisted by a Congressional fellow for up to 5 months or more. Congressional fellows have given us some new and crisp insights into the broadest possible range of legislation, they have brought fresh problem-solving approaches to our personal staffs and our committee staffs, and many of them have remained in contact and have kept us right up to speed after their year on the Hill.

This wonderful program began in 1953, and since then there have been a total of 1,167 fellows, including 209 political scientists, 165 journalists, 561 Federal executives (from grades 13 to 16), and 232 medical faculty and others.

Recently these former congressional fellows received a ballot in the mail to select one of our Members to be awarded the coveted title "Outstanding Legislator, 99th Congress." And out of the 100 Senators and 435 Representatives, the alumni of this outstanding professional level internship program selected our fine friend, able majority leader, and colleague, Senator ROBERT DOLE of Kansas.

If we were to have a similar vote today on the floor of the U.S. Senate, I hunch our result would exactly echo that of the former Congressional fellows. These alumni formally presented this honor to Senator DOLE on the evening of August 28, during the annual convention of the American Political Science Association here in Washington, DC. A superb honor for a superb gentleman.

I would like to offer my congratulations and the congratulations of the Congress to Senator DOLE on his receipt of his splendid honor.

THE DEATH OF HARLEY M. DIRKS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, sadly, I rise today to inform my distinguished colleagues of the loss of a good friend to us all.

On August 28, Harley Dirks, a man whom we had come to recognize as a persuasive voice for the sick and the needy, passed away after a long and valiant struggle with cancer—a struggle, I might add, he faced with the same faith and courage he had shown throughout his life.

Mr. President, Harley's life and his legacy is rooted firmly in the belief that the highest work of any man is to protect and help those less fortunate. And to Harley was given the almost unique gift of enriching and enlarging that credo. Armed with an uncanny ability to get to the heart of any issue, he brought compassion and an understanding to some of the most difficult problems of his time.

Harley Dirks first came to the Senate some two decades ago. As he told the story, Harley left his home in Othello, WA, to take a short-term job working for that State's senior Senator and our former colleague, Warren G. Magnuson. But as so often happens, that short-term assignment was soon transformed into a permanent position of the Senate Appropriations Committee, where Harley served as staff to the HUD and Independent Offices Subcommittee. Soon afterward, he assumed the role of staff director of what was then the Labor-HEW Subcommittee.

While most of my colleagues had come to think of Harley as a spokesperson on health issues, the fact is that his sphere of concern and involvement went far beyond medicine and health. From his vantage point on the Labor-HEW Subcommittee, Harley's counsel to its members helped to launch and sustain most of what he called people programs. As the record shows, during his tenure Harley Dirks played a major role in the funding of the Head Start Program for preschoolchildren, compensatory education for disadvantaged elementary and secondary students, the college student grant and loan programs, rehabilition programs for the disabled, and employment and training activities.

Now it may seem odd for a good conservative like me to hail this fellow who championed so many new or expanded Federal programs. A few years ago at a hearing, Harley asked if he could have his picture taken with me, but he warned me he was an old liberal. I told him I would be pleased to have my picture taken with him, but that he should carefully consider what it might do to his reputation. He persisted, and I'm glad to have this remembrance of such a fine man. He was a man of compassion and judgment and there were many more points, I believe, on which we agreed than on which we differed.

Mr. President, it is impossible to put anyone's life into words. Perhaps the best I can do is to say that Harley's life was guided by one important principle—that the divine spark which unites us will always prove more enduring than the forces which divide.

I know that I am speaking for all of my colleagues in expressing our deep sense of loss. Harley's dedication, his untiring labors on behalf of the needy, and, most of all, his courage stand in his tribute. His wisdom, compassion, and kindly strength have bequeathed to us all a strong legacy of purpose and courage.

I want to extend my deepest sympathies to Harley's wife, Ruth Sanchez Dirks, who currently serves the administration as Deputy Director of the Office of Adolescent Pregnancy Programs at the Department of Health and Human Services, and to his children. He will be greatly missed.

VIEWS OF FORMER SECRETARIES OF TRANSPORTATION ON AN EXEMPTION FROM FEDERAL LAWS FOR HAWAII INTERSTATE H-3

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, the Senate will be considering S. 2405, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1986 shortly. An amendment may be offered to provide an exemption from section 4(f) for the H-3 interstate project in Hawaii.

I have strongly opposed such an exemption from this major Federal law for this highway for a number of reasons.

I have received letters from two past Secretaries of Transportation, Mr. Alan S. Boyd, who served as Secretary during President Johnson's administration, and Mr. John Volpe, who served during President Nixon's administration. I believe they describe very well some of the reasons to vote against this far-reaching exemption. I ask unanimous consent that the two letters be printed in the RECORD at this point and urge my distinguished colleagues to carefully consider the points made by former Secretaries Volpe and Boyd.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL TRUST FOR HISTORIC PRESERVATION,
Washington, DC, July 7, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT T. STAFFORD,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As the nations's first Secretary of Transportation, I honored and all my successors have continued to honor, a Congressional directive to preserve our natural and cultural environment. This directive comes in Section 4(f) of the Department of Transportation Act of 1966. This Section directs each Secretary to deny approval to any transportation project that would involve the destruction of parks, historic sites and other heritage resources unless there are no feasible or prudent alternatives.

Following twenty years of successes, it is my understanding that your Committee will be asked to approve an amendment to exempt an Hawaiian highway link known as H-3 from Section 4(f) during your upcoming mark up of S. 2405. If approved, I believe that this would be the first ever exemption made to Section 4(f). On behalf of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, I urge you to reject this unwise precedent.

Were the Committee to agree to this exemption, the Committee would be inviting future exemption requests. Inevitably, the Committee would become embroiled in dozens of controversial transportation projects where, as here, arguments of transportation necessity are placed against evidence of direct and severe destruction of environmental and historic resources.

Congress acted wisely in creating Section 4(f) to set a clear and unequivocal standard and to place enforcement of that standard in the hands of the Secretary of Transportation. For twenty years every state, country and municipality has had to meet the strict test of Section 4(f). In that time it has protected hundreds of sensitive environmental areas and thousands of historic resources. No one project is more important than the continuing integrity of Section 4(f) and the places it protects. An exemption amendments, if offered, should be rejected.

Sincerely,

ALAN S. BOYD,
Chairman.

JULY 14, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT T. STAFFORD,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It is my understanding that your committee will be asked to exempt Interstate H-3, a 10.7-mile interstate highway project through the Koolau Mountains on the Island of Oahu, from coverage under Section 4(f) of the Department of Transportation Act, 49 U.S.C. § 309. As a former Secretary of Transportation, I urge you to oppose this proposed exemption.

In the twenty years since Section 4(f) was enacted in 1986, no exemption have been granted. As Secretary of Transportation, I supported the uniform application of Section 4(f) to all federally-assisted transportation projects and both my successors and predecessors have done likewise. Now is not the time to establish a precedent of selective application. Moreover, an exemption for H-3 would be overturning a court decision upheld by the United States Supreme Court. Apart from the adverse precedential effect such an exemption would have on future 4(f) projects, respect for our judicial process argues against this proposed amendment.

Every Secretary of Transportation has struggled to implement Section 4(f) in a fair and uniform manner, often in the face of strong political pressure to provide exceptions. The ability of a project proponent to circumvent this law through a legislative exemption would seriously undermine the ability of any Secretary of Transportation to enforce our federal transportation laws in a consistent manner. I urge you, and your committee, to reject any proposed 4(f) exemption for Interstate H-3.

Sincerely,

JOHN A. VOLPE.

COMPREHENSIVE ANTIDRUG LEGISLATION

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I join my colleagues today in highlighting the importance of the comprehensive antidrug package which was introduced yesterday, ending a long period of discouragement and lack of decisiveness on the part of the Federal Government. The Comprehensive Narcotics Control Act of 1986—S. 2798—is the product of the Democratic working group on drugs, whose diligent efforts has provided us with a broad offensive toward the war on drugs.

Despite the pressing legislative agenda that confronts us during the final weeks of this session, a constructive and comprehensive policy to combat drugs could not be delayed any further. The levels of use and abuse of drugs in our society are equal to or higher than those found in any other industrialized country and within our country every community has felt its impact. As we have tried to respond in the past to select aspects of the drug problem, the use and abuse of narcotics has continued to spread and change with remarkable speed. This legislation recognizes that organizing prevention programs and curtailing trafficking will not be achieved through any single effort, but through an initiative that responds to the complexity of the problem.

S. 2798 responds to the desparate need for coordination and leadership on the Federal level by establishing a coordinator of antidrug programs. It enhances our enforcement network by making needed changes: at the intelligence level through information sharing with the State and local enforcement agencies; at the personnel level by providing additional funds and equipment; and at the judicial level by strengthening criminal penalties for trafficking, money laundering, and designer drugs.

The bill authorizes long overdue changes allowing for greater use of the Department of Defense and Coast Guard personnel for interdiction and doubles the Custom's Service air interdiction fleet. Title V of S. 2798 begins to tackle the subtle complexities of international narcotics control through the use of tools like tariffs, visas, and extradition treaties, as well as strengthening our antidrug activities in international organizations.

And finally, no serious narcotics control package would be complete without stepping up our assistance to drug education programs, while expanding treatment and rehabilitation services. The very human side of this problem reminds us of the tremendous impact drug abuse has on individual lives and functioning of families. The education and rehabilitation program serve to alleviate this impact and they are especially crucial. The education programs must begin with our very young if demand is to be reduced, while the rehabilitation programs continue to help individuals seek a better future.

In this regard, I am especially pleased that S. 2798 includes a proposal I introduced early last month to make Federal forfeiture funds available for drug abuse education and prevention programs. Our law enforcement authorities seize over $1 billion in drug trafficker's assets each year—cash, stocks, bonds, and real estate—but the money is not going to help reduce demand for drugs. I believe it makes a great deal of sense to use drug pusher profits in our attempt to meet the challenges before us and consider this proposal to be a integral part of the comprehensive package.

In closing, I would like to point out that it is not just a coincidence that the bill includes many of the recommendations by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis made recently in his testimony before the Congress. The Governor's Alliance Against Drugs has successfully enlisted more than 200 communities in the Commonwealth in a unified and comprehensive effort to combat substance abuse by young people, but without changes on the Federal level many hurdles remained.

S. 2798 tackles these hurdles and I am confident that with its prompt passage we will finally have the Federal, State, and local alliance that has been so sorely needed. As the many speakers today outline the challenges this grave problem has placed before us, I hope all Members of this body will become convinced of the necessity of this bill. I urge its adoption.

NEW LEGISLATION TO COMBAT DRUGS

Mr. LEAHY, Mr. President, I rise to express my strongest support for a major new legislative initiative to fight drugs—the Comprehensive Narcotics Act of 1986. I am especially proud to have been appointed to the task force that drafted this package. If adopted in full, it would dramatically change the stakes in a war we are losing.

I believe this is the most comprehensive, hard-hitting antidrug bill ever written. Its 200 plus pages and $1.65 billion price tag reflect the magnitude of the problem we face. The task force, and particularly our staff who worked so hard to put this together during the past 4 weeks, deserves praise for writing a bill that takes a full swing at the drug problem from every angle—source eradication, interdiction, enforcement, education, treatment, and rehabilitation. It's all here.

And not just in the form of new reports to Congress and token funding to solve problems we all know require a major commitment in resources. The money is in this bill, as it must be.

Drugs have infested this country like a plague. They are in our schools and in the workplace. They are killing our children, destroying families, and ruining careers.

Drug abuse among young people has spread to all parts of the country and entered every segment of society. More and more children from families of all income levels, from rural as well as urban communities, are smoking marijuana, using cocaine, and experimenting with other dangerous drugs.

My own State of Vermont is not immune from this plague.

Last year, the Vermont State Police investigated over 400 cases involving the sale or manufacture of drugs. There were another 838 investigations involving the possession of regulated drugs.

From 1983 to 1984, cocaine related deaths increased 77 percent nationwide, while requests for treatment for cocaine use have risen 600 percent in the past 3 years. Thousands of individuals were arrested for selling drugs in the close vicinity of elementary schools.

Drug merchants are now pushing a new craze that is sweeping the Nation. It's called crack. Crack is available to the young, and it will be in the schools this fall. I have heard horror story after horror story involving children as young as 9 who are already crack users. The sellers also use these young children as lookouts and as workers in houses that manufacture crack. One hit costs just $10. Users say addiction can begin after only the second use of crack.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee I have supported bills to address specific aspects of the drug problem. Some have been incorporated into this package, to combat money laundering and designer drugs. But we need a comprehensive strategy that attacks drugs from their source to their youngest victims.

I won't take the time to describe the many provisions of this bill. My colleagues on the task force have already done a fine job of that. I will limit myself to mentioning three sections I am particularly pleased about.

The first is the new section on forfeiture. Fighting drugs is expensive. In interdiction alone, Customs and Drug Enforcement Administration officials say they only have the equipment and manpower to intercept a tiny fraction of the drugs that are crossing our borders. Two years ago we enacted the drug forfeiture laws which provide for the seizure and forfeiture of the profits of drug traffickers and property used in connection with selling drugs—businesses, airplanes, and so forth. But under those laws, no more than $10 million of forfeited assets can be used to fund antidrug programs. This bill removes that cap, and provides that all money remaining in the Department of Justice and Customs Forfeiture Funds after paying administrative expenses, shall be used to fund Federal and State drug programs—for law enforcement, education, treatment, and rehabilitation. This program is expected to net $150 million in 1986, to help pay the cost of this bill.

The other parts of this bill I want to make special mention of are those that deal with education and drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation. We need to deal with the demand for drugs as well as the supply.

The Administrator of DEA has called prevention the long-term solution to the Nation's drug problem. I agree. I support longer jail sentences for traffickers and better equipment to catch them, but for too long we have neglected what I believe should be the cornerstone of our fight against drug abuses—education of our children about the dangers of drugs, and treatment for drug abusers.

This bill attacks these monumental tasks head on. It commits the Federal Government, for the first time, to a long term drug abuse education effort, by creating an office of Drug and Alcohol Abuse Education and Policy in the Department of Education.

Education is vital—parents, teachers, and school administrators have to intervene betwen children and drugs. We need to act before the drug problem begins. The "do drugs" message school children receive from their peers, and the easy access to drugs in our society, must be stopped. Instead, we need to send a stronger message to our children—"drugs kill."

This bill authorizes $150 million for education—that's 50 times what is being spent today. Every school age child will be made aware of the dangers of crack in this school year.

It authorizes $394 million for treatment and rehabilitation, which today can cost tens of thousands of dollars per individual per year. Everywhere I go I hear stories of children waiting to get into treatment programs. There are very few families this plague has not touched. The public wants treatment to save the lives of the tens of thousands of their relatives and friends who suffer from drug abuse. It is no longer enough to raise criminal penalties and hire more DEA agents.

That's what makes this such a strong bill. It was written with the view that no part of the drug problem can be treated lightly. If we are going to win this war, we have to fight it on every front.

A lot has been said about how to fight drugs since the sixties when they became a fixture in American society. The problem has only gotten worse. Today cocaine is in our elementary schools. The coming of crack was the last staw for those of us in Congress who for years have urged stronger action.

The administration has not matched its rhetoric with action. This is not a problem Nancy Reagan can solve on her own, as much as I wish it were. It is not enough for her to tell kids to "just say no." It's time she had the full backing of the Congress and the administration.

Today the Congress has taken the initiative. This bill inaugurates a long range strategy. It will take a massive effort. Not just by government, but also by the private sector, the medical community, religious institutions, by teachers and school administrators, and most importantly, by parents. I am proud to have been part of the task force that produced this package, and I urge the Senate to make this a priority in the remaining weeks of this session.

TRIBUTE TO W.B. CAMP

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I was deeply saddened to learn of the recent passing of my dear friend and fellow Clemson College alumnus, Wofford B. "Bill" Camp, of Bakersfield, CA.

Bill became known as the cotton man for his development of modern-day cotton farming. He often was heard to say, "I was born in a cotton patch," referring to the fact that cotton was the crop that supported his family of four brothers and three sisters. Ironically, Bill was born on March 14, 1984, the 100th anniversary of Eli Whitney's cotton gin. He financed his college education at Clemson College by saving the money he had earned plowing cotton and cornfields for 40 cents a day in wages.

Upon graduating from Clemson in 1916, he was chosen by the U.S. Department of Agriculture during World War I to head a pioneering experiment in cotton farming in California. The war effort needed long-staple cotton for fabric used around the frame of fighter planes, and the boll weevil was destroying the Sea Island cotton of South Carolina and Georgia. Bill got in his model A Ford with 32 bags of cottonseed and headed west to grow cotton in the weevil-free West.

He settled in the then-isolated San Joaquin Valley in southern California and persuaded farmers to set aside a few acres to experiment with long-staple cotton, proving it could be grown with success. After the war ended, his agricultural pioneering continued, and cotton became the biggest cash crop in California.

In addition, Bill was one of the earliest advocates of irrigation farming and was among the first to urge water conservation for supplemental irrigation purposes. He founded the Camp Irrigation Fund for South Carolina, which carried out demonstrations in the State.

Although he built his fortune in California, Bill never forgot his native State. He mentioned the farm in Cherokee County where he was born and was a generous contributor to Limestone College, Clemson University, and the University of South Carolina.

On a national scale, Bill was a past member of the board of directors of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and served as chairman of its committee on agriculture. He was also a member of the National Industrial Conference Board, the board of directors of the Bureau of Water Resources of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, and the board of the Agricultural Hall of Fame.

The National Right to Work Committee building here in Washington is named for him and his lovely wife, Louise.

I extend my deepest sympathy to Louise; to Bill's sons, W.B., Jr., and Donald; his stepdaughters, Sarah Camp Cory and Louise Wise Segars, who, incidentally, is a resident of Sumter, SC; his stepson, George Wise; his brother J.D.; his grandchildren, two of whom, Georgia Camp Bell, also of Sumter, and Carolyn Camp, of Bakersfield, CA, are former members of my Senate staff; and his great-grandchildren.

Bill Camp was not only a successful farmer and businessman, he was an ideological inspiration for the practical, hard-working American farmer. In his 92 years, he changed the face of agriculture and championed the farmer like no other single man has done.

W.B. Camp left a legacy in the soil from coast to coast. Those of us who knew him remember his involvement in every aspect of farming and agree that the man was every bit as great as the legend. He was a loyal friend and a great American, and I ask unanimous consent that two articles be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Gaffney (SC) Ledger, Aug. 6, 1986]

WOFFORD B. CAMP

It would be difficult, it seems, for two people who live 3,000 miles from Cherokee County to have a significant impact on this county year after year, but in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Wofford B. Camp, that has been the case exactly.

W.B. and Louise Camp have been great benefactors to Cherokee County in general and to Limestone College in particular for many years since they left these red hills to transplant cotton on the Pacific shore.

The Camps have maintained a rolling farm here—with the able assistance of Ed Small—have preserved a true part of this county's heritage by renovating and maintaining the only one-room schoolhouse left here, Possum Trot, and have given generously to scores of other causes whenever called upon.

Wofford Camp died Sunday night at his Bakersfield, California home. His legend is well documented throughout the textile industry and in several notable publications, so there's no need telling the story of "The Cotton Man" once again.

But there is need to note his death here in Cherokee County. He was a generous Christian man who shared his success in more ways than most of us will ever know. The Ledger joins his wife, family and many friends in mourning the loss.

Wofford B. Camp never forgot Cherokee County. Cherokee County, just as assuredly, will never forget Wofford B. Camp.

[From the Bakersfield (CA) Californian, Aug. 3, 1986]

CAMP LEAVES RICH LEGACY

Few men have contributed more to agriculture and the prosperity of Kern County than W.B. Camp, the "Father of Cotton" in California. His death Friday at age 92 closed an illustrious career of achievement.

"Bill" Camp arrived in Bakersfield early in 1917 with orders from the Army and the U.S. Department of Agriculture to develop a strain of cotton with a long staple that could be used to produce fiber for airplane wings and ambulance tires. That was the beginning of the modern California cotton industry.

He later introduced Alcala cotton at the USDA experiment station at Shafter, an achievement that raised this state's cotton crop to international importance.

Pressed by Camp's leadership, California enacted in 1925 the one-variety cotton law which limited growers to planting only USDA-developed and approved Alcala strains. It remained in force until two years ago when a privately developed cotton variety was approved.

During the Roosevelt administration, he was asked to be assistant secretary of agriculture, heading its cotton programs. He left the USDA for good in 1936, and returned to Bakersfield to establish himself as a cotton grower.

During the ensuring years he received numerous national recognitions in agriculture, public service and humanitarianism. A strong patriot, he and his wife, Louise, were the only husband-wife members of the national board of the Freedoms Foundation.

Bakersfield, and indeed the nation, has lost one of its most distinguished citizens. The legacy of his contributions will rightfully assure his niche in history.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5233, an act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that during the debate on H.R. 5233, I might be permitted to make remarks from my seat as need be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KASTEN). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies, I rise to recommend the fiscal year 1987 appropriations bill which ensures that our most basic human programs are maintained and developed to meet the needs of 1987.

At this juncture I should like to thank my distinguished colleague, the ranking member, Senator PROXMIRE of Wisconsin, for the day-to-day assistance which he has rendered in arriving at this particular work product.

These matters, which will be under discussion on the Senate floor, relate to the positive aspects of life in this country, the education of our children, the health care of all of our citizens, the retarded, the disabled, indeed all those who need our special and loving care. Hearings on the bill before us encompassed some 35 to 40 days and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin was there daily to lend his expertise and his advice in the formulation of the matters which now will come to the attention of the full Senate.

Mr. President, I am now going to digress from what I normally do, which is to cite the dollar figures contained in my bill, to discuss a matter which has been weighing on my mind for several months now and which I think needs a little airing insofar as it relates to what our national policies are to be.

I want to talk about money. I realize nobody wants to talk about money. So I am going to tell you what has precipitated my urge to broach the untouchable subject.

During the past several weeks during the recess, thanks to a bout with sciatica, I had occasion to lie in bed for a couple of weeks and read the newspapers and watch the television.

I noticed that the big subject for everybody's attention in the United States today is drugs. I read about the House initiative relating to drugs and the war on drugs.

Watching New York television from my home in Connecticut, I noted that the mayor of New York City, Mayor Koch, hosted a conference consisting of the mayors of the large cities in this country. Representative RANGEL was there. The minority leader of the House of Representatives was there. The focus was on drugs and the war on drugs. There is hardly a politician in the United States during this election year that does not want to talk about drugs and the war on drugs.

I do not know any other way, Mr. President, to conduct a war on drugs except to spend money on the war on drugs. We can talk ourselves blue in the face but the fact is that the money has to be appropriated to the Drug Enforcement Agency [DEA], it has to go to our local law enforcement agencies, it has to go to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, it has to go to the Justice Department, if we are to have a war on drugs.

I have heard everyone talking about the war on drugs, but I have not heard anyone say what it is going to cost.

I pick up the newspapers daily now and I read how the Secretary of Education wants excellence in education, and at the same time he is asking for excellence in education he presents a budget to the Appropriations Committee that cuts the funding for education.

Later on we are going to debate prayer in school. I know that everyone has his own opinion on prayer in school, but I tell you one thing: That is not the key to better education in the United States. It takes teachers and it takes effective programs and it takes money.

As far as I know, the demands of our education-seeking public, and by that I include not only the young, but the elderly who now like adult education, have been going up while the money has been going down, and yet we increasingly talk about excellence in education and about educational opportunities for our young people.

It is identical to the "war on drugs." Hooray for the war on drugs, and hooray for excellence in education, but it is time that we came forward and face the fact that these programs cost money and, yes, I think it is money well spent.

Because of the spate of air crashes that we have had over the past several months, I read about how something has to be done about safety in the skies. Let me tell you that as long as I have been on the Appropriations Committee, I know one thing that has happened, thanks to deregulation of the airlines: Air traffic has increased and new airlines are flying all over the Nation. Air traffic is soaring and the budget for air traffic safety control has been going down. Yet we were horrified when we hear of near misses and other things taking place.

I say these things because I have been blessed with a position on the Appropriations Committee, and after all is said and done, all the political talk is over with, and all the rhetoric is done, if you want the most impartial, bipartisan, unphilosophical judgment as to what the national priorities are and what we are actually doing, take a look at the appropriations. That is where it is at.

I do not care how eloquent my Democratic friends in the House are or what the President says in his Saturday morning speeches or what the candidates for office are going to promise. If they tell you that they want to have a war on drugs, or that they want better education for your children, or that they want safety in the skies, or that they want health care for the elderly, you better ask them if they are willing to make these issues a matter of national priority as to the spending of our national moneys. That is it. And unless they are willing to say we are going to spend the money on it, then they do not give a damn about any one or all of those subjects.

I have chaired this committee which is charged with the health care of this Nation for the past several years, and I have seen the hopes of this Nation, of those that cry out for hope, dashed time and time again by the budgets presented to us by the administration and by the subsequent actions of Congress.

I am not talking about welfare here today. I am not talking about handouts. I am talking about people who are dying that should not be dying. I am talking about people who are ignorant who should not be ignorant or illiterate. Recently, there have been several programs about illiteracy in the United States. They make damn good viewing. What are you going to do about it?

I am talking about those who are hooked on drugs and who have nothing to look forward to but death, period, sooner or later, and licking that problem.

All we do is speculate on what it is the Soviet Union is going to do in the year 2000 or the year 2010. How about the year 1986?

I can assure you what you are seeing throughout the neighborhoods of this Nation is not the figment of some screaming liberal's imagination. That is the fact of life in America today. People sleeping on the grates; that is the fact of life in America today. And the illiteracy that we have heard about; that is the fact of life in America today.

I am going to bring something very real to your attention here this morning, for the first time. Let us talk for a moment about another problem that afflicts this Nation, the matter of AIDS. There is neither a vaccine nor a cure of AIDS. Indeed up to this point there has not been anything that effectively halts the inexorable march of fatalities associated with that disease.

At the present time we have clinical trials going on under auspices of the National Institutes of Health. Hopefully something will come of all of that.

I believe my figures are correct that at the present time there are some 10,000 worst cases, if you will, people that are known to be dying of AIDS, never mind all those that are already dead, and those that will die. They look to the National Institutes of Health and to the Centers for Disease Control with a hope that maybe, maybe, if they can live a little longer, something could come along to buy a little more time until the scientists do their work either in terms of a drug which can halt the furtherance of the disease, put it on a status quo, or, which is much further away, a vaccine to cure the disease.

At the present time, 1,000 of those 10,000 are involved in clinical trials—1,000. In other words, 1,000 have at least the hope that they might live; 9,000 will not. Will not, period. How would you like to be in a position to make those kinds of choices?

Now during the course of the development of this budget, we have, not only this year but over the course of the last several years, the ranking member and myself and all the members of the committee, given every penny that has been asked for in terms of research in conquering this affliction.

Yesterday, I met with members of the Human Rights Campaign Fund. And they made the following request: They said, "Would it be possible to supply additional moneys to make available to those suffering from AIDS, some ten thousand persons, with a new drug, AZT?" For apparently there is the possibility that this drug has some delaying effect as far as those suffering from AIDS are concerned.

My good friend, Senator CRANSTON, from California, and Congressman WAXMAN, from California, indicated in a letter to me several weeks ago that they also would like to see some additional funds appropriated to make AZT available to AIDS sufferers.

It will not cure the sufferers. There is no guarantee as to how long it will put their affliction on hold. But if you had AIDS and at least there was a possibility that a month or 2 or 3 months might be given to you in terms of life while further discoveries with respect to the disease, would you not want to avail yourself of the substance?

The fact remains that there are now only funds to make it available to 1,000. And so, by virtue of the lack of money, we condemn 9,000 others, maybe even more, to certain death.

This matter is of such recent vintage that it was not in time for either the chairman's markup, the subcommittee markup or the full committee markup. I have done the best I can in the last 48 hours to see whether or not such an appropriation of funds—and we are talking somewhere between $40 million and $50 million in additional funds—as to whether or not this indeed was a valid request demanding of a legitimate response by the Senate of the United States.

I am convinced, as I address this body this morning, that this particular substance, AZT, does have the capacity to extend for a period of time—and I am not prepared as a layman to say exactly what that period of time is—the lives of many suffering from AIDS.

It is my intention during the course of the proceedings to consult with the ranking member and somehow try and find money in this budget to make a shift of funds to that purpose. But please understand that a shift of funds is going to be just that. It is going to have to come from some other endeavor in the area of education or health or science or moneys for the disabled, et cetera.

Now, I do not relish that kind of choosing, but, in the final analysis, this is not Reagan's budget we are dealing with. And it is not the budget of the U.S. Senate and it is not the budget or the appropriations of the House of Representatives. This is the budget of the American people. And the American people have been sitting around, snapping up with relish and with feel-goodism the rhetoric of the politicians all the while saying this is going to be great, we are going to do the job and we are not going to have to spend a nickel.

What I am saying to the American public here today is you are going to have to spend a lot of nickels, not on welfare, not on handing money away, but on our own health; on the fact that 10,000 people can live.

Let me give you another indication as to the lack of funding and what it entails for the future, so that nobody feels they are out from underneath what has been done to human services in this Nation. We know by the year—let me get my actual facts here so that we do not in any way generalize. I am turning my attention to the aging, the elderly.

By the year 2030, 20 percent of our population is going to be over 65. By the year 2000, our elderly population over 85 will double. Now that is not, again, some liberal philosphical poppycock. Those are just cold, hard statistics. Over age 85, doubling by the year 2000; and, by the year 2030, 20 percent of the population will be over 65.

So you say, "Well, what are we doing about it?" I will tell you what we are doing about it. We are cutting the budgets for the Institute on Aging. We are cutting the budgets on Alzheimer's disease. We are not providing the funds for the medical schools to have our doctors and our nurses specialize in geriatric care. That is what we are doing about it.

If you think it is expensive to spend money in the year 1986 for the problems coming up in the year 2000 and 2030, it is peanuts compared to what you will pay in the way of catchup ball in the year 2000 and the year 2030, and even when you play catchup ball financially, you will not have the people or the programs or the scientific knowledge to handle the problem.

Why do you think Alzheimer's disease has come to the attention of the American public? It has been there all along. But it has not been there in terms of numbers to make us all realize what this horrible affliction is. Now there are enough of us that have mothers, fathers, grandparents, and relatives that have it and we are beginning to get worried that we do not have the knowledge to match our worry.

We see a sterling performance by somebody like Joanne Woodward that brings it vividly into our homes on television. I suppose what makes me so darned mad is we sit there, we cry and we weep over our loved ones on an individual basis but we are not willing to commit ourselves on a matter of national policy to doing away with ignorance, doing away with disease, and doing away with homelessness. Unfortunately, in this business of taking care of our fellow man, it is more than a quarter and a tin cup on a street corner. But we equate, thanks to the rhetoric of certain individuals in this Nation, anything in terms of financial help for our neighbor as being some form of welfare and never being able to make it on their own.

I am not coming off this floor—and I want it to be known that there may be amendments on abortion, school prayer, and other social issues. Fine, we will go ahead and fight those battles here. It is a big waste of time as far as I am concerned. If that is what people want, that is what people are going to get. I know one thing. I do not know whether a prayer in school is going to save any souls or not. But I have had brought home forcefully to me that at least 10,000 people can live 6 extra months, and I am not coming off the floor of the U.S. Senate until I have the money to see that this happens.

We can have all the Gramm-Rudman laws, budget allocations and whatever have you. Our business is to see the health needs go where nobody else gives it. The job of this particular subcommittee is to ascertain that when matters of tragedy affect each American, his government is there, that it no longer is an individual effort by some lonely, lonely person, but rather that we exhibit the strength of the United States through the compassion of the United States. And no more talk as to who wants to do what about drugs, who wants to do what about education, who wants to do what about safety, and who wants to do what about the elderly. No more talk, especially in this political year. Put up or shut up. It is as simple as that as far as the nation is concerned just as it is insofar as our individuals are concerned.

How many times a week do we hear, and as I get older I hear it more and more as we pay attention to the afflictions of family and friends, there but for the grace of God go I. If you have your health you have everything. It is a great individual sentiment, but it has yet to be evidenced in the budgets of the Nation.

Mr. President, again I want to pay a special tribute to my good friend, BILL PROXMIRE. I look forward to his remarks. At the conclusion of his remarks, I will ask for a quorum call in the hopes that might encourage any of those who care to come to the floor to offer amendments to do so. But during that quorum call I will ask to meet with the distinguished ranking member, Mr. PROXMIRE, so that we might go further into detail on the matter relating to the AZT treatment for AIDS, and so that we discuss an amendment to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Connecticut or any others that care to participate on that subject.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PROXMIRE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, first I want to congratulate my friend, the chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services Subcommittee, for a superb statement. I regret all Members of the Senate were not present when this excellent statement was delivered, one of the most moving statements I have heard, and I have been here a long, long time—29 years. It was right in the tradition of Lister Hill, Warren Magnuson, John Fogarty, David Flood, and I might say without any exaggeration, in the tradition of Franklin Roosevelt, John Kennedy, and Lyndon Johnson, it was a superb statement. I do not know anybody in the many years I have served here, Democratic or Republican, who has a more sincere, deep conviction that we must do more to meet our obligation to the poor, to the disabled, to the ill, to the addicted, to the illiterate. You know the causes that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut spoke for are not popular causes. In fact, some of them are unpopular causes. People do not have much sympathy for people who are addicted to drugs, too little sympathy. They do not have much sympathy for people who have AIDS because very often they are people who have been drug addicts or homosexuals. But it really is something, it is really moving to have a man of the stature of LOWELL WEICKER stand up on the floor and speak with such eloquence and such feeling. And I might say with such power because he has been able to do something about it and he wants to do more, and I want to do all I can to help him.

Mr. President, the Labor-HHS-Education appropriation bill for fiscal year 1987 as reported represents an honest and painful compromise between competing pressures. It funds a number of programs the President wanted to terminate and increases appropriations for many other programs far above the amounts requested in the President's budget. In fact, the bill as a whole exceeds the administration's budget request by a whopping $8.5 billion and in the area of discretionary spending, the only spending the Appropriations Committee truly can control, the bill busts the President's budget by $5.7 billion.

On the other hand, many members of the Senate Appropriations Committee felt that we did not adequately fund some programs. For example, in full committee, a number of members expressed concern over our decision to freeze funding for State unemployment insurance offices in accordance with the assumptions made in the budget resolution. Others felt we should have provided more support for math-science education. These decisions were necessary if we were to come within our budget resolution ceiling.

In any event, the bill before us today provides a grand total of $113.6 billion for all programs with $34.6 billion—about 30 percent of the total—being for discretionary programs. The committee has recommended sizable increases over the President's budget estimates for student financial assistance, $1.4 billion, and for the National Institutes of Health [NIH], $1 billion. Of course, several of the administration's estimates for student financial assistance assumed significant changes in the underlying authorizations for the various student aid programs—changes that were never enacted. The President's budget would have cut NIH funding by about 3.5 percent while the committee's recommendation would increase NIH spending by approximately 15 percent.

Among the programs proposed for termination that the committee has continued to fund are health professions education activities, community services block grants, two student financial assistance programs, graduate and international education, mental health clinical training, and community support programs.

As my colleagues know, we are faced with the prospect of a 7.6-percent across-the-board sequestration under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act if we are unable to make significant cuts in individual bills as they come to the floor. This means we have to take an uncompromising look at all appropriations legislation, including the Labor-HHS-Education bill. Frankly, this is a very tough bill to cut because it deals with programs that touch so many people in need. Furthermore, it has taken some sharp whacks in committee. However, I am prepared to support efforts here on the floor today to make further cuts in the bill because this is the only way we are going to come to grips with our horrendous deficit problem.

In closing, Mr. President, I want to again congratulate Chairman WEICKER. Chairman WEICKER has done his usual masterful job of walking a very tough line between need and cost. The bill before us today is only a partial reflection of the many, many hours he and his fine staff have spent in an effort to produce a document that is fiscally and socially responsible.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WEICKER addressed the Chair.

THE DANILOFF ARREST

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, all Senators, Republican and Democrat, are outraged at the totally unjustified arrest of the American journalist, Nicholas Daniloff, by the Soviet Union on trumped-up charges of espionage. Whether this was in retaliation for the United States arrest of Gennadi Zakharov, who was a Soviet spy employed at the United Nations, or whether it is a Soviet maneuver by the KGB in some kind of geopolitical war of nerves, the fact is that this unwarranted detention endangers United States-Soviet relations and must be terminated at once before further damage is done.

We are going to hear calls from some who say we should exchange Zakharov for Nicholas Daniloff. I would be totally opposed to that. If we set a precedent where we exchange a spy caught by the United States for Mr. Daniloff, then every time we catch a Soviet spy, some American journalist or American business person or American tourist is at risk in the Soviet Union because they may be picked up for a spy swap.

There are others who feel that because of the Daniloff arrest, progress toward real arms control negotiations—the Reagan-Gorbachev summit and the discussions between the foreign ministers—should also be derailed. This, I think, would also be a colossal mistake. We must go forward in the nuclear arms control talks in our own security interests as well as the interests of the rest of the world. The Daniloff arrest should not be the cause to torpedo these talks. But there is a way the United States can bring pressure on the Soviet Union. In fact, the United States must bring pressure. We cannot let this matter continue.

I have written, along with the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] to Secretary Shultz, first saying that we strongly support his efforts and the efforts of the President to secure the immediate release of Nicholas Daniloff from Soviet custody.

We also say that the President and the Secretary of State could bring pressure on the Soviet Union by a rapid implementation of the Leahy-Cohen law. Let me describe that legislation. That is an amendment that the distinguished Senator from Maine and I offered on the State Department authorization last year. It was accepted by the Senate and the House and signed into law by the President of the United States. Senator COHEN and I did this for a very specific reason: The Soviet Union has always had a 3-to-2 ratio over us in diplomats. The Soviets have far more people with diplomatic immunity in the United States than we have Americans with diplomatic immunity in the Soviet Union. Senator COHEN, because of his long experience on the Armed Services Committee and the Intelligence Committee, I because of my role on the Intelligence Committee, know that when the FBI publicly states that 35 percent or more of Soviet diplomats here are KGB agents, that is factual.

We have something of a good news-bad news situation here. The good news is that the FBI can identify most of the KGB agents; the bad news is that there are so many of them there is precious little the FBI can do about it.

We intended in our legislation to bring down the number of Soviets with diplomatic immunity in this country to parity with the U.S. diplomats in the U.S.S.R. At least let us be on a level playing field.

As I said, the Leahy-Cohen amendment passed and became law. However, the State Department plans to reach this equivalence over 3 years by increasing the number of American diplomats in the Soviet Union, without any reductions in Soviet diplomats here. I much prefer, and I daresay the distinguished Senator from Maine agrees, that we also lower the number of Soviets with diplomatic immunity in the United States.

So we are urging President Reagan and Secretary Shultz to begin implementing Leahy-Cohen at once if Daniloff is not released, and let's not take 3 years to do it.

This action would give useful leverage to the administration in seeking Mr. Daniloff's release without disrupting overall United States-Soviet relations, especially the talks now underway on arms control and on preparations for a summit.

Senator COHEN and I suggest that the pace and manner of implementation of Leahy-Cohen, including the proportion between reductions in Soviet personnel here compared to increases in American officials in the Soviet Union, be directly affected by the Soviet treatment of Mr. Daniloff—let's put the pressure on the Soviets, make them understand the way we carry out Leahy-Cohen and the speed with which we do it will be directly related to how rapidly Mr. Daniloff is released. The Secretary of State could begin expelling Soviet diplomats at an escalating rate until Mr. Daniloff is freed. This would also move us more rapidly toward the overall goal of numerical equivalence.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that a copy of the letter Senator COHEN and I sent to Secretary Shultz on this matter be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE SHULTZ,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: We want first to emphasize our strong support for your efforts to secure the immediate release of Nicholas Daniloff from Soviet custody. His arrest on trumped-up charges of spying is an outrage and must be urgently resolved before it irretrievably damages U.S.-Soviet relations and disrupts the arms control talks now underway. If it continues to escalate, the Daniloff matter could jeopardize the chances for a Summit which could lead to a breakthrough toward a new arms reductions agreement.

As you know, last year Congress enacted and the President signed into law an amendment requiring the implementation of numerical equivalence between the sizes of the U.S. and Soviet diplomatic and consular presences in each other's country. We believe this requirement could be used to exert pressure on the Soviet Union to secure the release of Mr. Daniloff, and we urge your serious consideration of this approach.

At present, the executive branch plans to implement the numerical equivalence requirement over an extended period of time, three years or more. We suggest you consider informing Soviet authorities that the implementation will commence immediately, and the pace and manner of implementation, including the proportion between reductions in Soviet diplomats here and increases of American diplomats in the Soviet Union, will be directly affected by Soviet actions regarding Mr. Daniloff. In other words, how quickly we reach equivalence and how many Soviet diplomats will be reduced will not be determined by how quickly the Soviet Union frees Mr. Daniloff.

Mr. Secretary, as after the KAL 007 tragedy, there will be strong demands in Congress for immediate, and perhaps extreme, measures against the Soviet Union. Such demands may even include disruption of the current talks in preparation for a Summit and for a new strategic arms reductions agreement. The suggestion we offer, if acted upon immediately, could defuse such pressures and prevent more serious damage to U.S.-Soviet relations, while increasing pressure on the Soviet Union to release Mr. Daniloff.

Be assured, Mr. Secretary, that we stand ready to do anything we can to be of assistance.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM S. COHEN.
PATRICK LEAHY.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the case of the Soviet spy, Gennadi Zakharov, also leads me to suggest to the distinguished majority leader that despite the enormous agenda we have for this month, there is another pending measure whose quick adoption would enable the Senate to take strong action against Soviet spying in the United States, while at the same time sending a powerful signal to the Soviet Union that we will not be intimidated or deterred by gross and illegal reprisals such as the seizure of Mr. Daniloff. That, of course, is the bill S. 1773 which Senator COHEN and I introduced last October, a bill to extend the principle of numerical equivalence to the sizes of the Soviet and United States missions to the United Nations in New York. In floor statements on October 18, 1985, explaining the bill in detail, we pointed out that the Soviet U.N. mission in New York has over 300 officials while the next largest, the United States has only 130. The FBI publicly estimates that at least 30 to 40 percent of these Soviet U.N. officials are intelligence officers.

Mr. President, S. 1773 was adopted by the Intelligence Committee as part of the fiscal year 1987 intelligence authorization bill, with certain changes. It was reviewed on sequestial referral by the Judiciary and Foreign Relations Committees, without objection or further change.

I ask unanimous consent to reintroduce S. 1773 with the changes incorporated by the Intelligence Committee to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be star printed.

Mr. LEAHY. I also ask unanimous consent that the analysis of this legislation in the committee report on S. 2477, the fiscal year 1987 intelligence authorization bill, be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to add Senator ANDREWS as a cosponsor of S. 1773.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, in conclusion, the distinguished Senator from Maine and I initially looked at these imbalances in diplomatic representation from the point of view of controlling Soviet espionage in this country. Now we have an added dimension, the totally unacceptable behavior of the Soviets toward Mr. Daniloff. There is not one shred of truth in their claim that Nicholas Daniloff is an American spy, an American agent. Perhaps they were prompted by the arrest of Gennadi Zakharov. Perhaps they were prompted by some who wanted to derail arms talks. I have no idea. But I do know that no American journalist, no American business person, no American tourist is safe from similar treatment unless the United States is willing to act in a very strong, forthright fashion. I believe President Reagan in his statements and in his actions has handled this matter perfectly correctly and I applaud him for it. Senator COHEN and I had tried to express a nonpartisan message of our concern. I think now we demonstrate the seriousness of the Leahy-Cohen amendment and at the same time bring pressure to bear to free this American citizen being held in a Soviet jail without any justification.

Mr. President, I see my distinguished colleague from Maine on the floor, Senator COHEN. I want to yield to him in a moment. Before I do, I applaud him for the kind of work he has done in this area. His counsel on the Intelligence Committee has been extremely important. The knowledge that he has gained on the Armed Service Committee has also been so important to us. One of the things I will regret when my term on the Intelligence Committee runs out is that I will not be serving on that committee with the Senator from Maine, but I have benefited by his service there, as have all of us. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

SOVIET MISSION AT THE UNITED NATIONS

Section 602 expresses the policy of Congress that the number of Soviet nationals admitted to the United States to serve as members of the Soviet Missions at the United Nations (SMUN) shall not substantially exceed the number of U.S. personnel who serve as members of the U.S. Mission at the United Nations. The U.S. government can, of course, easily increase the U.S. staff available for work in connection with activities at U.N. Headquarters by assigning personnel from Washington on temporary duty, and therefore it is not practicable to seek absolute equivalence between the size of the U.S. and Soviet missions. For purposes of this section, the number of Soviet personnel at the SMUN would substantially exceed the number of American personnel at the USUN if it were one-third or more greater than the annual average number of U.S. personnel permanently assigned to the U.S. Mission to the U.N. or its specialized agencies in New York City.

The President could continue to admit a greater number of Soviets than allowed under this policy, but only if he determined that such admission of Soviet nationals would be in the interests of the United States. In the event a greater number continued to be admitted, the Secretary of State would be obliged to transmit to the intelligence and foreign relations committees of the Senate and House of Representatives six months after enactment and every six months thereafter a report setting forth the number of Soviet nationals admitted during the previous six-month period and a description of their duties with the SMUN. Furthermore, the Secretary of State and Attorney General are requested to prepare a report within six months of enactment of this section setting forth a plan to ensure compliance with the policy that the number of members of the SMUN not substantially exceed the number of members of the U.S. Mission.

The staff of the SMUN for purposes of this section include all members of the mission included in the definition of the term "members of the mission" in Article 1(b) of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, done April 18, 1961—i.e., the head of the mission and the members of the staff of the mission, including the members of the diplomatic staff, of the administrative and technical staff and of the service staff. This is to make clear that, in implementing this section, the State Department in the computation of the number of members of the SMUN must include all its personnel.

A mission of a country to the United Nations includes all the missions of such country to the U.N. in New York City and includes missions in New York City to specialized agencies of the U.N. In the case of the Soviet Union, the SMUN specifically includes the missions to the United Nations of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Byelorussian Socialist Republic and the Ukrainian Socialist Republic.

A key part of the Soviet official presence in the United States is the large staff of the Soviet mission to the United Nations (SMUN) in New York City. The SMUN currently has a staff of some 295, about 260 of which are assigned to the primary Soviet mission and the others to the missions of the so-called Ukrainian and Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republics. This is in addition to the more than 300 Soviet citizens who work for the U.N. Secretariat in New York. Combined with other categories of Soviet representatives—press correspondents, commercial representatives, exchange scholars and the like—this adds up to well over 600 Soviets currently assigned to the New York area, in addition to their families.

Counterintelligence specialists, especially in the FBI, say that the SMUN in New York City is one of the chief havens for Soviet spies in the United States. With its large staff, the SMUN provides a major operational center for the KGB and GRU in their activities throughout the United States.

The Soviet mission greatly exceeds the size of other delegations to the United Nations. The next largest is the U.S. mission with a staff of about 130. China is third with a total of 125. All other missions to the United Nations—including many countries with extensive activities there—are well below this.

Not only does the size of the Soviet mission greatly exceed the others, but its structure differs as well. The SMUN has a bloated "support" staff of 120, many of whom do not have duties directly related to the United Nations. In fact, the United States Government has little official information on the nature of the activities pursued by the Soviets at their mission to the United Nations. The Soviets provide only the sketchiest information about the identities of personnel being sent to the SMUN, their positions in the mission, and their duties with respect to the United Nations.

The FBI believes that as with other Soviet organizations in the United States, more than one-third of the Soviet personnel at their U.N. mission—at least 100 people—are professional intelligence officers.

The chief damage of this large intelligence component is espionage and other clandestine collection by the Soviets of defense, science and technology, and national security information within the United States. Their large presence at the United Nations also provides the Soviets a great opportunity to attempt to recruit foreign officials at the United Nations as their agents.

It is extremely difficult for the FBI to cope with the large number of Soviet officials and their family members in New York City—over 800 people. Operational conditions for the FBI in New York are poor. The FBI has difficulty getting its best agents to work in New York due to the high cost of living in the area. As a result, the FBI cannot effectively monitor the activities of all the Soviet officials stationed in New York in one capacity or another. If Soviet espionage is to be controlled, there must be substantial reduction in the size of the Soviet U.N. mission.

Chairman Durenberger and Vice Chairman Leahy, in a statement to the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on October 22, 1985, indicated that the Committee's ongoing review of counter-intelligence and security problems had revealed that a key element in reducing the occurrence of espionage in the U.S. is reduction and restriction of the hostile intelligence presence in the U.S. For the most part, foreign intelligence officers in the U.S. operate under the cover of foreign diplomatic establishments and other official or quasi-autonomous entities controlled by foreign governments.

Members of the Intelligence Committee have been active in recent years in limiting the hostile intelligence presence in the U.S.

The Huddleston-Leahy Amendment to the Fiscal Year 1984 Intelligence Authorization bill declared the policy of Congress to be that the numbers and treatment of diplomatic officials from countries engaged in intelligence activities against the U.S. should not exceed the equivalent numbers and conditions of American officials assigned to those countries. The Leahy-Cohen Amendment to the Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987 Foreign Relations Authorization Act further established in statute that with respect particularly to the Soviet Union, the number of Soviet diplomatic and consular personnel admitted to the U.S. shall not substantially exceed the equivalent number of U.S. personnel in the Soviet Union. The Roth Amendment to the same Act authorized the Office of Foreign Missions of the State Department to regulate the travel of all U.N. employees outside the U.N. Headquarters District and in general directed the State Department to apply the same restrictions to U.N. employees as are applied to the foreign missions of their home countries.

Section 602 derives from S. 1773, a bill to limit the size of the SMUN. This bill was originally introduced by Senators Leahy and Cohen, and has nineteen additional Senate co-sponsors. The bill to limit the size of the SMUN was a logical successor to the earlier Leahy-Cohen bill on diplomatic equivalence and reciprocity with the Soviet Union. This is because by far the largest Soviet official establishments in the U.S. are the Soviet embassy and consulate, currently at 320 persons, and the Soviet mission to the United Nations.

The combination of these two measures will greatly impair the ability of the Soviet Union to conduct human intelligence operations in the U.S. As Stanislav Levchenko, a former high level officer in the KGB who defected several years ago, stated recently (Washington Times, Oct. 1, 1985):

"The most practical means of disrupting KGB operations in America is to require parity in the number of Soviet diplomats in the United States and American diplomats in the Soviet Union, and to limit drastically the size and operations of the huge Soviet mission to the United Nations.

"If such steps lead to reduction of 100 or more Soviet officials, KGB activities in the United States would be seriously damaged. The KGB would lose many officers who otherwise would be handling active cases. But Moscow still would need to maintain contact with various offices of the U.S. government. So more of the remaining officials would be occupied with legitimate diplomatic activities, rather than with espionage."

On March 7, 1986, the State Department announced that it would require the Soviet Union to reduce the number of personnel at the SMUN from 275 to 170 by April 1, 1988. The Department has indicated that if the Soviets do not comply voluntarily with the order, then the Department will proceed to implement it through denials of new requests for admission to the United States of members of the SMUN. In taking this action, the State Department was acting on a mandate developed by the Administration through the National Security Council.

Enactment of Section 602 remains necessary even after the recent action of the State Department. As an administrative measure the State Department decision is subject to modification in the future. Over the years, a large number of Soviets have been permitted to enter the U.S. as diplomats and consular officers, members of the SMUN, representatives assigned to quasi-nongovernmental entities such as trade associations and press bureaus, and visiting officials. It is therefore, desirable to apply definite statutory limitations on such admissions whenever possible. In the case of the SMUN, there is no difficulty in establishing reasonable limits on its size, vis-a-vis and U.S. Mission, by requiring that the size of the SMUN be substantially equivalent to that of the U.S. Mission, taking into account that as a result of the special circumstances, the size of the SMUN may be considered substantially equivalent to that of the U.S. Mission provided it does not exceed it by more than one-third.

The clear authority of the U.S. to take such an action on national security grounds rest largely on previous Congressional attention to this matter. Specifically (as explained in greater length below), Congress adopted legally binding reservations to both of the principal international agreements governing the status of the U.N. and national missions to it in the United States. These reservations were designed to preserve the U.S. right to protect its national security through reasonable limitations on the privileges of the U.N. organization and national missions to the U.N.

The basic principles governing the obligations of the United States toward the United Nations and national missions to the organization are the general Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations—the general convention—adopted in 1946 but not ratified by the United States until 1970, and the agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America Regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations—the headquarters agreement—adopted by joint resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives in 1947.

Neither of these agreements, as submitted to the Congress, contained explicit provisions permitting the United States to restrict the activities of the U.N. organization or the national missions to the United Nations based on national security grounds. But Congress, in approving the agreements, adopted legally binding reservations to both the general convention and the headquarters agreement preserving U.S. rights to protect its security. Section 6 of Public Law 80-357 which adopted the headquarters agreement, states: "Nothing in this agreement shall be construed as in any way diminishing, abridging, or weakening the right of the United States to safeguard its own security."

The U.S. Government has specifically maintained, both in principle and through its actions, that section 6 permits the U.S. Government to control the entry of foreign nationals into the United States in connection with the United Nations, including not only national missions to the United Nations but also employees and invitees of the United Nations itself. A valuable collection of materials on the development of U.S. policy in this regard is contained on pages 195-312 of the State Department publication, "Foreign Relations of the United States 1952-1954," volume III, United Nations affairs (1979).

The claim has been advanced from time to time that the U.S. may act against the admission of particular persons to the U.N. or national missions to the U.N., but not with respect to the overall size of missions. As host country for U.N. Headquarters, however, the U.S. retains the inherent power (as well as the legal authority arising from Congressionally-mandated reservations to the pertinent international agreements) to regulate such missions when their size and the conduct of their personnel raise legitimate national security concerns. The State Department has now agreed to this proposition through its recent action.

The key issue is the principle of reasonableness in interpreting the responsibilities of the U.S. Government under the general convention and the headquarters agreement. The agreements simply cannot be read to prevent the United Sates from taking reasonable measures to protect its national security by refusing to tolerate an abnormally large mission serving as a base for highly damaging espionage. There are an extraordinary number of Soviet officials assigned to the SMUN, many of whom appear too highly qualified for their official work as janitors, groundkeepers, and the like. The United States clearly has the right under our agreements concerning the United Nations to take an overall look at this situation and put restraints on the size of the SMUN that would ensure that it remains reasonable in light of its structure and legitimate activities at the United Nations.

Further information concerning the legal situation on limiting the size of the SMUN can be found among the materials printed in the Congressional Record at the time the original bill S. 1773 was introduced. (See Cong. Rec., October 18, 1985, pp. 28074-28085.)

Registration of Agents of Certain Foreign Governments

Section 603 amends 18 U.S.C. 951, which makes it a criminal offense for an agent of a foreign government to fail to register with the Attorney General. Current law exempts diplomats and other officials as well as one engaged in a "legal commercial transaction." Section 603 would narrow the exemptions by adding new subsection (e), which would require registration by those engaged in commercial transactions who are agents of the Eastern bloc nations, specifically, the Soviet Union, East Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Bulgaria, Romania, or Cuba, or those who have been convicted of espionage or export law violations.

The section derives from S. 1900, which was introduced by Senator Roth (for himself and Senators Nunn and Cohen) on December 2, 1985. S. 1900 would have amended the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA), which, like 18 U.S.C. Section 951, requires that agents of foreign nationals register with the Attorney General. (FARA likewise exempts diplomatic and other officials and those engaged in commercial transactions.) Senator Roth, as Chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, held hearings and heard testimony that commercial entities are regularly used as fronts by Soviets and their bloc allies. Current reporting statutes are intended to provide the Government with information about the activities of foreign agents. But they impose no such requirement on Soviet and Soviet-bloc businesses or even persons convicted of espionage violations. While those businesses are ostensibly engaged in non-political activity, it is common knowledge that the businesses are used as cover for espionage operations. S. 1900 was intended to provide information to the Government to enable it to protect itself and its citizens from the activities of agents of hostile foreign powers.

Following discussions with the Department of Justice, Senator Roth agreed that because there are a number of reporting statutes, a better approach would be to amend the Code section directed at those engaged in espionage.[1] Accordingly, Senator ROTH developed an alternative proposal, now included as Section 603. The section accomplishes the two goals of S. 1900—requiring the registration of those engaged in business but working for Soviet bloc nations and also those previously convicted of espionage violations—but preserves the distinction between registration requirements for political representatives and spies.

Section 951 of title 18, U.S.C. currently requires prior notification to the Attorney General by any person who acts in the United States as an agent of a foreign government, with four exemptions spelled out in subsection (d), which defines "agent of a foreign government" to mean: "an individual who agrees to operate within the United States subject to the direction or control of a foreign government of official, except that such term does not include—

"(1) a duly accredited diplomatic or consular officer of a foreign government, who is so recognized by the Department of State;

"(2) any officially and publicly acknowledged and sponsored official or representative of a foreign government;

"(3) any officially and publicly acknowledged and sponsored member of the staff of, or employee of, an officer, official, or representative described in paragraph (1) or (2), who is not a United States citizen; or

"(4) any person engaged in a legal commercial transaction."

Under current law, the Attorney General is authorized to promulgate rules and regulations establishing requirements for notification. In addition, the Attorney General is required, upon receipt, promptly to transmit one copy of each notification statement filed under section 951 to the Secretary of State for such comment and use as the Secretary of State may determine to be appropriate from the point of view of the foreign relations of the United States. Failure of the Attorney General to do so is not a bar to prosecution under section 951. Violations are punishable by a fine or not more than $75,000 or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.

Section 603 of this bill amends section 951 of title 18 by adding a new subsection (e) which provides that, notwithstanding the exemption in paragraph (d)(4) for persons engaged in legal commercial transactions, a person engaged in such a transaction shall be considered an agent of a foreign government if such person agrees to operate within the United States subject to the direction or control of a foreign government or official and such person meets one of two criteria.

Mr. COHEN. I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding. If he continues to make such overly generous remarks about me, I will push for an amendment to allow him to continue on the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Vermont in his statement concerning the outrageous conduct of the Soviet Union. The Soviets have clearly engaged in an act of thuggery. They have demonstrated their contempt, not only for the rule of law but for the acceptable standards of international behavior.

One might have expected, for example, that had the United States apprehended one of their professional spies, they might seek to retaliate in some way by apprehending a comparable agent operating in their country. They chose not to do so but, rather, sought to send a message of some sort to the members of the Western press by way of example not to ask questions, not to seek information, not to print the truth, not to question too aggressively at press conferences. They certainly have accomplished the chilling effect that they sought to instill. I recall Mr. Gromyko made the statement about Mr. Gorbachev. He said, "He has a nice smile, but he has teeth of iron." Well, those teeth of iron, unfortunately, have turned into iron bars for Mr. Daniloff as he remains imprisoned in a KGB jail, the victim of a state-sponsored kidnaping. Now, I do not know that we can ever prevent this from taking place; that whatever we do in this Chamber, in this country will have much of an impact upon Soviet behavior. Normally, they react by simply stonewalling it or becoming even more repressive than we have witnessed to date. We certainly cannot prevent them from spying in this country. We cannot prevent them from arresting innocent citizens, kidnaping them and holding them hostage for their own cynical political purposes, but we can make it more difficult for them to operate in this country. That was the very purpose of the Leahy-Cohen proposal that was passed by the Senate and the House and has become law. The purpose was to make it more difficult for them to operate in this country.

I became concerned about it when, as a member of the Intelligence Committee, I learned that we had more Soviet citizens working in our Embassy in Moscow than we had Americans working in the American Embassy in Moscow. That was on the heels of the major disclosure that they were able to bug our typewriters, so that they were having access to information before we had access to our own information from our own diplomats.

I will not take the time to explain other methods they have used to compromise information we have acquired, information which they obtained by bugging, wiretapping, and engaging in other types of activities in their country against our diplomats. We cannot prevent them from doing that.

We sought a rough equivalence, something like with arms control, a rough equivalence of diplomatic representation. It should be considered an outrage that they should have more Soviets working in their Embassy here than we have in our Embassy in Moscow. We should reduce the number of people they have here or substantially increase the number of personnel we have working in the Soviet Union.

The agreement was made, as Senator LEAHY mentioned, to implement this rough equivalence within 3 years. We should implement it now, with no further delay. That may cause hardship to our own personnel. That may cause hardships to our own operations. Nonetheless, I think we have to establish the principle that we want rough equivalence. We want fewer of them or more of us, in order to have essential equivalence.

The same is true with respect to the United States and Soviet missions to the United Nations. As Senator LEAHY pointed out, the Soviets have a better than 2 to 1 advantage in representation in New York alone—situated right in the heart of a major city of this country.

I had the opportunity to appear on a major network program with a representative of the Soviet Union. He said the reason they needed so many Soviets working at the United Nations was that they were actively promoting peaceful initiatives in that body. He apparently suffered a momentary case of amnesia. I did not hear the word "Afghanistan" come up as a part of the peaceful mission being promoted in the United Nations.

Nonetheless, if you follow that line of reasoning, the more peaceful missions they promote and propagate at the United Nations, the more personnel they are entitled to; so they could have 400, 500, or 600, as long as they continue to generate that kind of paperwork.

We understand that a good portion of those people assigned to work at the United Nations are in fact engaged in active espionage. Our FBI is certainly understaffed, with inadequate resources to contain and follow up on those activities.

Senator LEAHY and I have insisted that we have a numerical equivalence in the size of the Soviet and United States missions in New York. This is important because the activities have become clear and patent to every one of us who serves in this body. We have to take action and take it now.

This may not change the situation for Mr. Daniloff. I am not sure that anything we do will change that situation, until the Soviets realize that it is against their interests to pursue this kind of conduct.

I hope, notwithstanding my concern about Mr. Daniloff's safety and the security and well-being of his family, that this flagrant violation of the individual rights in that country of one of our citizens will not set a precedent for arranging for a swap. Mr. Daniloff is not a spy.

[1] FARA was originally aimed at subversives and propagandists, and required that all representatives of foreign governments register. Over time, it has been limited to those who attempt to influence public opinion or government action. Other laws, including 18 U.S.C. 951 and 50 U.S.C. 85-1, have focused on subversives and those engaged in espionage.

In fact, one of the ironies is that he has presented testimony to the Senate Intelligence Committee about his insistence that under no circumstances should the press be used for espionage activities.

Nonetheless, I think we have to at least set the record straight. We should insist upon this numerical equivalence, and we should implement the law that is on the books now, and not 3 years from now. I join the Senator from Vermont in urging the State Department to act now.

Mr. President, the kidnaping of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff by the Soviet Government is a chilling reminder of the dangers faced by innocent newsmen trying to do their job in a repressive nation. Further, it is a dramatic demonstration of the power of a state to hold hostage an individual who has committed no crime, but who has the misfortune of having been chosen to serve as a pawn in a political game being played by that State's leaders.

The reprehensible action on the part of the Soviet state shows clearly how important it was that we passed the resolution we considered yesterday. Moreover, it reinforces my belief that we must, at the earliest possible point, implement the two pieces of legislation Senator LEAHY and I have introduced calling for a reduction in the Soviet presence in the United States.

Nicholas Daniloff is imprisoned in the Soviet Union today simply because Soviet leaders were looking for a hostage they could trade for their accused spy, Gennadi Zakharov, who had been posing as a U.N. official in New York City at the time of his arrest on espionage charges. There is, unfortunately, precedent for the Soviet action. Other innocent Americans, both journalists and businessmen, have been taken prisoner by the Soviets in the past and held until Soviet spies were swapped for them.

It is not within our power to stop the Soviet Union or any other nation from using such cynical means of achieving their ends. We can, however, make it more difficult for them.

That is the purpose of the two pieces of legislation Senator LEAHY and I have sponsored. The first measure, which was passed by the Senate in the last session, calls for essential equivalence in the consular and embassy staffs of our two countries. At present, the Soviets hold a wide edge in diplomatic presence, and the FBI has estimated that at least a quarter of all so-called Soviet diplomats are, in fact, engaged in espionage activities.

At present, the executive branch plans to implement the numerical equivalence requirement over an extended period of time, 3 years or more. Senator LEAHY and I have urged Secretary of State Shultz, in a letter we sent yesterday, to consider informing Soviet authorities that the implementation will commence immediately, and that the pace and manner of implementation, including the proportion between reductions in Soviet diplomats here and increases of American diplomats in the Soviet Union, will be directly affected by Soviet actions regarding Mr. Daniloff. In other words, the timeliness with which the Soviet Union frees Mr. Daniloff will have a direct impact on how quickly we reach equivalence and how many Soviet diplomats will be reduced.

Our other initiative, S. 1773, would apply the principle of numerical equivalence in the sizes of the Soviet and United States missions to the United Nations in New York. The measure has been approved unanimously by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence as a part of the Intelligence Authorization bill and has been reviewed on sequential referral by the Foreign Relations and Judiciary Committees without change or objection.

This measure is ready for consideration by the full Senate and will, I hope, receive early action. Senate adoption of S. 1773 could, we believe, send a strong message to the Soviet Union that the Senate is determined to act vigorously in support of the President in controlling and reducing the huge number of Soviet intelligence officers operating in the United States out of the bloated Soviet U.N. mission. It would provide a statutory basis for the action taken recently by the President to reduce the size of the Soviet U.N. mission by some 100 personnel.

Passage of the Dole-Byrd resolution yesterday, early approval of the U.N. mission equivalence legislation, and accelerated implementation of the diplomatic equivalence law will provide valuable tools to the FBI as it attempts to control Soviet espionage in the United States. More important, these actions can have a salutary effect as we seek to gain freedom for Nicholas Daniloff and to allow this innocent man to rejoin his wife and family. They can also demonstrate forcefully to the Soviets that we will not countenance inexcusable and cynical actions of the sort represented by the kidnaping of Nicholas Daniloff.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] be added as a cosponsor of S. 1773.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANTI-DRUG CAMPAIGN CHECK-OFF

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the anti-drug campaign obviously has, and will continue to have, overwhelming support of the American people. There are differences of opinion on some of the specifics, but the support for the basic goals is very clear.

TAX RETURN CHECK-OFF CAN PROVIDE A WAY FOR AMERICANS TO SHOW ACTIVE SUPPORT

But even when you have a program that has great bipartisan support, there always is the problem of where you get the funds to implement the program.

A lot of us have great ideas but when it comes to paying for it we seem to be lacking in any ideas of how that might be done.

It seems to me that this is a program that deserves the active support of the public, and we need to have the active participation of the American people to assure that the campaign against illegal drugs will succeed. One way that we can enlist this participation, and at least partially fund the program is to institute a tax return check-off system.

CHECK-OFF CAN PROVIDE SIGNIFICANT FUNDS

In 1985, the latest year for which the IRS has complete data, over 80 million individual taxpayers were owed a refund on their Federal income tax. The total amount of the refunds owed to these individuals was $83 billion. That is $83 billion. If we had in effect a mechanism to allow these individuals to contribute part of their refund to help finance the antidrug campaign, and if each of these individuals contributed just $5, we would have over $400 million to fund the so-called program.

What I would anticipate is not to have a limit of $5 but have a minimum of $5. Some people may want to contribute $100, and some even more. But the $5 annual contribution by those who have refunds would raise $200 million from the American people. I think the parents, the grandparents, and the American work force would be willing to participate in this program.

The IRS expects that the number of individuals who were owed a refund for 1986 and the total amounts owed to them will be slightly higher in 1986 than in 1985. So there are even bigger opportunities. Of course, we cannot expect that all individuals who are owed a refund on their taxes will be willing to contribute to the antidrug campaign, but we can realistically expect that a significant percentage would be willing to contribute.

I think a very high percentage with a lot of education about tax time can get to the media and others to indicate that we can do this, and we can help the drug effort.

As we all know, there is a checkoff system on tax returns today—the campaign fund checkoff. This is not precisely the same as what I am proposing now since it does not involve allocation of any portion of an individual's refund. Instead, it allocates a portion of taxes already due. But it is interesting that 22 million returns were filed with the campaign fund box checked off. I am confident that at least as many individuals would be willing to allocate a small part of their refunds to fight illegal drugs in this country.

There will be all kinds of proposals. I understand the Democrats have introduced their proposal. There will be Republican proposals. There will be the administration proposal. In the final analysis, there will be a bipartisan proposal.

It seems to me one way to pay for it and one way to encourage the American people to participate is to ask them to give us $5 or $10 or $100 of the refund they might have coming. And that would do a lot to fund the program without adding to the tax burden and without adding to the Federal deficit.

It seems to me that the effort deserves such a proposal. We hope to include it in a package. I hope it will have the overwhelming support of not only the Senate and the House but also the administration.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1987

The Senate continued with the consideration of H.R. 5233.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from California.

AMENDMENT NO. 2779

(Purpose: To appropriate $30,000,000 for the Emergency Immigrant Education Program)

Mr. WILSON. I thank the distinguished manager of the bill.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments would have to be set aside before the Chair could entertain another amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendments be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from California for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] proposes an amendment numbered 2779.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 50, line 14, strike out "$138,955,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$168,955,000".

On page 50, line 18, after the word "Act" insert the following: "and $30,000,000 shall be for the Emergency Immigrant Education Program authorized by title VI of the Education Amendments of 1984".

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am offering an amendment to the pending legislation that would restore funding for the Emergency Immigrant Education Assistance Act [EIEA] to the fiscal year 1986 funding levels.

Enacted in 1984, this program has provided valuable assistance to help school districts in 31 States across the Nation to purchase special textbooks, conduct teacher training programs, construct or restore school facilities, offer guidance and counseling services, and undertake other activities to help meet the special needs of immigrant children.

In California, where about 30 to 40 percent of the immigrants entering the United States reside, there has been an influx of immigrants hailing from rural areas with subsistence economies, especially Southeast Asia.

For example, a Laotian tribe called the Hmong has relocated virtually in its entirety in the central San Joaquin Valley in my State. The Hmong's skills are limited to those they used in the subsistence farming they performed for centuries in their native country. An extremely high percentage of the Hmong are on county welfare rolls.

The task of educating the immigrant children—particularly those that have lived a near feudal existence prior to coming to America—has placed a heavy burden on many States, including California. If Federal funding for immigrant education was eliminated, over 420,000 children would be adversely affected and the valuable supplementary education services provided by State and local education agencies would be jeopardized. Indeed, absent this funding, many immigrant education programs which have already been established would face termination.

Mr. President, to teach immigrant children the English language and provide them with the necessary education to adjust to American life is both essential and practical. Well-educated children, be they immigrant or native-born, grow up to become integral members of our society and become productive.

Ours has always been a nation of immigrants. It is the source of our strength, the source of our greatest resource. The humanity we display toward newcomers to our shores is a measure of the greatness of this Nation. It has always been a matter of enlightened self-interest. This country has always opened its door to those who were willing to work, and we must not slam it on those who would seek to find, through our educational system, a means of becoming productive citizens of this Nation when we have admitted them honoring that time-honored obligation.

So, Mr. President, at this point I seek to restore that funding, because without it we are in danger of having admitted to our shores and to our communities those who will be unable to cope because of their special problems.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from California for eloquently stating the case. However, due to the scoring difficulties which we face on this bill, I have asked that we be permitted to take the matter to conference, since there is money in the House bill. If that is acceptable to the distinguished Senator from California, he has my assurance that I will do everything I can to see that moneys are provided and they are existent in the House bill.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, as I listened to the eloquent and moving opening statement of the distinguished chairman and manager of the bill, I was struck by the difficulty he is facing and the sincerity of his desire to achieve the goals that he recited. I do not think it could have been lost upon anyone, so I am by no means unsympathetic.

His assurance that he will seek to find the funding will satisfy me. I am pleased that the moneys are in the House bill. I hope the conference will find its way to a conference report that does provide this vital funding, because I think it is essential. Otherwise, we are creating an enormous problem for ourselves and for those to whom we are offering an otherwise uncertain welcome to our shores.

At this time, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California withdraws his amendment.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendments be set aside in order that I might send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2780

Purpose; To expand drug intervention studies for AIDS and reduce funding of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistant Program)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] for himself, Mr. PROXMIRE, and Mr. WILSON proposes and amendment numbered 2780.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 33, line 21, delete "$1,875,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,825,000,000".

On page 33, line 24, delete "$494,343,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$541,343,000".

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I am recommending a one time transfer of low-income/low-energy funds due to the availability of funds to the States in the Exxon overcharge case.

The transfer is to be to the National Institutes of Health for experimental drug therapy programs.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I concur in the Weicker amendment. What we are doing is making a small reduction in a program. We received a windfall from oil refunds and using savings to provide life-prolonging therapy.

I wish we did not cut any specific program to help those with AIDS. However, under the Budget Act we have no choice, as the distinguished Presiding Officer knows better than anyone else in the Senate.

The funds shift proposed by Chairman WEICKER is the best and least painful way to get the job done.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would like to voice my strong support for the amendment offered by the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor/HHS/Education, Mr. WEICKER, and the ranking minority member, Mr. PROXMIRE, which would provide $47 million in additional funding for NIH to enable all AIDS patients to obtain treatment with experimental drugs. I would also like to express my deep appreciation to the subcommittee chairman who spoke so eloquently and passionately about what this funding could mean to thousands of Americans with AIDS—life itself. Research on AIDS is progressing at such a rapid pace that every year, ever month we move closer to finding an effective treatment and, maybe, a cure.

I strongly support providing these additional funds to give each AIDS patient the opportunity to obtain an experimental drug—which may give them that extra month or year of life until an effective treatment is ultimately discovered. As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] has noted I have been in close contact with him urging that a way be found to meet these needs.

Of the $47 million to be added, $7 million would be provided for five remaining approved but unfunded treatment and evaluation units [TEC's] to conduct clinical trials of experimental drugs that have some demonstrated value in combatting the AIDS virus—HTLV-III—or that enhance the immune response.

The National Institute on Allergy and Infectious diseases [NIAID] received 29 applications from medical centers and hospitals seeking to become TEU's; 19 were approved as being scientifically meritorious but on July 1, 1986, NIAID awarded contracts to only 14 medical centers.

The majority of the 14 currently funded centers serve areas with high populations of AIDS patients—for example, Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, and Miami. It is also important, however, that people with AIDS in medium-density population areas have access to clinical trials. Three of the five unfunded centers are located in just such areas—North Carolina, Louisiana, and Minnesota.

Because I was concerned that it was extremely important to the hundreds of AIDS patients that could be served by the TEU's as well as to the scientific effort on AIDS, I contacted the subcommittee chairman in August and expressed my strong support for funding the remaining centers. Thus, I am pleased that funding for this purpose will now be included in this amendment.

Mr. President, I have also been exploring with the subcommittee chairman and my good friend and colleague from California [Mr. WAXMAN] the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment in the other body the need to establish a program of so-called satellite clinical trials that would enable all AIDS patients to receive experimental drug treatment. The majority of the additional money, $40 million, would go toward that purpose.

I have heard, as I'm sure many Senators have, about persons who have AIDS or AIDS related complex [ARC] and would want to participate in clinical trials but are unable to gain access to them. There are no AIDS treatments available except through clinical trials. Experimental drugs offer the only hope for an AIDS patient until some treatment is shown to be effective in combating AIDS. Scientists believe that one or two of the drugs now being tested, AZT or ribavirin, might be available next year. However, for many thousands of Americans, that may be too late.

The $40 million we are adding would allow satellite unit trials to be established next fiscal year. These units would work in close coordination with TEU's in administering the trials and in providing a controlled environment for patients to receive experimental drugs.

I want again to thank the subcommittee chairman and ranking minority member. Year in and year out since this terrible epidemic began, they have been steadfast supporters of efforts to combat AIDS. With this amendment, they have again shown great compassion for those suffering with AIDS.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment and ask unanimous consent that the text of my August 13 letter be placed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 13, 1986.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR LOWELL: I am writing to you in your capacity as Chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, HHS, Education, and Related Agencies and as a steadfast supporter of research and other public health efforts to combat AIDS. I congratulate the Subcommittee on agreeing to include in the FY 1987 Labor/HHS/Education appropriations bill $355 million—$131 million more than in FY 1986—for AIDS research and public health activities. This funding would provide for increased research efforts at the National Institutes of Health and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration and for more education and epidemiology at the Centers for Disease Control.

However, I would like to draw your attention to one area of funding which I believe warrants your further consideration in connection with the full Committee markup of the bill. As you know, on July 1, the National Institute on Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) awarded contracts to 14 medical centers to conduct clinical trials of experimental drugs for persons with AIDS. Carrying out these contracts will require $100 million over the next five years for these Treatment Evaluation Units (TEUs); the total first year cost is $20 million. NIAID estimates that as many as 1000 patients will be enrolled in the first 6 months.

These TEUs will test agents that have some demonstrated value in combatting the HTLV-III virus or that enhance the immune response. Agents to counter so-called opportunistic infections which afflict persons with AIDS may also be tested.

The NIAID received 29 applications from medical centers and hospitals to become TEUs. Of those, 19 were approved as being scientifically meritorious but only 14 were funded. Thus, 5 centers remain approved but will not be able to participate because of a lack of funding. The average TEU costs between $1.2 and $1.8 million per year. Thus, these 5 centers could be funded in FY 1987 for a total of approximately $6 or $7 million.

TEUs serve two purposes. First, well-designed, controlled clinical trails are critically important to the effort to defeat AIDS. The TEUs form a network to coordinate research efforts and rapidly disseminate information and results. Second, the TEUs enable greater numbers of patients with AIDS and AIDS-Related Complex (ARC) throughout the country to participate in clinical trials.

The majority of the 14 currently funded centers serve areas with high populations of AIDS patients—Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, and Miami. It is also important, however, that people with AIDS in medium-density population areas have access to clinical trials. I understand that 3 of the 5 unfunded centers are located in just such areas—North Carolina, Louisiana, and Minnesota.

I have heard, as I'm sure you have, from many persons who have AIDS or ARC and want to participate in clinical trials but are unable to gain access to them. Of course, I am gratified that a number of TEUs were established in California so that many AIDS patients there will be able to participate in clinical trials. However, people with AIDS who do not live in states like California have more difficulty finding state-of-the-art treatments. These additional TEUs would help to ease the frustration experienced by hundreds of AIDS patients who desire to participate in clinical trials but are unable to gain access to them—as well as help to speed the search for effective treatments.

Thus, I would urge that the Committee provide the $6 to $7 million needed to fund the 5 additional TEUs.

Lowell, I am hopeful that we can work together on this important matter and I look forward to your response.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment (No. 2780) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I believe the distinguished Senator from New Jersey has an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to set aside the committee amendments temporarily.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 2781

(Purpose: To appropriate $1,000,000 for special law related programs in elementary and secondary schools related to the bicentennial celebration)

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] proposes and amendment numbered 2781.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 48, line 1, strike out "$26,837,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$27,837,000".

On page 48, line 15, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000,000".

On page 48, line 20, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That of the amounts appropriated and available for activities authorized under subsection 583(b)(4) of said Act $1,000,000 shall be available for law related programs in elementary and secondary schools related to the bicentennial celebration of the Construction".

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to provide $1 million to the U.S. Department of Education to conduct educational programs in elementary and secondary schools related to the bicentennial celebration of the Constitution and Bill of Rights. I want to assure my colleagues that this amendment is budget neutral, since it reduces the appropriation for the chapter II block grant by a like amount.

Mr. President, when the word "Bicentennial" is mentioned, most Americans conjur up very fond memories of tall ships, fireworks, celebrations and festivities. In 1976, we held such a celebration of national scale on the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and Americans showed their pride in our 200 years of freedom.

Why do we as a people like to celebrate the signing of the Declaration of Independence? One hundred and twenty-seven years ago, Abraham Lincoln said,

". . . we hold this annual celebration to remind ourselves of all the good done in this process of time, of how it was done and who did it, and how we are historically connected with it; and we go from these meetings in better humor with ourselves—we feel more attached the one to the other, and more firmly bound to the country we inhabit . . ."

The Bicentennial of the Declaration of Independence gave Americans a chance to pause for a moment and reflect on the importance of the actions in 1776 and the shared values on which this Nation is based.

Mr. President, a new bicentennial will soon be upon us—the 200th anniversary of our Constitution and Bill of Rights. The bicentennial of the Constitution will give Americans another opportunity to celebrate that which binds us together as a people.

The deepest origins of our Constitution date back to the traditions of Greece and Rome. But our particular constitutional concerns for individual liberty, for the rule of law, for equal justice and for the limits to the use of government power through our system of federalism and checks and balances are, in many respects, uniquely American. Our Constitution reflects the values on which our American system of governance was based. It is my hope that this bicentennial will give all Americans an opportunity to do more than celebrate. I hope we can reflect on the values that serve to bind us together as a people.

Mr. President, I strongly believe that the forum for much of this discussion should be in our Nation's schools. Both Washington and Jefferson argued that one of the most important roles of the schools, given our pluralistic society, was to educate youth on the values that bind us together as a people. Thomas Jefferson said that "if you expect a nation to be ignorant and free, you expect what never was and never will be." He argued that a knowledgeable citizenry that accepts its civic responsibilities—responsibilities such as participation in our democratic institutions and an acceptance of the policies which promote the common good—is central to the preservation of our Nation.

One way to help achieve these lofty goals is by promoting civic education. When I use the term civic—or citizenship—education, I am referring to a number of activities that are aimed at educating students about what it means to be an American, what the rights and responsibilities of citizenship are, and how students can take greater responsibility in the actual activities of government. Civic education tries to answer the following questions: What are the legitimate forms of authority? How, in a pluralistic society, can we establish fair and uniform laws? How can we ensure due process? How can we ensure that citizens play their parts as informed and responsible members of our democratic system?

There are many other democracies in the world, but Americans believe that we are unique in our special freedoms. But as D.H. Lawrence once noted, "it is never really freedom until you positively decide what you want to be." Civic education programs in our schools should help students decide positively what they want to be—as individual citizens and collectively as a people.

Mr. President, there are a number of schools across the country that have established programs to try to meet this end. For example, in my home State of New Jersey, the Parsippany School District has established a program to help second and third graders examine the importance of the rule of law. Students discuss why laws are needed, how they are changed and why laws must be fair. The students learn, not only by discussion, but by participating in the rulemaking of the school itself. These very young students are learning about the responsibilities of being a citizen who must live by the law with some very positive results. Parsippany has witnessed a significant decline in discipline problems since the program was instituted. Why? Because students have developed a commitment to responsible behavior. They have learned to understand the importance of the rule of law—for themselves and for their community. Who benefits? Both the individual and the community at large.

Another exemplary program is going on in the Sacramento School District in California. Over 200 local attorneys and judges have volunteered for various activities, such as holding mock trials and moot courts in the schools, to show students how our judicial system tries to arrive at justice. In addition, over 1,000 high school students are working as tutors to elementary school students on citizenship education projects. The elementary school students are not the only people benefiting from these activities; the high school students, in providing this service, are helping to discharge their responsibilities to the community at large.

A third example is Long Beach, where, with the help of the Center for Civic Education, the schools are helping their young people explore the values established in our Constitution by reenacting the debates of 200 years ago between the Federalists and anti-Federalists. In addition, the Long Beach Lawyers Auxiliary is working with classes to act out real Supreme Court cases to show how conflicts are resolved at the Federal level.

Sadly, Mr. President, these exceptional programs are just that—more the exception than the rule. In some respects, I think many of our schools have lost some of their sense of mission to instill their students with a sense of values and mutual purpose that Jefferson spoke so eloquently about 200 years ago. But I believe that the bicentennial of the Constitution offers us the opportunity to remind young Americans about the rights as well as the responsibilities of citizenship. And what better vehicle for sending this message than our school system—the institution charged by Jefferson with part of the responsibility for instilling youth with this sense of mutual purpose?

And that is why today I am proposing that the U.S. Department of Education get involved in the activities of the bicentennial celebration of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Mr. President, we know that many schools are already deeply involved in a variety of activities to promote the civic competence and civic responsibilities of their students. But it is important to publicize these local efforts so that other schools can learn from them. One way to accomplish that is to search out these outstanding schools and showcase them to the rest of the Nation.

It is my hope and anticipation that the Secretary of the Department of Education will utilize these funds to complement the ongoing law related to education programs and seek out the schools in the United States that have developed outstanding programs designed to develop both civic competence and civic responsibilities among their students and help these schools showcase their programs to other schools in their geographic area. It is also my intent that the increase available in 1987 be used to enable schools to take advantage of the activities of the Bicentennial Commission so as to better utilize the additional talent which will be available, to create a greater interaction between youth and law professionals, to enable them to have a better understanding of legal processes and the importance of the Constitution.

What will this accomplish? A relatively small commitment of Federal funds—$1 million—will help disseminate information about the very best programs that our schools have developed. And the success of this entire effort can, I believe, reinforce the values that have made our particular form of democracy so vibrant and resilient.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, the amendment I have offered provides $1 million to the U.S. Department of Education to conduct educational programs in elementary and secondary schools related to the bicentennial celebration of the Constitution and Bill of Rights.

I want to assure my colleagues and distinguished chairman of the committee that this amendment is budget neutral since it reduces the appropriation for a chapter 2 block grant by a like amount.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I have no problem with this amendment. It is a shift of funds within chapter 2.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

AMENDMENT NO. 2782

(Purpose: To make certain technical corrections to H.R. 5233)

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] proposes an amendment numbered 2782.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 45, line 24, strike out "75" and insert in lieu thereof "15".

On page 50, line 12, strike out "title VI of the Education Amendments of 1984,".

On page 51, line 19, strike out "as amended by S. 2515 as reported by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on August 6, 1986," and insert in lieu thereof "as amended by H.R. 4021, as passed by the Senate on September 8, 1986,".

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendment makes technical corrections in the bill.

I ask that it be adopted.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, during the recent quorum call, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. HATFIELD, and I met to discuss the committee amendments to which the Senator from North Carolina took exception. Those committee amendments relate to abortion, busing, and prayer in public schools. The dialog related to how best to handle those matters and the dialog between those Senators and any other Senators who wish to participate is ongoing.

It is the hope of this chairman that we proceed with all other amendments to the bill at this point, with the exception of those that either directly reflect the matters referred to—busing, prayer, and abortion—or indirectly accomplish the same purpose; and that we, in effect, arrive at a resolution of those matters.

It might be that we go to a great number of votes on all of those issues. It may be that we only have one or two votes on these matters. There is no question that they will be addressed. But it was felt that the time of the Senate could be put to a better use by proceeding to all other amendments that might be pertinent to the bill at this time.

Therefore, I alert my colleagues that if they have an amendment, please bring it to the floor at this time. If their interest is reflected in the committee amendments, then I suggest that they contact either Senator HELMS or Senator HATFIELD in that regard.

I again urge my colleagues that there is no reason we should not be able to complete action on the Labor-HHS appropriations bill within the next several hours and I hope that Members who have amendments will come to the floor and offer them.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1300

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call for the quorum be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I referred earlier to the fact that the only business before us at this time, indeed the pending business before us at this time, are the committee amendments. Senator HELMS, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, was kind enough to wait in order that his colleagues might present their amendments prior to debating the committee amendments. I wish to put the Senate on notice that I intend to start debating the committee amendments within the next 15 minutes, and that if no one is on the floor with a regular amendment it is going to be too late. So those who have amendments to the bill, it would be appreciated if they would come to the floor at this time in order that they would have a chance to go ahead and present their case. Many of them seem to be very worthy amendments; others might require a colloquy. Otherwise, the managers of the bill, Senator PROXMIRE and myself, intend to move to third reading. That could very easily take place shortly. So unless there are amendments to be presented before the body, it would be my intention to start debating the first committee amendment in a matter of the next 10 minutes and I would appreciate it if staff would alert their Senators to that effect.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the chairman yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to underscore and affirm the comments made by the managers of the bill in terms of getting this bill completed as quickly as possible and for those who do have amendments to appear on the floor and present them.

Mr. President, let me just briefly outline the circumstances we are now in vis-a-vis the appropriations process. The Appropriations Committee has reported all bills to the floor. We now have them pending on the agenda with the exception of one, and that will be acted upon this week. We are facing October 1 as the deadline for the end of the fiscal year, which means in effect we will in all probability have one giant CR "continuing resolution" is what those initials stand for, to our viewing public. That is a very, very unsatisfactory way of doing the Nation's business. And yet we are forced into that by a series of circumstances which I shall not go into at this time. But let me just point out to the Senate as a whole that the continuing resolution will have to incorporate certain levels, and if the Senate is to have a voice in the development of that continuing resolution, it will have to take action on a number of these bills because they are all over here from the House of Representatives and the House of Representatives benchmark, as we call it, will prevail in the continuing resolution unless the Senate has taken some action to establish a Senate benchmark.

Now, this is fundamental for the preservation of a two-chamber legislative branch government while we are in this appropriations process. I would only point out one example of the vital importance that the Senate establish a benchmark on this particular appropriation bill. The House-passed Labor-HHS bill did not fund a number of the higher education programs, just absolutely ignored the funding of those vital higher education programs. The Senate Appropriations Committee funded them at a given level.

Now, that means simply that if we cannot get the leaders of the appropriations subcommittee on Labor-HHS into a conference with the House, or complete action on the floor, we will find ourselves entering into the development and the configuration of the continuing resolution with a severe handicap because the House has acted. The House has acted, established a very valid benchmark. Now, we have a benchmark vis-a-vis the committee, but it would strengthen our hand in the continuing resolution process to have the benchmark of full Senate action on this bill.

Let me point out again—and I do not know of anyone in this Chamber who does not like to go home and say I am a friend of education. Everyone wants to be a friend of education—you can demonstrate whether you are a true friend of education today by coming to the floor and helping us complete this bill because again let me point out the benchmark developed within the continuing resolution process does not have the funding for a number of the vital programs in education. So let us rally the friends of education to complete action on this bill.

I also want to say that it is not going to be a very easy time ahead, and we better conserve our energies on the fundamental issues that are going to confront this country in financing the Government after October 1. Now, we are going to have the opportunity to raise a lot of our very strong emotional feelings on certain issues on the continuing resolution. This is not the last train out of the station. I urge Senators who are considering amendments that may not be directly relevant to the programs within this bill to wait and handle some of those issues on the CR. Let us not encumber this bill with a lot of issues that may not necessarily be resolved here today or even in conference but only will hold up the process that is so important to develop for the continued funding of this Government.

So I commend the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Wisconsin for their diligence in pursuing this bill, but let me say that it is far beyond committee responsibility. We are really dealing here with fundamental programs that will mean the difference in the future for education amongst others as we relate to the next step of this whole appropriations process, development of the continuing resolution.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

AMENDMENT NO. 2783

(Purpose: To provide $5,000,000 of the amount available for direct student loans for the Income Contingent Pilot Demonstration projects)

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment will have to be laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that event, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment may be temporarily laid aside so that this amendment may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], for himself and Mr. PELL, proposes an amendment numbered 2783.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 53, line 9, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That of the amounts appropriated under this heading and made available for part E of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, $5,000,000 shall be available for carrying out the Income Contingent Pilot Demonstration projects in S. 1965, as passed by the Senate on June 4, 1986, and shall remain available until September 30, 1988".

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, this amendment is offered to set aside $5 million out of the funds already allocated for the National Direct Student Loan Program to carry out the income contingent pilot demonstration project, which has recently been adopted by the conferees on the Higher Education Act reauthorization. This amendment would allow the Secretary to set up pilot projects at a number of schools to test the concept of income contingent loan repayment which has been discussed by the Senate since this Senator joined the Education Subcommittee.

This new income-contingent repayment option will enable students to borrow greater amounts, while making the loan repayment burden more manageable, flexible, and as long-term as needed to accommodate individual postschool income circumstances, yet at no net cost to the Federal Government providing loan capital.

To pay for this new program, this amendment assumes that $3 million would be taken from the account for teacher cancellations. This reduction in teacher cancellation funds can be absorbed due to a recent Department of Education reestimate of funds required for this program in 1987.

The additional $2 million would come from the $8 million increase over fiscal year 1986 funding for NDSL that the Appropriations Committee included in this bill.

At this time, I would like to commend my good friend, LOWELL WEICKER, for his strong commitment to education programs on the Appropriations Committee. Over the years, his leadership in the area of education has been vital in sustaining the necessary Federal commitment to quality in education, and the bill before us today is no exception to his good work.

Mr. President, I believe this may be accepted and I yield the floor.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I support the efforts of my good friend from Vermont who is the chairman of the education authorizing committee.

I am aware that the amendment would not add to the total but redirect existing funds within the same program to the soon-to-be-authorized income contingent loan program.

I commend him for his help and indeed for all his work on the education subcommittee.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this is an excellent amendment.

It is an idea originally conceived by Milton Friedman, who was a conservative economist.

It eliminates the debt factor, as I understand it, as a career choice because loan payments are based on a student's income after graduation.

If someone goes into a line such as minister or social worker, or banker, on the other hand, the repayments would vary depending upon their ability to pay.

Students in low-paying professions, such as teaching, would carry a lighter burden then their classmates entering more lucrative fields.

The idea should appear both to conservatives, who believe the beneficiaries of the Federal programs should pay for them, and liberals, who believe that no one should be denied access to college for finanical reasons.

It is a good amendment and I support it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank the Senator and move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment (No. 2783) was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2784

(Purpose: To earmark $1,000,000 for the Bologna Center of the School of Advanced International Studies of the Johns Hopkins University)

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require unanimous consent to set aside the committee amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the committee amendment for the purpose of considering the amendment I have just sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] proposes an amendment numbered 2784.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 54, line 9, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That $1,000,000 of the amount appropriated under this paragraph and available for part B of title VI of the Higher Education Act of 1965 shall be available for a grant to the Bologna Center of the School of Advanced International Studies of the Johns Hopkins University.".

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, this amendment does not add any money to the bill; rather, it targets some higher education funds toward the International Education Program.

The amendment addresses the Higher Education Act's Business and International Education Program, which promotes linkages between universities and American businesses engaged in international economic activity. Under this program the Federal funds must be matched, so the amendment will leverage additional money.

I am especially interested in a unique institution that would benefit from this amendment. The Bologna Center of the School of Advanced International Studies is the only full-time resident American graduate school of international relations in Europe. Especially noteworthy is the international composition of the faculty and student body, which together represent as many as 25 countries.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment has been cleared on both sides, and I understand that the managers are prepared to accept it.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, it is my understanding the amendment does not add to the amount of the bill but designates funds within the amount we provide in this important area of international education, something that has long been a matter of concern and interest to the distinguished Senator from Maryland, Senator MATHIAS. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2784) was agreed to.

THE ILLINOIS LIBRARY SYSTEM

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am not offering an amendment, but I would like to have a brief dialog with my colleague from Connecticut. I would be happy to have my colleague from Wisconsin join in it, too.

We have a special problem in Illinois in connection with the Illinois library system. They submitted an application for money, for $11 million. It was approved by the Department of Education. Then, after they spent the money, the Department of Education came back and said, "We don't think that is the right way to spend it in conformity with the act," even though the Department had approved it.

There is no one who charges that there is any misuse of funds in the sense of any corruption or anything like that. The House has an amendment that takes care of our specific problem put on by Congressman JOHN PORTER over there.

I just want to mention this. I do not have an amendment here at this point. I want to mention it to my two colleagues so that when you get into conference you can be somewhat sympathetic to the special problem that we have in Illinois. It was a problem that was created by the Department of Education by approving expenditures at one point and then later coming back and saying, "Sorry, we made a mistake. You shouldn't have spent the money this way."

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, it is my understanding that there is language in the House bill that addresses the issue. It will be a matter in conference. It will give us the time to go ahead and fully be appraised of the facts that attend to the case and we will be more than glad to discuss it with our House colleagues when the time comes.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleagues.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, let me say to my good friend from Illinois, anything he favors I will certainly give the most careful consideration to. I am sure it has substantial merit.

There is the matter, as the Senator well knows, of the money involved. Is this a matter that would increase the appropriations level?

Mr. SIMON. It would not increase the appropriations.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Would not affect the appropriations?

Mr. SIMON. It does not. Obviously, if Illinois had to pay back the $11 million at some point, it would affect Federal revenue in some way. But my understanding is there is no immediate appropriation impact at all.

Mr. PROXMIRE. It sounds highly meritorious. I thank the Senator for giving us the chance to understand it on the floor.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 2785

(Purpose: To increase the amount which may be used to administer unemployment compensation laws to meet increased costs of administration resulting from certain factors, and for other purposes)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am about to send an amendment to the desk aimed at preventing the reduction of 5,820 staff from unemployment offices in every State in the Union.

It is endorsed by the National Governors' Association and the Interstate Conference of Employment Agencies.

Mr. President, the State unemployment insurance operations account provides administrative funds to State agencies which pay unemployment benefits, distribute trade adjustment allowances, and collect State unemployment taxes from employers. In fiscal year 1986, over 8 million workers received benefits from State unemployment offices.

The administrative cost of the Unemployment Benefit Program is financed by Federal unemployment tax revenues. At the end of this fiscal year the unemployment trust fund account is projected to contain a $1 billion surplus. And $2.9 billion will be collected in fiscal year 1987, more than enough to provide adquate funds for this program.

The President's budget request for fiscal year 1987 included $1.732 billion for unemployment office operations—sufficient funding to maintain current service levels. However, the Appropriations Committee cut this request by $144 million.

What is the impact of this cut?

According to the Secretary of Labor:

This reduced level of funding would have serious consequences for the operation of the UI [Unemployment Insurance] program. States would be forced to lay off about 4,500 staff, representing 10 percent of the total, and close local unemployment offices. This would curtail services to claimants, forcing claimants to travel longer distances to file for benefits, and would significantly affect the States' ability to pay benefits promptly. In addition, there would be substantial losses to the unemployment trust fund (and to the Federal budget) because of the adverse effect on the accuracy of benefit payments and on the enforcement and oversight of tax collections.

According to the interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies, the cut of $144 million could impair the ability of States to monitor claims, increasing fraud and abuse by as much as $720 million.

It does not make sense to save $144 million only to lose $720 million.

My amendment would suspend for 1 year the administration's quality control program, thus saving $33 million, and increase the funds for administrative services by that same amount.

□ 1400

The quality control program is designed to measure the accuracy of unemployment insurance payments. It was not specifically authorized by statute, but rather is an initiative of the Labor Department. It is an addition to the long standing benefit payment control program that is designed to combat fraud and abuse. In fact, it is so new that the proposed regulations implementing it were published on July 25, 1986, just over 6 weeks ago.

Mr. President, it doesn't make any sense to spend resources on quality measurement when we are shutting down local offices and laying off personnel who are directly involved in serving unemployed workers.

I think we can all agree that the purpose of quality control is to see that the workers be able to receive the unemployment insurance to which they are entitled. It does not make sense to cut almost 6,000 staff members, then talk about spending the same dollars for quality control. In my opinion, it is far more important, far more significant, to see to it that those staffers continue to have an opportunity to provide the services to the unemployed workers.

I ask unanimous consent that a chart showing the number of staff that will be laid off in each State under the committee's $144 million cut be printed in the RECORD. It shows my own State of Ohio would lose 300 people, 299 to be exact; Texas, 257; Connecticut, 66; Louisiana, 122; Oregon, 84; Kansas, 41.

Every State loses under the committee bill.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. METZENBAUM. My amendment would restore $33 million of the funds that are proposed to be cut. While it is not a perfect amendment, it is the best that can be done on the Senate floor under the restrictions of Gramm-Rudman.

Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk at this moment on behalf of myself, Senator COCHRAN and Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER). Does the Senator ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending committee amendments?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendments be temporarily set aside without losing their place on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] for himself, Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. NICKLES proposes an amendment numbered 2785.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, beginning with "$117,910,000" on line 9, strike out all through "December 31, 1987." on line 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$150,910,000 (including not to exceed $4,800,000 which may be used for amortization payments to States which had independent retirement plans in their State employment service agencies prior to 1980) shall be available only to the extent necessary to administer unemployment compensation laws to meet increased costs of administration resulting from changes in a State law or increases in the number of unemployment insurance claims filed and claims paid or increased salary costs resulting from changes in State salary compensation plans embracing employees of the State generally over those upon which the State's basic allocation was based, which cannot be provided for by normal budgetary adjustments based on State obligations as of December 31, 1987. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by the Act may be expended for the implementation of the mandatory unemployment insurance quality control program proposed at 54 Fed. Reg. 26845-26853.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, this is a matter that is going to be in conference. This is a special concern of the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio makes a good point in the concern he exhibits over the rather draconian cut initially proposed by the Senate committee. The moneys which he requests are offset by others in the quality control program.

I have to say that the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Brock, has my admiration for instituting those procedures. I think it is probably a fair compromise between the ends desired by all parties. I recommend the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send a letter to the desk, from the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies, Inc., in support of this amendment and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, DC, September 9, 1986.

Hon. HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM: We understand that you plan to offer an amendment today on the Senate floor to the FY 1987 Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations bill that would partially restore the $144M reduction in (contingency) funds for unemployment insurance (UI) claims processing by transferring $40.3M which is currently designated for UI quality control (QC) to the contingency category. You have our support in this effort.

We support the UI quality control initiative, however, the impact of the reduction in funds for claims processing now proposed by the Senate bill would be so severe that we believe implementation of quality control should be suspended in FY 1987 and those resources used to ameliorate the impact of the cut on UI claims processing and related activities. Spending resources on quality measurement when we are shutting down local offices and laying off personnel who are directly involved in serving unemployed workers is not justified in our view.

Thank you for your efforts to restore these badly needed funds.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM L. HEARTWELL, JR.
Executive Vice President, ICESA.
RAYMOND C. SCHEPPACH,
Executive Director,
National Governors' Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, before acting on this amendment, I suggest the absence of a quorum just to be certain it is technically correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I modify my amendment at the desk by deleting the last sentence of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

The amendment (No. 2785), as modified, is as follows:

On page 6, beginning with "$117,910,000" on line 9, strike out all through "December 31, 1987." on line 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$150,910,000 (including not to exceed $4,800,000 which may be used for amortization payments to States which had independent retirement plans in their State employment service agencies prior to 1980) shall be available only to the extent necessary to administer unemployment compensation laws to meet increased costs of administration resulting from changes in a State law or increases in the number of unemployment insurance claims filed and claims paid or increased salary costs resulting from changes in State salary compensation plans embracing employees of the State generally over those upon which the State's basic allocation was based, which cannot be provided for by normal budgetary adjustments based on State obligations as of December 31, 1987.".

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague Mr. METZENBAUM, in offering this amendment. It deals with an issue of extreme importance to my State and, I know, to many other States.

The committee bill recommendation for the Unemployment Insurance Program represents a $144 million shortfall in the level of funding required for this program in order to provide adequate services to all of those who are entitled to unemployment benefits.

As you know, Mr. President, this program is financed by State and Federal taxes which are deposited in a trust fund. Currently, the balance in the trust fund is more than sufficient to fund this program. Unfortunately, the committee has decided to use these funds for other purposes. We may soon have to put restrictions on the use of funds in this trust fund similar to those which have been put in place to protect the Social Security trust fund.

However, in an effort to minimize the impact of the $144 million shortage, we are offering this amendment to restore $33 million to this account. While it will not circumvent the necessity to reduce essential staff positions, the additional $33 million may allow some States to maintain current services.

We are transferring these funds from the quality control activities within the Unemployment Insurance Program. Not to make light of an important matter, it is clear that if we have to substantially reduce staff, quality control is going to suffer. One of the essential aspects of quality control is efficiency on the front line, and that requires adequate staff to process claims.

I hope my colleagues appreciate the nature of this problem. In my State of Mississippi, where one county has an unemployment rate of 29 percent, it is a matter of utmost importance.

I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] and am happy to cosponsor his amendment. This amendment rectifies a portion of the bill which would adversely affect States such as Oklahoma which are experiencing dramatic increases in the number of people filing for unemployment benefits.

Oklahoma is currently suffering from extreme economic hardship. Unemployment has increased to over 9 percent recently, and projections indicate that the worst is yet to come. It is imperative that the funds in the unemployment insurance service category be maintained so that Oklahoma can continue to provide the necessary benefits to those who have fallen on hard times.

Under the bill, the unemployment insurance service spending is to be reduced by approximately $144 million from the administration request and the House-approved level. The entire amount of this reduction is to come from the contingency fund which was set up to aid States that experienced dramatic increases in demand for benefits.

The fund provides money to help State agencies defray the cost of employing personnel. These personnel are needed to maintain the efficiency of the State agency in distributing benefits. Without the aid of these part-time helpers, many unemployed people would experience delays or other hardships in receiving their vital benefits.

In Oklahoma, the State Employment Security Commission, which administers the Unemployment Program, is already operating at a minimum staff level. They have barely enough people to run the program efficiently. Without this additional money, they would be unable to provide the services which the unemployed depend upon for sustenance.

In a related matter, I support the committee's recommendation that benefits authorized by the Trade Act be increased by $7 million over last year's appropriation. These benefits provide essential assistance for retraining, job searchers, and relocation for workers who have been unfairly impacted by overseas competition.

I understand and support all our efforts to keep spending down, however, it is important that States which are suffering high unemployment be able to continue administering their unemployment programs efficiently. To do so, they must be able to draw on contingency money during these times of high and increasing demand.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I understand that both the majority and minority managers are prepared to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment (No. 2785), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, shortly, I will send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself and the distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES]. I believe we have some additional cosponsors, and I will be prepared to send the amendment to the desk shortly.

The senior Senator from Florida is going to discuss for a moment a request that there be one additional amendment to the Domenici-Chiles amendment, with reference to the health institutes. While he is doing that with his staff, I will start discussing what we propose to do.

Let me first say to the Senate that the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, chaired by Senator WEICKER, has done a good job. I will be prepared later in the afternoon to submit—not in my capacity as a Senator from New Mexico but as chairman of the Budget Committee—a summary of the bill in terms of complying with the very difficult and onerous job of meeting the budget resolution's requirements, and the bill before us does that.

But today I am going to offer an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator CHILES which I feel will improve America's ability to maintain its predominance in this technological age. The amendment that we are going to offer will provide an additional $57 million for math and science activities of the Department of Education.

Mr. President, I am offering this amendment because I firmly believe that our country's future depends upon math and science education. The future of this country depends upon our children, and the fact is that they are inadequately prepared for this fast moving and highly technological world because of a lack of a strong knowledge of basic math and science concepts.

We are all aware of the fact that reports several years ago warned that American's math and science education was inadequate. There are not enough certified teachers, say the reports and studies. Our standards are outmoded and our students are outperformed by students from other countries. Congress has moved to act and in fact adopted a very significant piece of legislation, the very title of which states how serious and important the issues are. The law which we passed in 1984 was called the Education for Economic Security Act of 1984.

I am here to tell you that the program is still needed and that congressional support for it is still needed. Physics and computer science continue to be among the fields with the largest proportional teacher shortages in this country.

Further, we all need to be aware of our Nation's very, very serious problem in this area. According to projections, we will soon be moving into a time of teacher shortages. By conservative estimates, between 1986 and 1992, 1.3 million new teachers will need to be hired. Thus, the problems in science and math education will get worse, not better.

Recognizing these needs, the U.S. Senate, when it adopted a budget resolution, voted here on the floor on certain assumptions and, as a matter of fact, added substantial amounts of money to a budget resolution to fund those assumptions. One of those assumptions was for an additional large amount of funding, an increase of $400 million, for the math and science efforts of this Nation through the Department of Education, $400 million.

The 1987 budget resolution, which was adopted here, went to conference, came back, and was readopted, included the assumption that we would add $400 million to the current level of American effort for math and science education programs. That was done here by this Senate, not once but twice, and retained in conference with the House in spite of significant budget restraint.

I regret to tell you that, even though that was done, the appropriations bill before us does not reflect that commitment. The level of funding in the bill before us for math and science programs is not $443 million but rather $43 million, the same amount that was funded in the previous year. The $400 million that we assumed would be in this bill has been used by the committee and reported to the Senate to fund other programs of the national Government. We did not save the $400 million. We spent it elsewhere in this bill.

I am not here to say that the committee did not do good work, but it appears to the Senator from New Mexico that, if the U.S. Congress by overwhelming votes in 1984 adopted an Education for Economic Security Act, and the President of the United States signed it, clearly within a budget of this size we ought to be able to increase the level of funding for education for economic security programs over this year's funding level of $43 million.

I believe there is a real case for an add-on of $400 million. I believe that is what the Senate had in mind when it adopted an alternative to the budget proposals that were reported and added over $1.8 billion for the general education programs and, yes, an additional $400 million for math and science education. I believe it was called America's future, if I am not correct. I believe it was called maintaining America's competitive edge.

When we voted on math and science education here in the Senate, not only when we adopted the law, but when we voted for it in concept here on the floor, I believe it was categorized somewhat in the following manner: We are spending too much money on the past and not enough money on the future; we ought to start being worried about the future and spend money to enhance our capability as a nation, through our local school boards and local superintendents of schools, in math and science proficiency; we ought to increase our capability to educate in this fast-changing and dynamic field. Obviously we were talking about the future. I believe we discussed it on the floor when we added $400 million for math and science as an assumption for the education portion of the budget. I believe it was also discussed in another way. Some said it is time we invest in our young people, as I recall.

The children of this Nation need the best math and science education we can provide, and we asked, why do we not invest in it? And we voted for it. And as I indicated, we voted twice on the budget resolution on that assumption. In 1984, we overwhelmingly passed a far-reaching act, the title of which indicated the fear that the reports of 1983 and 1984 sent through all of us. That act stresses economic security through education, and I regret that after all of that effort, we have a bill before us that funds education for this particular endeavor of our Nation at exactly the same amount as this year, $43 million, not the $443 million that I believe most people voting for the budget resolution assumed.

Now I say to my colleagues, it is not for the Budget Committee to decide how we spend. It is for the appropriators and for the U.S. Senate to set the priorities. If we decide that we do not want to spend money in promoting economic security through the enhancement of math and science education, that is our prerogative and that is the appropriators' prerogative.

Let me remind the Senate that we are going to spend the money that was assumed for math and science education elsewhere. And far be it the goal of the Senator from New Mexico to break the budget or to exceed the mandated goals of expenditures for this particular bill. I would not come here and ask anyone to do that, because I have asked the Senate to cut bills when they were over by $150 million out of a giant multibillion dollar bill such as this one. So some may ask why are you asking for more money? I am not.

The bill before us has some additional budget authority that was provided by the U.S. Congress in the budget resolution which has not been allocated. I am going to use a little piece of that, along with going into this bill that has literally billions of dollars and finding one place that I believe we can justifiably take a small amount of money and still leave that function of Government in excellent shape.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say very clearly to my fellow Senators, you are going to hear that Senators DOMENICI and CHILES in this amendment want to cut the National Institutes of Health. You are going to hear that we want to cut money from Alzheimer's research, the National Cancer Institute, and all the other marvelous institutes and activities within this $6-plus billion activity called the National Institutes of Health.

Nothing is further from the truth. I hope those who are going to listen to that and be worried about voting for our young people in math and science enhancement will listen carefully to what I am saying.

The National Institutes of Health in this bill that is before us have been increased in budget authority over the year we are in by $810 million. If my arithmetic is correct, in a tight fiscal year, the National Institutes of Health, phenomenal institutions, will be increased 15.4 percent. Not decreased, not frozen like the national effort in math and science, but increased by 15.4 percent.

What the distinguished Senator from Florida and the Senator from New Mexico are asking the U.S. Senate to do is to make $57 million available for math and science education, and we are only asking that $11 million—$11 million—of that $57 million come from the National Institutes of Health, which I have just told you were increased $810 million in this bill.

Again, if my arithmetic is correct, and I believe it is, that means that if you adopt our amendment, the National Institutes of Health will be reduced by $11 million and, basically, they will be growing not at a 15.4-percent increase, but a 15.2-percent increase; just two-tenths of 1 percent out of a 15.4-percent growth rate in the National Institutes of Health will be needed in order to fund a $57 million add-on to the current $43 million effort in science and math enhancement under the highly touted Education for Economic Security Act of 1984.

I submit that what we are asking for is not enough. I submit that the U.S. Senate really believed that this bill before us today would have contained $400 million for this kind of effort and related efforts. I cannot do that to the National Institutes of Health, and I do not believe the Senate would want to do that. But I think they will indeed find interesting the fact that we have not increased math and science education, nor have we adequately funded our efforts in education for economic security since 1984, and they will be asking, "Why can't we do something?"

We believe it is a fair and equitable approach to make $57 million in budget authority available for math and science education and that it be partially funded to the tune of $11 million from the National Institutes of Health. The transfer is required to keep this amendment deficit neutral in outlays. The $11 million transfer from NIH will result in $5 million outlays, which would be required under the math and science education account. The remaining $46 million in budget authority can be accommodated within the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation; that is, the money in toto that the subcommittee has received accommodates the remaining amount of budget authority without in any way violating the mandate of the Budget Act as specifically directed to these activities of Government.

Now, let me repeat for those who say, "Are you cutting the National Institutes of Health?" No, the National Institutes of Health will grow, but only by $799 million instead of $810 million. This is still an increase of 15.2 percent over the year we are now in for fiscal year 1987.

I repeat, I support the National Institutes of Health. I think they are among the finest researchers in the world and the institutes are truly phenomenal and perhaps, within the panorama of research activities and institutions in the United States and the world, they may indeed be the very pearls of our research effort. But, my friends in the Senate, how are we going to keep up that kind of activity when we read over and over that math and science are suffering in our public schools, and we do not have the wherewithal to promote enhancement by taking only two-tenths of 1 percent out of one of the largest increases for appropriated programs in this whole bill, the National Institutes of Health?

I do not believe in their wildest dream those who manage the National Institutes of Health believed in this tight budget year that they would be on the floor of this Senate with a 15.4-percent increase. I believe they thought we were in for austerity. And quite to the contrary, math and science education is truly in austerity. We cannot even find enough money to provide for an increase in that activity when we are being told that it is the most critical of educational needs; it is the most significant thing we can do for the future of our young people.

Now, will this do any good? Let me repeat: According to the last survey on this subject, 7,000, or 30 percent, of the 24,000 high schools in America offer no physics classes; out of these 24,000 high schools, 4,000, or 17 percent, offer no chemistry classes; 2,000, or 8 percent, offer no biology classes; and 12,000, or half, offer no Earth or space science classes.

Many of the science teachers in our Nation are spread thin—covering more than one subject area. This means they have a great need for in-service training. One of the activities funded by the Education for Economic Security Act is just that.

Of the 19,000 individuals teaching physics, fewer than 2,000 are full-time physics teachers. Now, what will this money do? If we can succeed in convincing the Members of the U.S. Senate or one more than one-half of them voting, if we can convince them to take two-tenths of 1 percent, $11 million—just $11 million—from an NIH increase of 15.4 percent and put it in this amendment, we will have $100 million to spend on math and science education enhancements. And what will it do?

I think it is fair to tell the Senate that with it we will provide benefits of improved education to over 10 million students and teachers. This is accomplished through in-service training, curriculum development, and the linking of professionals in the business field with the education of our young people. I believe it is worth every penny we are going to vote for here today.

And I urge my fellow Senators to understand that the Senator from New Mexico is not standing on the assumptions made in the budget resolution because if I was, I would be asking for $400 million. I understand the prerogatives of the Appropriations Committee to allocate funding as it sees fit in the appropriations process. But I do not believe because we have allocations and because they have the right to spend it, that we ought to assume that in all respects they are absolutely right, and there ought to be no different priorities than those established in the committee.

I do not ask that we change very much. I am not here arguing about the 15-percent increase in NIH—clearly to the contrary. I believe we should spend more in education even if it means somewhat less at NIH. But that is not in the cards because obviously we want to work with the committee. We respect their detailed information, and their commitment to meeting the budget marks that are given to them and the budget totals that are assumed. But I frankly believe that if the Senators will just listen—$5 million in outlays out of NIH, and $11 million in budget authority out of an increase of $310 million for a base that exceeds $6 billion in order to provide a total of $100 million for the enhancement of math and science education—and I believe if everybody understands that, this amendment will prevail.

Perhaps someone will get up and say what does this do to the budget even, though I think I have explained it. It absolutely in no way violates the 1987 budget. There is more than $57 million in budget authority in excess of the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation. We use that and a little bit of money from NIH, because we have to provide a few million dollars in outlays for the program. You add it up, and this bill will still be exactly on the mark with the budget mandates that were given to this committee first by the Budget Committee, and then ratified and confirmed by the full Appropriations Committee as the amount of money to be spent on the Government activities funded within this bill.

I believe my principal cosponsor and good friend, Senator CHILES, is here. I assume he desires to speak. When he starts, I will take a few moments, I say, Mr. President, to get the amendment totally in order and then with his concurrence, I will send it to the desk shortly as an unprinted amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I want to express my support for the amendment that my friend and colleague from New Mexico is preparing to offer. I think these are times when an investment in the future must be made. We have to make a modest investment in education of our children in mathematics and science today if we are going to have those resources for tomorrow.

Mr. President, I remember, and I think most of the Senators remember, the great fanfare we made when we passed math and science legislation back in 1984. We realized then how far behind as a country we were falling from the rest of the industrialized world. We realized that in percentages we had had much fewer of our students that were taking any kind of degrees in math and science percentagewise. Then we found out even in absolute numbers a country as small as Japan was sending many more engineers to school, and there were many more degrees in math and science, as well as West Germany and other countries.

Mr. President, we know that the world is changing so quickly in technology, in new information that is out there, that if we do not keep up in this area we can only find ourselves falling farther and farther behind.

The math-science program is very well targeted to the training of teachers and the upgrading of curriculum. It involves the State and local education agencies and higher education institutions in a joint effort for educational excellence.

The program is working. The State and local governments that have participated are excited about the ripple effect that the competition is creating. There is a special emphasis on encouraging minorities, women, and handicapped to pursue math and science study. In short, we are getting a lot of leverage here for change with a modest amount of money. The Senate overwhelmingly adopted a bipartisan budget package to increase math, science, and excellence by $400 million. The least we can do today is to restore this program to its 1985 level—1985 level, we are talking about. Does that put us really on the road to catching up? No. I am disappointed with that. I wish I could say we were doing more. But it is the least that we can do and what we should do.

My good friend and the chairman of the Budget Committee has expressed the belief that we do not own any special prerogative by the fact that the budget contained this figure—this additional $400 million, and that the Appropriations Committee had the right to take that money, place it where they wanted to, and put it in some area. They did. I remind the Senate that it was not entirely the Budget Committee that came up with this figure to start with. This was an amendment and part of this money was an amendment that the Senate on the floor when we were adopting it, and the Budget Committee, said, "We want to add this money." So it was not the special prerogative of the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Florida of saying out of the Budget Committee we are going to bring this. The Senate on this floor said, "We want to put more money in for excellence. We want to put more money in for math and science, and we are going to put that figure into the budget." So they did.

Now as the Senate has a right to change any budget resolution the Senate has a right to change any appropriations bill. So there is not absolute wisdom on the part of the Budget Committee nor is there absolute wisdom on the part of the Appropriations Committee or subcommittee to say where the dollars must go.

It would be much easier if we could say we are going to add this amount of money. I am sure it would pass very quickly except to do that would be to make this budget go above its targeted figure. That would not be right. That is not something that the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Florida not only feel comfortable in doing, but it is something we could not do. We do not think the body should do that. Certainly we cannot.

So we have to look to see where this money can come from. Well, as we look over the budget that is before us in this field, where is the area that has been increased the most? Well, it happens to be the National Institutes of Health. When we see, as the Senator from New Mexico has said, an increase in that particular area of 15.4 percent, $810,000,000 over last year at a time when almost every other program is either cut, held at the absolute level or perhaps some we allowed to have some kind of an inflation increase but to find a 15.4-percent increase, my goodness, in the heaviest days of defense we increased them about 8 or 9 percent or so. But a 15.4-percent increase?

Could we spend more money at the National Institutes of Health? Yes, we could. Could we spend it for good purposes? Absolutely we could. Is there any particular harmful disease that I want to cut or see us not spending money? No. There is not. But given the fact that we are seeing this 15.4 percent increase certainly we are now talking about whether we can have $11,000,000 in budget authority to come from this, Mr. President, we just think the answer to that has to be yes. What we are about in appropriation bills is weighing priorities. What we are about in the Budget Act is weighing priorities, and deciding what percentage of the budget will be spent where.

Can we afford, as a country, to abandon our quest for trying to increase the number of students who will be able to pursue degrees in science? I submit that would be a very, very foolhardy direction for us to take. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico, what we are talking about here at $100 million is not enough. There is no way, as to setting real priorities for this country, that we should say that is enough. We should be doing more.

But it was funded in that amount in 1985, and we are saying, for goodness sakes, let us raise it up. Our cut to below $45 million in 1986 would be eased a great deal if we could make this restoration for 1987.

I do not claim that there is any fat left in this bill. We are down to the bone in our funds to invest in human resources, in human potential. The point that we make is that at times like these the choices are hard and at the subcommittee, at full committee, and again today we face hard decisions about balancing priorities and making investments.

But these funds are targeted to the education of tomorrow's research scientists, our doctors, our health professionals. If we only look at today's needs and not tomorrow's, we are going to be eating our seed corn.

Let us look at medical research that we are talking about. If we do not have the money in math-science, are we going to be able to produce the kind of competent scientists that we will need in order to try to find the cures for Alzheimer's, cancer research, and everything else? Of course we will not. Much of that depends on higher mathematics, certainly in the field of science, and we are saying this is a basic tool. If you are interested in NIH research, certainly you ought to go back and fund a basic tool of that research. That would be to have the competent professionals who would be able to make those kind of discoveries and breakthroughs that we need.

NIH has, again, a 15.4-percent increase in this bill, $810 million. The House has $100 million more than that. So this $11 million will not jeopardize the conference outcome that is higher than where the Senate bill is right now.

Next year we will be reauthorizing chapter II. The administration has recommended general aid for teacher training to replace math-science. Congress has shown no enthusiasm for the proposal. But next year's reauthorization offers us a great opportunity to examine teacher training and the personnel development needs and how we can target more adequate funds for math-science instruction through the block grant. In the meantime, we are not finding that funding through the present block grant. We would be very pennywise and pound-foolish to shortchange a program that has been funded for only 2 years, which shows such great promise to be of help to this country.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COHEN). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I have before me the ideas of the amendment of the distinguished Senators from New Mexico and Florida.

Let me say that under normal circumstances, I would be glad to support any education program or additional moneys to any educational program in this country. Nobody is going to denigrate the importance of math-science. But neither is anybody going to denigrate the importance of education across the board.

To give you an idea as to how much the shortfall is in education, let me go back to one of the older programs on the books. Public Law 94-142 was enacted 10 years ago; 94-142 not only is landmark education legislation, but how it has changed the lives of retarded children across the breadth of this country is something to behold. Whereas in the past, handicapped children used to sit in dark corners in institutions, they now join their classmates in school, many of them mainstreamed to regular schools, not special education classes. But most importantly, the upshot of all that is that they are mainstreamed into life in America and not left in a corner of an institution.

That was 10 years ago that we passed 94-142. I wonder how many of my colleagues realize what it is that we committed ourselves to when we passed the law 10 years ago, 94-142. The Federal share was to be 40-percent. And here it is on the 10th anniversary of 94-142, which has been declared an unparalleled success as to educating the handicapped retarded children of this Nation, and the Federal share is a struggling 8 percent. Eight percent, and we have had 10 years to get to that 40 percent level.

I warned a long time ago as we started to misread our priorities in this Nation that we would find in the area of science and health, the blind fighting with the deaf, fighting with those with heart disease, fighting with those with cancer for the Federal dollar. Indeed, the penuriousness of this Nation over the past several years when it comes to spending on education and health, social needs, is such that that is exactly what is happening in the area of health.

All come before our hearings, each pleading for the few pennies that are left over after we get through with the defense budget and there is not enough to go ahead and do the right job.

So it is with education. No, we do not do the right job in the sense of what either needs to be done or what can be done. So nobody is going to stand on this platform and decry the worthy effort insofar as math-science is concerned. But I think it also has to be stated that in these famous allocations and in the determination of the priorities by Congress and by the President, and by the body politic, in the determination of those priorities, not much is left out there, either in the sense of education or in the sense of health or the retarded or the disabled or any such worthy causes.

So we had to make choices in the way of education. Very frankly, the choice that was followed by the subcommittee and by the full committee was in favor of those with the greatest needs.

That is why the increases went in Pell grants—in other words, to those who could not afford a college education and would not get a college education unless the money was there. Yes, we did not cut there.

We did not cut back in programs for those who needed a special education, the retarded. And we did not cut back in the sense of those who needed the money to be able to go to medical school.

I do not have the luxury to do what I would like to do. I happen to belong to the school which feels that nothing is more important to this Nation than the education of its people, young and old. But I do not have that choice. So, when something like this comes before us and we say, well, we would like to go ahead and add the money to math-science, I do not think I will get caught in the catch-22 of saying I do not think that is important.

I think it is important but it has already been determined by virtue of allocation and priority not to be as important as defense—not as important as defense. In terms of the health needs and the education needs, they run pretty much neck and neck. In terms of educational needs, they take second place to the need programs insofar as the education of certain people in this country is concerned.

Earlier today, to show again how the crunch is on, the Senator from Wisconsin and I had to shuffle around $40 million worth of funds in order to assure that 10,000 persons dying of AIDS would be able to get AZT, a drug which is not a cure, a drug which, indeed, may not prolong life endlessly, but we think it will prolong life for 6 months—6 more months—in the hope that within 6 months, additional cures might be found. That is the kind of budget game which I have to play with this budget. I have to twist and bend to get money for 6 more months of life in the sense of hope for 10,000 people.

I cannot get another few percentage points toward the Federal commitment of 40 percent in special education and that is 10 years old and I am sitting at 8 percent.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment is defeated, not because of its substance or the importance of math-science but in the sense of the dollars that have been allocated by the American people. That is not a Reagan budget or a Budget Committee budget or a Senate budget or a House budget. The American people decide what the priorities of this Nation are to be. It should be stated loud and clear on this floor that they do not deem education and science and health as important as military hardware. They are more concerned with the speculations of what might happen with superpowers in the years after the year 2000 than they are with life in the year 1986. And that is their privilege. I abide by the majority choice.

Someday we will wake up as to what national security is all about. National security, quite correctly, as stated by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from New Mexico, is math-science. That is national security. But that is not the way it comes across in terms of our budget.

And let us not make any mistake, because I am going to say it again out here: After all the speechmaking is done by Republicans and Democrats, by Presidents and Senators, by our friends and neighbors, after all the speechmaking is done, there is one unerring mark as to what is important in the United States. That is the budget.

It is not philosophical, it is not partisan, it does not hide anything. It is right there is dollars and cents. I do not have the dollars and cents for math-science and I do not have the dollars and cents for the retarded and disabled and I do not have the dollars and cents for Alzheimer's disease and cancer and heart disease. I simply do not have the dollars.

When I say "I," I am talking about the committee, the U.S. Senate, and the Government. So the quarrel is not with the chairman or the ranking member or the actions of the committee. The quarrel really is as to what we as a Nation deem important.

No, I am not going to use the argument as was alluded to by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, that this is taking the money from the National Institutes of Health and then et cetera, et cetera. It is taking the money from the National Institutes of Health. But I do not want to get into that. These things all have to stand on their own two feet.

You tell me about the pearl that is the National Institutes of Health. I will tell you, Mr. President, if it were not for the Appropriations Committees of the U.S. Congress, it would be a piece of coal as a result of the budgets that were sent to us over the past 6 years. Budget after budget, slash after slash. It was the Appropriation Committees that went ahead and made the National Institutes of Health what it is today because we would not accept the cuts.

Sure, now we are receiving the benefit of biomedical research. Now we understand how crucial basic research is when we are confronted with a sweeping disease such as Alzheimer's, which could afflict the entire globe. And very frankly, we are well on our way to doing something about it because of the basic research of the past 10 years. And, oh, we would like to see how we might be making some progress in Alzheimer's because sooner or later, it is going to affect us.

NIH was not the darling of the American people in the recent past when all the work was being done but little result to show for it because scientific research takes such a long time.

Yes, it is a pearl. But so are our children a pearl and so is their education a pearl. These are all matters that should be a treasure to us. But in reality, in terms of everyday living, none of them is a treasure to us in terms of the money spent by us.

What is being asked for here in effect gives a 100-percent increase to math-science. I would take a 100-percent increase in all the areas under the jurisidction of this particular subcommittee and believe me, we would be a better Nation for it. If we are going to have 100-percent increases, we are going to have it for everybody. I am not going to play God and sit and decide who is going to live and who is going to die and who is going to be smart and who is going to be dumb and who is going to be housed or who is going to be homeless.

It is time we came to our senses in this country of what is important. Hooray for all the fireworks and hooray for all the celebrations, celebrating what the United States did do. Our job, it seems to me, around here is to celebrate what it is we are doing. And we are not doing a very good job of it.

So, hooray for the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida and the ends they seek to achieve. But in order to do what they want to do, we need more money and we need more money allocated to this aspect of the budget. We do not need more money allocated to us at the expense of NIH. We do not need more money allocated to us at the expense of the retarded. We do not need more money allocated to us at the expense of the elderly. We need more money allocated to us coming from those aspects of our national life which have all the money and more than anybody can use and, indeed, so much, that it is wasted by the barrelful. I have a tin cup for the budget that I represent. I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. DOMENICI and Mr. PROXMIRE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

□ 1520

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if the Senator will yield while I send the amendment to the desk?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have been waiting to see if other Senators had wanted to do something on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator there are two pending amendments.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I assume that we have been laying them aside temporarily while a new amendment is being considered, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendments be temporarily set aside while the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico is the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2786

Mr. DOMENICI. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that additional cosponsors, Senators BINGAMAN, HART, and LAUTENBERG, be added to the original cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the distinguished ranking member from Wisconsin for yielding to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], for himself, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. HART, and Mr. LAUTENBERG, proposes an amendment numbered 2786.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the clerk dispense with further reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

Amounts available under this Act for carrying out the provisions of title II of the Education for Economic Security Act are hereby increased by $56,934,000, provided that amounts available under this Act for the various activities of the National Institutes of Health are reduced by a total of $11,000,000.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, anything I could say after the speech of the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, would be certainly anticlimatic and I will be very brief.

I support the Senator from Connecticut. I oppose the amendment. I think it is a mistake and in the long run it could be a serious mistake. I would like to make one modest point. Consider the long-term effect of this amendment. The ultimate impact of the amendment is to increase Federal spending by adding to the total budget authority provided in the bill. Now, my good friend—and nobody is better with figures and nobody knows more about the budget than the chairman of the committee unless it be the ranking member. They are both the Senate's experts in this area—said this is something that would provide $57 million, as I understand it, for math and science but it would only take $11 million out of the NIH. How do you do that? That is magic. That is great. If we can do that, we will have no budget problems in the future. He said it is deficit neutral. Now, Mr. President, it is not deficit neutral, not in the long run. Of course, what happens is that in 1987 it is neutral and that is all that has to be done in order to comply with the Budget Act. In 1987 it is neutral. But it adds to the deficit in subsequent years. And where is it going to come from in subsequent years? We set the precedent today. It will come out of NIH. This is where it comes from this time. It is where it will come from in the future.

My good friend from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida made very, very impressive speeches. They pointed out this can help greatly to advance math and science. Will it? Come on. What does it amount to? Five dollars a pupil. Five bucks a pupil. We know how much education is costing these days and every little bit helps. Five dollars is nothing to sneeze at. Of course it is something. But it is not something that is going to make any real impact. The Senator from Connecticut was right when he pointed out that rightly or wrongly—I think it is right, he thinks it is wrong—the Federal Government provides only about 8 percent of the support for elementary and secondary education in the country. That is a fact. That is a fact. If we are going to do anything to improve math and science, we have to change that fact. I certainly do not think we are going to change it today, and I would certainly hope and pray we do not change it at the expense of the National Institutes of Health. The amount we spend on public education is around $15 billion a year. High school, which is where this would hit, is $5 billion a year. Obviously, if we are going to try to take money from the National Institutes of Health to help math and science or any other important part of education in this country, we are going to have to take a whale of a lot. So I support my good friend from Connecticut. I think he is right.

Once again I commend him on his superlative speech in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to just embellish for 1 minute, only because it highlights the difficulties we have been running into. I mentioned the special education bill a moment ago and that the Federal contribution is 8 percent whereas the law passed 10 years ago looked to 40 percent, which we have never reached. Two weeks ago we passed on the Senate floor the reauthorization of 94-142, and we made one significant change come to pass by virtue of our learning curve, experience with the legislation. And that is that instead of from 3 years of age to 21, education of retarded children would start at birth to 21. That bill is mired in the House right now and it probably is not going to be passed in the present form because all the legislators are objecting to the additional cost associated with educating a child for the first 2 years of its life, when indeed for a retarded child education the first several years of life may be all the education they are really going to register. We cannot afford that and we are going to double math and science?

Look, I wish we could do all that the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida want and more. But for all the reasons, none of which we are going into here—we are not going to have a big debate on defense spending and nondefense spending—the answer is that the money is not there to do it and a lot of the people who are being shortchanged are in darned sight worse shape than those who want to put extra emphasis on math-science. For that reason I oppose the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hope the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, who chairs the subcommittee, when he alluded on the floor to budgets over the last 5 years, which in his opinion would have caused irreparable harm to the National Institutes of Health, will permit me as chairman of the Budget Committee to conclude, and I hope he will agree with me, that it is not our budgets, not the budget resolution that he and I and others have produced, that would have caused harm to NIH. We have collaborated to significantly increase the funding for the National Institutes of Health, and for budget functions under this appropriations bill, for the kind of programs and for the purposes that he has described on the floor. I believe that is the case. I do not want to make this a long debate. I think I could prove it. I believe that is true. And I think he is given credit, along with the U.S. Senate and a few of us, because we have insisted that those budgets increase, not go down. Am I not correct, I say to my friend?

Mr. WEICKER. The Senator from New Mexico is correct. The Senate budgets have been higher. We will do it on a bipartisan basis. The Senate budgets, those contrived by our colleagues, Democrat and Republican, in the U.S. Senate have been higher than the administration budgets sent to us in this area and the budgets of the House of Representatives, Democrat controlled. So there is no question about the fact that the Senate, the Senate, has led against the opposition, both congressional and Presidential.

Now, Mr. President, I want to conclude all arguments. Again, I thank the distinguished chairman from Connecticut and ranking member from Wisconsin for all that time and effort they put into this bill. It is a serious, serious American effort, in many cases on behalf of those who truly need help, and for the most part, its motivation and its goals are exemplary. We are trying to make people healthier, trying to cure people with terrible diseases, and we are obviously trying to help many who are handicapped and disabled.

Let me suggest, however, the issue is not that there is not enough money in this bill to take care of a modest effort—a sum total of $100 million in math and science education enhancement, which is what our amendment will do. We are not shortchanging anyone with what we ask.

As I looked through the marvelous presentation by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, he stated the case. He said handicapped education was underfunded over the years, and we need money and ought to do more. He did more and, indeed, the Senate, when it approves this bill today, will have done more. It will go up 28 percent. I laud him for it. I am glad there is a 28-percent increase in this bill for education of the handicapped. There is some indication that there is not enough money in this bill for the dread diseases, be it Alzheimer's, AIDS, either on a temporary basis or for long-term research needs. They are funded in this bill.

The distinguished chairman has seen to it that they are in here because they are needed. But we are not asking for an increase. Somebody has said a 100-percent increase. We want a freeze at the 1985 level. How does that sound, since we are throwing numbers around? We do not want 1 penny over what this program had in 1985, because we believe it was an auspicious start for the Education for Economic Security Act when we got the $100 million in 1985. We started down the trail of helping teachers who are struggling to teach proficiency in math and science. Now it is down to $43 million. One might suggest that that is a 50-percent decrease. We are asking to put back the $57 million, to get the program up to the $100 million level that it was the year before last.

We do not think we are hurting anyone. We do not think we are having one bit of negative effect.

Can anybody tell me that two-tenths of 1 percent out of a 15.4-percent increase for the National Institutes of Health is going to harm our efforts? I do not believe so. I believe that $100 million to our sovereign States for educational enhancement will help a great deal.

I do not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin. He says, "Will it help? It is $5 a head for a student."

Yes, it will help. Our public schools can establish inhouse training centers and promote diversity of math and science education among our teachers. If it will not help, why do we not take out the $43 million we have in this year's funding, the level at which it is frozen? It seems to me that it will bring about some benefit out there.

One last argument. I know that the distinguished ranking minority member did not say that the promoters of this bill are big spenders. I believe that by the time we are finished with the appropriating process, the budget authority we have left over in this bill—because the outlays went out so fast that you could not spend the budget authority, but there is over $600 million available—will be spent somewhere in the budget process this year. I take a tiny little piece of it and put it in this program and a tiny little piece of the 15.4 increase in the NIH and put it in this program, because I do not think there is anything more important than math and science education from the standpoint of the future of our young people and the future of the National Institutes of Health, and even the programs we are speaking of that aid the handicapped. If we do not continue to excite the young people of this country in math, science, physics, and those kinds of things that keep us on the cutting edge of solving nature's problems, all the things in this bill will suffer.

I congratulate the Senator from Connecticut. I now have some reference numbers, and I think I have been sort of a partner—I hope not silent.

In austere budget times from fiscal year 1983 to fiscal year 1987, funding for the National Institutes of Health has gone up 50 percent. NIH was at $4 billion, and it is at $6.1 billion in this bill. That is a good effort. We could always spend more, but I believe we can be proud of it. I do not think $11 million in budget authority does one thing to detract from that kind of effort.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I have listened to the remarks of my colleague from New Mexico, and I think he has covered most of the points I wanted to touch.

I do say to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin that this is the kind of program he should be supporting, because we are not talking about giving $5 a pupil or anything like that. We are talking about trying to encourage the teachers who will be able to encourage people.

One of the biggest problems is that math and science teachers are gobbled up quickly by industry. We do not have the teachers out there; we do not have the personnel out there to teach the kids.

We are not talking about distributing money to pupils. We are talking about seeing that we train teachers so that they can excite these people to go into this area. This is usually the kind of thing in which the Senator from Wisconsin wants to put money. That is what we are talking about.

The Senator has said that this is funded at the 1985 level. Show me another program—in the program for the handicapped, in the Pell grants, in the educational areas, or in the health areas—that we cut over 50 percent and allowed that to happen in a meaningful program. This ranks with the health programs, and that is simply what we are saying.

We are saying a simple thing: Rather than increasing National Institutes of Health 15.4 percent, can that not be a 15.2-percent increase, so that we can also have a math-science program that allows us to have some hope for the future of our kids?

Yes, it is too bad they have to compete against each other. We hope it does not have to be that way. But the American people have spoken, through their representative bodies, when they said they wanted to see an increase in funding in this area; and we are saying we think the body that did that should also look at this action.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, unless anybody else is prepared to speak on this subject—I think eloquent points have been made on each side—I move to table the amendment of Senators DOMENICI and CHILES, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the Domenici-Chiles amendment. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], are necessarily absent.

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 2786 was rejected.

□ 1600

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was rejected.

Mr. WEICKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. Will those who are in the aisles and conversing please retire to the Cloakrooms or to their chairs? The Senate is not in order: those who are conversing, staff with each other, will please retire to the Cloakroom or to your seats.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask a parliamentary inquiry. Have the yeas and nays been ordered on the Domenici-Chiles amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been.

Mr. WEICKER. I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays have been vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment (No. 2786) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ and Mr. WEICKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Connecticut for yielding. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee if he would engage with me in a colloquy regarding a special program in the education appropriation?

Mr. WEICKER. I am delighted to discuss the matter with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding and for this discussion.

There is a small grant program in this appropriation if it is authorized. It is the Excellence in Education Program. It has been on the books for roughly 2½ years, and recently the Department of Education awarded the first round of grants under the program. The awards have had a significant, indeed quite a positive impact on students, the faculty and the surrounding community of the school districts which receive these excellence-in-education awards.

Mr. President, could we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are conversing will please retire to the Cloakrooms or to their seats.

The Senator may continue.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, further the House of Representatives has appropriated some $2,392,000 in their version of this appropriation for this program. The Senate version, the one that is before us now, does not contain any funding for the Excellence in Education Program in order to continue it.

Obviously, I think it is a mistake for us not to continue it. This program is working. It is working well. But I would note that in the report which accompanies the appropriation bill we now have under discussion, language is included which states that the committee will attempt to reconcile this problem, the lack of funding for this program in conference with the House. I want to say to my friends and most particularly my friend and colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator WEICKER, and also Senator PROXMIRE, the ranking minority member, that I recognize the very hard choices they have had to make and their subcommittees have had to make in fashioning this appropriation. Overall, I want to particularly point out I am supportive of their accomplishments. But I also want to emphasize that this is an issue and a matter of great concern to me. I want to ask the chairman if he would be willing to consider accepting the House numbers, the same $2,392,000 in conference if there is any possible way to do so.

Mr. WEICKER. I say to the distinguished Senator I would be willing to accommodate his concerns if there were to be an increase in the allocation for this subcommittee. We are at the limit. This is an activity we would like to support if there were room.

I would like to say I know this is not in the prepared colloquy, but the House of Representatives, in arriving at its figures, has left out billions of dollars because certain programs which they know are going to be reauthorized have not been reauthorized as of the date of making up their appropriations. But I would say that all of us in this room on a conservative principle certainly have included that money in devising our appropriation. They just left them out. I would like to know what is going to happen when those bills are authorized.

So I want to say this. It has been an exercise in the fiscal irresponsibility as devising budgets that are realistic. It makes it doubly hard for me to stand here with the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has a legitimate request. In fact, the bottom line, raw question he is asking me is how come they have it and we do not? All right. I am giving the answer. We have tried to be responsible in devising this budget. On the other hand, if there are moneys there as we arrive at the conference so we can accommodate the Senator from Pennsylvania, believe me, I will be happy to do so.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Connecticut for his comments. I appreciate his position, and I look forward to working with him.

Although I voted with the Senator from Connecticut to table the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, which has just basically shifted more money toward education and away from NIH, which vote I cast, I might say, with some mixed emotions, mixed because that money could be, if it is or was enough of it, very helpful to funding this program. I say I had discussions with the Senator from New Mexico and his staff on this point. I just was unwilling to cut money from NIH to fund the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

But it does strike me, Mr. President, that the fact more money has been allocated toward the education functions here may make it easier for the Senator from Connecticut to find the money for this particular program. I certainly hope so.

Mr. President, may I just add, with the forbearance of my colleagues for 1 further minute, I have a summary of two of the most vital and active programs being undertaken by and thanks to the excellence in education funds.

I ask unanimous consent that the summary of these two programs, one involving the Widener Memorial School in Philadelphia, the other the Samuel Gompers Memorial School, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE EFFECTS OF THE EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION PROGRAM ON TWO PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

In the recent grant competition for Excellence in Education Funds, Philadelphia was awarded grants for two of the proposals submitted for funding. One for the Widener Memorial School, and one for Samuel Gompers Elementary School. In each case, the awards will have a significant positive impact on the students, faculty and the surrounding community.

THE WIDENER MEMORIAL SCHOOL

The Widener Memorial School is the only special education center in Philadelphia specifically for physically handicapped children. The grounds and facilities themselves have been specifically designed to meet the needs of the students.

The program at Widener, The Parent-Helper Project, impacts directly on 360 students and 44 faculty members. The primary goal of the project is to recruit and train a number of parent-aides who will work directly in the classroom along with the teachers. The parents receive training that enables them to function as an integral part of the classroom becoming fully involved with their children's educational program on a day to day basis both in the classroom and, more importantly, at home. The presence of additional aides in the classroom enables teachers to spend more time directing and assisting individual students who, with a variety of physical handicaps will benefit greatly from the closer attention. The lower instructor-pupil ratio that comes as a result of the project allows students to spend more time on task which leads to increased student mastery of basic skills. Overall, Widener Memorial School has created a program that will serve to bring the school community closer together and combine their efforts to a common goal in the education of their children.

SAMUEL GOMPERS ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

The Samuel Gompers Elementary School, a racially isolated inner-city school, is using its award to expand and enlarge a successful project that has been in operation since 1983. The project, Communication Art Network (CAN), is an innovative program designed to meet the needs of children with a wide variety of intellectual, physical and creative talents. CAN has had a tremendous effect on the School community at Gompers. A highlight of the project has been the production of a children's video magazine that showcased creative writing, theatre, art and music. One version of the magazine, "The Living Literary Magazine," won first prize in the Pennsylvania Learning Resources Association Media Showcase. The project features instruction in such areas as animation, illustration and dramatization of stories and poems. Students involved in the project have developed more positive attitude towards learning which have resulted in increased academic achievement. Absenteeism at Gompers has decreased drastically to the point where the school's average daily attendance is seldom less than 91%, better than most public schools. Through the efforts of the teachers involved in the project, CAN is striving to bring the community and the school closer together and to encourage area businesses, museums and Institutes of Higher Education to take an active role in the education of young children.

In both cases it is quite obvious that the Excellence in Education grants have had a far-reaching and beneficial effect on school-community relationships. It gives both schools (as at Widener), and individual teachers (at Gompers), the opportunity to realize that their hard work and creativity are truly appreciated and perhaps can be replicated nationwide.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Labor-HHS appropriations bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee, and as amended on the floor.

This bill provides $100.8 billion in budget authority and $83.5 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1987 for the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, as well as several independent agencies.

With advance appropriations, outlays from prior-year obligations, and other adjustments taken into account, the bill as reported is under the Senate subcommittee's 302(b) allocation for budget authority by $0.6 billion and over in outlays by less than $50 million.

I want to commend Senator WIECKER for presenting a bill which is generally consistent with the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation for outlays and is lower than its allocation for budget authority. I am a member of this subcommittee, and I know how difficult it was to meet the budget resolution targets adopted by the Appropriations Committee.

This bill also includes new direct loan authority of $41 million and prior obligations of $1.26 billion to fund defaults of previous loans—primarily guaranteed student loans. The total of $1.3 billion is $0.1 billion under the subcommittee's 302(b) credit allocation.

It is clear, however, that Congress must do all it can to avoid a sequester under the Balanced Budget Act. I will therefore oppose any amendments which increase the outlays associated with this bill without appropriate offsetting savings. If we fail to avoid a sequester, it is the programs in this bill that will bear the brunt of the domestic reductions.

The House-passed bill includes $2.5 billion in budget authority and $2.2 billion in outlays more than the bill before us. It will be difficult to hold the line in conference, but we must make every effort to do so.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tables showing the relationship of the reported bill to the subcommittee's section 302(b) spending and credit allocations, the President's budget request, and the House-passed level, and a summary of total appropriations action to date, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 2787

(Purpose: To appropriate $1,000,000 for the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act of 1985 and to provide an off setting reduction)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is advised that there are underlying committee amendments pending.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the underlying amendments be temporarily set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] proposes an amendment numbered 2787.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 25, strike out "and".

On page 35, line 25, strike out "$2,090,018,000" and insert in lieu thereof "and the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act of 1985, $2,091,018,000".

On page 37, line 9, strike out "$128,819,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$127,819,000".

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to offer an amendment to provide $1 million in funding for the Child Development Associate Scholarship Program by decreasing the funding for general departmental management by $1 million. That is the offset.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and the distinguished Senator from Florida, Senator HAWKINS. I ask unanimous consent that Senator HAWKINS be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is the chairman of our Subcommittee on Children, Families, Drugs and Alcoholism of the Labor and Human Resources Committee. We had a number of hearings in which we listened to numerous witnesses talk about the problems of child care, and there are many.

One of the problems associated with child care is getting adequate training for the professional staffs working in our child care facilities and family day care homes. Many of these providers are the most underpaid people in the work force. When you consider the charge that they have of caring for young infants in many cases, it seems only appropriate that we try and provide some proper training for these people. Because of their low wages child care workers do not have the personal resources to actually pay for training and credentialing.

This $1 million I am requesting is the kind of amount that normally is rounded off in budgets. I am not suggesting this is a monumental amount. It is certainly an important amount. Nonetheless, we think it will make a significant difference in providing adequate training for those people who will be giving working parents much needed child care services.

One sure way to improve the quality of child care in this country is to improve the skills and performance of child care workers. By providing child-care workers with training and a credential, the Child Development Associate Scholarship Act will do just that.

The overwhelming majority of child care workers are women who work exceedingly long hours for very little pay. Close to 90 percent of all family day care providers, for example, earn less than the minimum wage. Yet such work provides an income for many women who would otherwise be dependent on the Aid for Dependent Children [AFDC] Program. Just as importantly, child care workers make it possible for other mothers to enter the work force and gain self sufficiency.

Obviously, with many families needing two incomes to make ends meet these days, this issue is extremely important.

The CDA credential is the only national credential formally certifying professional child care skills. The first CDA credential was awarded on July 24, 1975. To date, more than 15,000 child care workers have received the CDA credential. And some 31 States and the District of Columbia have made the CDA credential a part of their child care licensing requirements. We are very much indebted to Prof. Ed Zigler of Yale University in my State of Connecticut who established the CDA Credentialing Program over a decade ago during his tenure as Director of the Office of Child Development in the then Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

The CDA credential allows child care workers to gain professional status and often to improve their salaries and benefits. Yet CDA candidates are now faced with over a 100-percent increase in the fee they must pay to be certified, from $35 to $325 to $600. Given the extremely low salaries of most child care workers, such high fees could force many of them to forego training and subsequent CDA certification. At present, some 3,000 child care workers a year receive CDA certificates. With the scholarship program I am requesting funding for, an additional 1,000 to 2,000 low-income providers could be trained and certified.

The cost of my proposal is modest, totaling only $1 million. Yet the benefits will be enormous for the workers who receive training and formal recognition of their skills as well as for the children in their care. I know that it is always popular to take funds from the bureaucracy. But I have not decreased the funding of the departmental management fund without a great deal of thought. I feel that there is still room to take $1 million from that item and move it to a very worthy cause indeed: namely, the quality care of our Nation's children.

Mr. President, I hope that my colleagues will see this amendment as a proper and appropriate amendment. It is in the interest of families. We hear a great deal about family issues. Here is a program that will raise the standard of people directly responsible for rearing the children of this country.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I commend my distinguished colleague and friend from Connecticut for his amendment.

Mr. President, I might add that this is an area of increasing opportunity, requiring increasing professionalism. I support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I would like to add at this time that we have just finished the conference report on this subject with the House today. Hopefully that will be enacted by next week, which will be of assistance when this comes up. I commend both Senators from Connecticut for their vision in assisting children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? if not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2787) was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2788

(Purpose: To earmark $100,000 for the President's Council on Health Promotion and Disease Prevention)

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the underlying committee amendments be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] proposes an amendment numbered 2788.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 29, line 5, insert before the period a colon and "Provided further, That of the amounts appropriated under this heading, "$100,000 shall be available for the President's Council on Health Promotion and Disease Prevention".

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering to the Senate Labor, HHS, Education appropriations bill would provide transfer funding from one Public Health prevention effort to another. I am a cosponsor and supporter of legislation, S. 2057, which would establish a President's Council on Health Promotion and Disease Prevention. This legislation passed the authorizing committee, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and the full Senate without opposition. The legislation is presently awaiting action by the House of Representatives. I hope that the House will recognize the importance of creating this council to inform people about what they can do to improve the length and quality of their lives. Even if the House does not act before adjournment, I am encouraged that the administration also recognizes the advisability of creating a Presidential Council on Health Promotion and Disease Prevention and may create such a council through Executive order.

This amendment would earmark $100,000 from the Public Health Service management category, specifically, the funding for disease prevention and health promotion. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that S. 2057 would cost $500,000 but I feel that appointing a director and detailing staff for the Council from the Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion would significantly lower the actual costs of the program. Therefore, my amendment is limited to a $100,000 earmark of funds.

Mr. President, this amendment is budget neutral. I have modified my amendment to make it more acceptable and I hope that the floor managers will accept the amendment.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Florida on her amendment. I might add, I would recommend that the Senate accept it. It is my understanding that this $100,000 would be available pending authorization that we are looking for. With that in mind, I urge adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Florida, who has certainly been in the forefront on matters such as this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2788) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as if in morning business for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JAKE GARN'S GENEROUS AND COURAGEOUS ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today, one of our colleagues and friends, JAKE GARN, underwent surgery. I am happy to say initial reports indicate that the operation, in which doctors transplanted one of his kidneys to his daughter, Susan Rhae Garn Horne, went smoothly.

Needless to say, all of our thoughts and prayers are with the Garn family. We hope that the surgery will prove to be totally successful and that both JAKE and his daughter recover quickly.

JAKE GARN is not one of those men who parades his personal triumphs or tragedies in public, and he has been very reluctant to talk about this operation.

But those of us who know him can say, with no hesitancy, that this is a more generous and courageous act. Two of JAKE's sons were suitable donors. He is up for reelection this November. Yet, as a father, he felt it was his responsibility, and it was his desire, to be the one to donate a kidney.

This is typical of JAKE. His commitment, his sense of duty to his family and country, are quiet but total.

Mr. President, I know every one in the Senate today joins me in expressing our hopes and prayers for the Garn family, and our heartfelt wish that JAKE and his daughter, Susan Rhae, will return to their normal, productive lives very, very soon.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I am delighted that the majority leader has brought up Senator GARN's action. I have great admiration and respect for JAKE GARN. JAKE and I have served on the Banking Committee ever since he came to the Senate. He succeeded me as chairman of that committee so we worked very, very closely together.

He is a remarkable man, a man of courage, a man of absolute integrity. He and I disagree on a few issues, but we agree on a lot more. I think what he has done with respect to his daughter is typical of JAKE GARN. As the majority leader pointed out, he does want to avoid publicity on this but it is an act of courage and an act to demonstrate how deeply he feels about his family.

He has a marvelous family. He had seven children at last count and he is still moving.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1630

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2789

(Purpose: To provide an additional $1,900,000 to the Employment Standards Administration for 8 additional Administrative Law Judges and support staffing)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are underlying committee amendments now pending.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the underlying committee amendments—did the Chair say there are amendments in place?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that they be temporarily set aside so I may call up this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. FORD, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes an amendment numbered 2789.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On Page 7, line 25, delete $192,709,000 and insert in lieu thereof $194,209,000;

On page 14, line 21, delete $160,180,000 and insert in lieu thereof, $158,680,000.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment will add $1.5 million to the Employment Standards Administration to hire eight additional administrative law judges and support staffing to decrease the backlog of black lung claims by 1988. This funding should increase the number of black lung dispositions at the administrative law judge level to 10,500 annually. I have discussed this amendment with the manager and I hope that it will be acceptable.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, this amendment by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and as cosponsored as I understand it by Senator METZENBAUM, would shift $1.5 million to help reduce the backlog of black lung claims but not add to total outlays of the bill. It would provide for eight additional law judges and support staff. Last year, the committee agreed to add funds to reduce the backlog of black lung claims to less than 3 years. It now appears this objective may not be achieved unless we agree to this amendment. I recommend we accept this amendment. I recommend we take it to conference. I commend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who has never once in all his important duties as minority or majority leader forgotten the people who sent him to the Senate in terms of their needs.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the manager of the bill, for his very charitable remarks with respect to me personally. I thank him for accepting the amendment.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I enthusiastically support this amendment. What it does is to speed up the payments to black lung sufferers and victims. I think it is exactly the kind of thing we should do, and I commend the distinguished minority leader on offering the amendment. It is a very good amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, the ranking manager of the bill, for his support of this amendment. I thank him for his remarks. I do want to make it clear that Mr. METZENBAUM is, indeed, a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2789) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I thank both managers of the bill.

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2790

(Purpose: To appropriate funds for the Kansas Educational Satellite Video Communications Center and to provide an offsetting reduction)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, are there committee amendments pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are pending.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that they be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] proposes an amendment numbered 2790.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

On page 54, line 12, strike out "$41,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$36,500,000".

On page 54, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

For making a grant to the Kansas State University located in Manhattan, Kansas, to enable the Kansas State University to establish the Kansas Educational Satellite Video Communications Center in order to produce and disseminate television programming in subject areas of local, regional, national, and international importance, $4,500,000 to remain available until expended.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is offering an amendment to provide $4.5 million for an educational satellite video communications center at Kansas State University, in Manhattan, KS. The total cost of this project is $9 million, but the university is setting a good cost-sharing example by coming up with 50 percent from private sources. In order to accommodate the distinguished chairman of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Subcommittee, there is an offset provided for—$4.5 million would come from the Carl Perkins scholarship fund, leaving a total of $5 million in that fund. Since the House bill contains $21 million for this purpose, I believe this leaves plenty of room for negotiation in conference.

COMMUNICATIONS CENTER TO BE A NATIONAL RESOURCE

Mr. President, university instructional programs must keep pace with the explosion of knowledge confronting us today by incorporating new technologies in this teaching method. Television and video technology offer special educational opportunities because of the growing popularity of video recorders, the proliferation of satellite receiving dishes, and the availability of television receivers in virtually every household in this country.

Kansas State University is uniquely qualified to produce and disseminate television programming in several subject areas of local, regional, national, and international importance. At a time when there is tremendous hardship in the farm belt, this type of center would provide easy access to job retraining for farmers who must seek a livelihood off the farm. I think the value of this type of program speaks for itself. We must do everything we possibly can to help the dislocated farmer readjust to a new working world. K-State has developed a unique program in this area, which would benefit many States and the university is more than willing to share its programs with other States and universities in a major cooperative effort.

SPECIAL KSU EXPERTISE

KSU possesses special expertise for which the satellite video communications facility will be well utilized. I might mention just a few of these important areas. Many of their programs have been established to enhance our trade capabilities, especially with regard to argicultural exports.

INTERNATIONAL FOOD MARKETING

K-State conducts world-renowned training courses in grain handling, milling, and bakery science through its department of grain science and industry—the only such department in the Western World. In the last 3 years, KSU trained more than 3,800 persons from more than 70 countries—all current or potential customers of American food products—helping to open and maintain markets throughout the world. Video transmission of these training courses will vastly increase their impact.

VETERINARY MEDICINE

The Kansas/Nebraska Regional Veterinary College serves a tremendous concentration of veterinarians working with food and companion animals. Kansas and Nebraska rank second and third in production of cattle. The need for veterinary continuing education is great. Low population density makes video transmission an important tool in presenting new veterinary technologies to practitioners—speeding implementation by years. The results can be dramatic. For example, a 1-percent decrease in cattle mortality adds $80 to $90 million annually to the combined economies of Texas, Kansas, and Nebraska.

FOOD TECHNOLOGY DEGREE/CREDIT PROGRAM

KSU has a unique food technology program, and 27 States have requested affiliation with this program. In addition, the Defense Department would like to be able to train its personnel around the world. Satellite video communication can make this resource available to all those who need it.

INTERNATIONAL MARKETING RESEARCH CENTER

This center, which is affiliated with KSU's College of Business Administration, conducts research on issues critical to the development and evaluation of strategic trade alternatives by decisionmakers in business and government. One goal is to increase interaction among business executives, academic researchers, and government officials. Video conferencing can be an important tool in accomplishing this objective, and in facilitating the ongoing research programs of the center.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION

Video communications can greatly enhance the ability of the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service to provide cost-effective services to residents of the State—especially in rural areas. In this area, Kansas can serve as a national model for the delivery of these critical information services through video transmission.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Mr. President, there is a good chance that this satellite video communications center may be authorized by the time the 99th Congress adjourns, and I therefore ask my colleagues to support this amendment. Such a program will benefit States other than Kansas, and provide a valuable national, as well as international, resource.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield? As the majority leader knows, I have great admiration and respect for him. I am concerned about this amendment, however. It is an amendment for Kansas. It is an amendment that takes $4.5 million as I understand it, from the Carl Perkins Research Program, and it would provide instead for a facility in Manhattan, KS, to establish a Kansas educational satellite video.

What concerns this Senator is that it seems to be for one State but taking money from a fund which, as I understand it, provides scholarships for students all over the country. If the distinguished majority leader were providing for a ROBERT DOLE scholarship program, I would be enthusiastically in favor of that, and I hesitate to do this because I think he is a wonderful majority leader. He has done a great job. He would be even better as President of the United States, and if I were a Republican I would vote for him. This seems to this Senator to be something that is within the purview and power of a majority leader but something that just seems to me is not the way we ought to allocate funds.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I know that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has been a watchdog of everything that goes on in the committee and properly so, and indeed I have tried to contribute toward that end myself. We have had requests from Senators on both sides as to various educational institutions and/or their facilities. More often than not, they do not make it the whole way down the road. We have a conference yet to go. We have the matter of the House's opinion on this. But I have always tried to encourage my colleagues wherever possible at least to have these projects laid out before the entire constitutional process. And for that reason I support it.

Senator PROXMIRE, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, knows full well that there are others who have reservations such as he has on matters that deal with these educational institutions, but I really do not know any way of getting the mule's attention, if you will, except to get the project on the road. I think this amendment does that. For that reason, I support it, and I would be willing to take it to conference.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my problem with this is that in the first place I understand there has not been an authorization. I understand they will not push it in conference unless there is an authorization in the meanwhile but this paves the way. They can say, "After all, the full Senate met on this, they acted on it, they approved it." There have been no hearings on this, as far as I know—maybe there have been—no hearings in the subcommittee I am told by the staff.

So this $4.5 million would be used to establish a radio facility in Kansas out of funds that would be provided for scholarships to train teachers throughout the country.

This Senator is very reluctant to make this objection, not only because I know the kind of power the majority leader has, which he wields with great fairness and justice, but also because I have such great admiration for him. I wish there were some other way we could do this and provide for the scholarships to continue, which I think are very good things, rather than provide this for a single State.

Mr. DOLE Mr. President, I do not disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin. He has made the statement before. I wanted to call up the amendment and make a record here.

I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment. I want to pursue this. There may be a way we can broaden it. The last thing I would want to do is take anything away from the Carl Perkins scholarship fund. There is still $21 million on the House side, and this would reduce it to $5 million, which is about what the President requested.

I do not disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin. I think we have to be very careful. We have had that debate on this floor less than 2 or 3 months ago. But I believe there is a need, and I believe that need can be served. It extends beyond the boundaries of Kansas. We are in a farm crisis. We must have jobs for farmers when they lose their farms. We believe there are a lot of possibilities with the video system.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas withhold?

Would it meet the objections of the Senator from Wisconsin, while at the same time preserving the ideals expressed in the proposal of the distinguished Senator from Kansas, to so modify the amendment as to make it subject to authorization?

Mr. PROXMIRE. The problem I have with that is that the authorization process should come first. We have seen again and again that we put these programs on appropriations bills, and then, having done that, the authorization committee is in a difficult position. It seems to me that we should proceed in an orderly way.

There is no question in my mind that if it is pushed hard, the authorizing committee will act. We should let the authorizing committee act and proceed, not out of order.

As I understand it, this would be subject to a continuing resolution if it is authorized. In the meanwhile, it can be put on the continuing resolution, having been authorized, and I would not object under those circumstances.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicate to my colleagues here, and those who may be listening, that we will pursue it. I do think there is a way we can broaden the amendment so that it would not be limited to the boundaries of Kansas. Kansas State University and universities in Wisconsin and other States have an outstanding record. In fact, we conduct world-renowned training courses in milling and baking, dealing in about 70 countries, and over the years trained more than 3,800 persons.

I am not trying to be parochial about it. I think there is almost unlimited potential in this effort.

I do not disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin, and I appreciate his remarks. He may be a delegate down the line at our convention.

Mr. PROXMIRE. If the Senator runs as a Democrat, I hope I am.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment at this time and I will be back, working with both Senators. I thank the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1700

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICKLES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed as though in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes to discuss the recent tax bill approved by the joint House-Senate conference on August 16. It is no great secret that I have grave and serious reservations about this bill. In fact, I intend to vote against the conference report and to oppose the bill on the floor of the Senate.

I do not intend to discuss at this time the economic consequences of the tax bill. Rather, I would like to place in the record a series of articles that have been written during the past 4 weeks since the bill was approved by the conference committee. I believe that these articles will be helpful to those Senators who have not yet decided how they intend to vote. The articles focus on a range of issues and express a variety of legitimate concerns relative to the tax bill. I hope each Senator and his/her staff will take the time to review these articles. In an effort to facilitate review of these materials, I have included here a brief summary of the articles.

Article 1. The first two articles highlight what I believe should be one of the principal issues discussed during the upcoming debate on the Senate floor over the tax bill. This issue is whether the bill will create an environment of tax certainty. We have all been asked time and again to leave the tax laws alone once we are done with this tax revision effort. I believe that an acid test of the worth of this tax bill should be its life expectancy—its viability for more than 2 or 3 years. However, the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee is already advocating increasing the income tax rates in a tax bill that is not yet even written. If lower rates are the fuel for this tax bill, it appears that the gas tank is almost empty and we haven't even left the driveway. I also wonder how many of us do not believe that this bill is flawed in one or more substantial ways? Do we really think that we will not be rewritting the income tax laws of this country as soon as next year, or the year after? The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee doesn't think so, so why should we?

Article 2. The next article does not bear directly on the tax bill, but rather focuses on the budget deficit. We still have a lot of work to do if we expect to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget objective for 1987. We have a lot to do just to come within $10 billion of the 1987 objective and thereby avoid the sequestration process. The proposed tax bill is allegedly revenue neutral over the 5-year period from 1987 to 1991. It is not, however, revenue neutral on a year-by-year basis. This, in 1987 the tax bill, if enacted, will cause revenues to increase by $11 billion—more than enough to avoid sequestration. If we use the $11 billion for this purpose, we will be singing the swan song for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings because in 1988 and 1989 the tax bill will have revenue shortfalls of $17 billion and $15 billion, respectively. We are only fooling ourselves if we think we can overcome an additional $32 billion budget shortage in 1988 and 1989. This the laudable goals of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, which we passed less than 1 year ago, will become an anachronism and be left to gather dust on the shelf.

Article 3. The next article focuses on the so-called "revenue neutrality" of the bill. It points out that the only common thread among revenue analysts of the bill is their agreement that the bill's "uncertainties are vast."

Article 4. Next is an article asserting that the tax reform bill will unravel in only a few years' time. Remember the cry of individuals and businesses alike for "certainty." "Just tell us what the rules are and then leave us alone for a few years." How many of us believe the so-called "Tax Reform Act of 1986" won't be substantially altered and rewritten several times during the next 5 years?

Article 5. Next is a series of articles addressing the general impact the bill will have on growth, productivity, capital investment and job creation. These articles are followed by articles outlining the negative impact the tax bill will have on small businesses (other than accountants and tax lawyers), transportation companies, banks, savings and loans, real estate, and venture capital. I have also included two articles on the impact the bill will have on higher education, including one in which Sheldon Steinbach of the American Council of Education states, "The bill is the greatest catastrophe for higher education in 25 years."

Article 6. The next article illustrates how the tax bill will exacerbate our trade balance rather than improve it. How can we convince taxpayers that the trade problem is of major concern to us when we pass tax legislation that makes the problem worse?

Article 7. The final article covers statements made by the President's Chief of Staff, Donald T. Regan, shortly after the conference committee finished its work on the tax bill. Regan indicated that the President will sign the bill even though the President did not yet know either what was in the bill or the economic consequences thereof.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the various articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROSTENKOWSKI URGES INCOME TAX RISE TO CUT DEFICIT RATHER THAN NEW LEVIES

(By Jeffrey H. Birnbaum)

WASHINGTON.—Chairman Dan Rostenkowski of the House Ways and Means Committee said the budget deficit should be trimmed by raising income-tax rates and not by instituting new kinds of taxes.

In a speech to an economic symposium here, the Illinois Democrat specifically rejected new taxes on consumption, such as a sales tax or a value-added tax. Such taxes, he said, are most burdensome on those least able to pay them and are deceitful, because they are largely invisible to those paying them.

But, in a surprise that could affect the debate on the pending tax-overhaul bill, he also suggested that after that measure is approved there should be an increase in the individual tax rates that he and others have labored for two years to bring down.

The pending bill would lower tax rates by curtailing a wide range of deductions and credits. The measure's stated top individual tax rate is 28%, although the actual top rate is higher for many upper-middle and upper-income taxpayers because of a surtax. The current top tax rate is 50%.

HIGHER, PROGRESSIVE RATES

"Everyone knows we will eventually need a tax increase to reduce the deficit," he said. "But the increase in revenue should come through higher, progressive rates on income, not by a low, regressive tax on need."

Separately, U.S. businesses establishing offshore insurance companies would find it costlier under the proposed tax-law revision (see story on page 40).

After the speech, Rep. Rostenkowski told reporters that he wouldn't push for a tax-rate rise until President Reagan asked for one first—a request the president has firmly said he won't make. But, during the speech, in a departure from his prepared remarks, the chairman made a plea for Mr. Reagan to reconsider his opposition to a tax increase.

He said that he hoped "sincerely" that the administration "will awaken" to the deficit problem. He called on the president to show "leadership" in solving it before the problem becomes insurmountable.," He added that without leadership from the president and from other lawmakers "we're going to have difficulties passing any (deficit-reduction) legislation in this Congress."

AMMUNITION FOR OPPONENTS

While the statement probably doesn't jeopardize the bill, which is expected to pass when Congress returns from recess next week, it could give opponents of the measure something on which to seize. Members of Congress who gave up the tax breaks reluctantly may view the remarks as evidence that the Democrats are going to renege on the rate end of the trade-off.

Rep. Rostenkowski made his remarks as part of a symposium entitled "The Consumption Tax: A Better Alternative?" He said he addressed the group to bring some political perspective to the fast-growing idea. He said Congress would reject a consumption tax as an "unfair," despite the increased talk among lawmakers and academics about using the device to reduce deficits.

He repeated his earlier statements that there is an increasing need to raise revenue to stanch the budgetary red ink. But he hinted that his preference would be, eventually, to raise the top individual tax rate that would be set by the pending bill or to add another, higher bracket.

He argued that the tax-overhaul bill was heading to final approval because it was "fair"—placing a bigger tax burden on higher-income individuals and making individuals with equal income pay approximately equal taxes. The low rate wasn't as important, he contended.

"President Reagan's opposition notwithstanding, this country isn't willing to pay higher taxes—as long as they are fair," he said.

Republicans didn't welcome the chairman's remark. "How disappointing to have the possibility of higher rates raised when we've just won such a major battle to lower the rates," said Rep. Jack Kemp (R., N.Y.), a GOP leader on the tax-overhaul issue. "This kind of talk is counterproductive to final passage of this historic bill."

The Ways and Means chairman said he was discussing higher rates now because he didn't want to see the well-attended symposium end without injecting a politician's perspective into the growing clamor for a consumption tax.

Rep. Rostenkowski said a consumption tax would be opposed by state governments that believe sales taxes are under their province. Also, he suggested that any such tax would be so full of exceptions it would be widely criticized. But most of all, he said, a consumption tax wouldn't be equitable and fair.

Rep. Rostenkowski said he expects the House to take up the tax bill the week of Sept. 15, if, as expected, he and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood (R., Ore.) are done dispensing billions of dollars of transition-rule relief to other members. The House would vote first, Rep. Rostenkowski said, and at this point, only scattered opposition, possibly from Republicans, is expected there. "I'm very optimistic," he said.

In the Senate, more vocal opposition is possible. Sen John Danforth (R., Mo.), a leading tax-overhaul opponent, has raised the possibility of filibustering the bill, but isn't expected to do so. Opposition in the Senate includes members who are angered by the repeal of the sales-tax deduction, by a retroactive tax increase on government pensioners and by tax increases on business. Also, liberal lawmakers who dislike lowering the top tax rate so drastically could continue to oppose the bill.

Members of Congress increasingly are discussing using a revenue windfall from the tax bill to help reach fiscal 1987 deficit-cutting targets under the Gramm-Rudman law. Though the tax-overhaul legislation raises neither more nor less revenue than current law over the next five years, it does both raise and lose revenue from year to year over the period.

In fiscal 1987 the pending bill would raise $11 billion compared with current law. Members who deal with the federal budget are now debating whether that gain will be used to prevent the mandatory cuts necessary to meet Gramm-Rudman targets.

EVENTUAL RISE IN TAX RATES ADVOCATED

(By Anne Swardson)

House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), having helped shape a tax-revision bill that would cut individual tax rates dramatically, said yesterday those rates eventually should be raised to reduce the federal budget deficit.

Rostenkowski's suggestion came as Congress is preparing to take up the final version of the legislation, which would limit or abolish many deductions along with cutting rates.

Rostenkowski has consistently favored raising taxes to shrink the deficit, but until yesterday had not specified how.

Revenues, he said, should be raised by increasing tax rates above the levels in the pending bill, rather than by some other mechanism, such as a tax on consumption.

"Everyone knows we will eventually need a tax increase to reduce the deficit," Rostenkowski told a conference on consumption taxes. "There I would agree with proponents of consumption taxes. But the increase in revenue should come through higher progressive rates on income, not by a low regressive tax on need."

Rostenkowski added that President Reagan would have to end his long-standing opposition to tax increases before Democrats would openly support them. A spokesman said Rostenkowski believes that higher rates are the best alternative because no one would be unduly harmed by higher rates under the pending bill's more evenly shared tax burden.

The tax bill that Rostenkowski and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood (R-Ore.) wrestled through a congressional conference committee just before Congress departed for its summer recess last month would replace the current 15 rates, ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent, with three rates—15 percent, 28 percent and, on higher-income taxpayers, 33 percent.

The conference agreement is expected to be considered by the House and Senate as early as the week of Sept. 15. Congressional aides said the House probably will vote first, because less opposition is expected there and House rules make it harder to delay consideration.

Meanwhile, the leading Senate opponent of the bill said yesterday that he does not currently plan to filibuster the legislation, but that the intensity of his opposition will depend on how many allies he can find.

Sen. John C. Danforth (R-Mo.), a member of the small group that wrote most of the Senate version, said he will speak against the compromise measure on grounds that it would harm the economy and reduce many tax benefits he supports. But he said the Senate probably will approve the package.

His strategy "depends a lot on how much company I have," Danforth said. "If I'm just one voice, I'll make my speech and try to do it clearly and take enough time to spell it out, hopefully persuasively, and then we'll vote. . . . My intention is to win it or lose it on the merits."

Danforth said many Senators are withholding decisions until they see all the elements of the final package being drafted by committee staffers.

Many legislators in both Houses are especially interested in whether they obtained the "transition rules" they wanted and may be reluctant to speak out against the bill lest they lose their influence over those breaks,

"Once you jump ship, all your bags are thrown out after you," Danforth said.

GAO WARNS OF MORE GROWTH IN '87 DEFICIT

(By Helen Dewar)

The General Accounting Office warned yesterday that there is a "strong possibility" the fiscal 1987 deficit will be substantially higher than was projected last month by the government's budget experts.

Directors of the President's Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office estimated Aug. 20, after averaging their separate projections, that the Federal deficit for next year would be $163.4 billion, $19.4 billion more than the target set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget-control law.

But the GAO, in a report released yesterday by House Government Operations Committee Chairman Jack Brooks (D-Tex.), estimated that the deficit will be $167.6 billion, or $4.2 billion higher, even with what it regards as optimistic economic growth projections.

With what GAO regards as a more reasonable growth-rate projection, the deficit would be still higher. Other factors, such as continued economic sluggishness, uncertainties over Federal revenue from the pending tax-overhaul bill and unplanned expenditures for unavoidable needs, could lead to "significant increases" in the deficit above current predictions, GAO warned.

"Considering these factors, a strong possibility exists that fiscal year 1987 will see significant increases in the deficit beyond the current estimates under the act," said Charles A. Bowsher, comptroller general and head of GAO, in his report to Brooks. "Therefore, further budget reductions or revenue increases will likely be required to achieve the act's target deficit level of $144 billion in fiscal 1987, even if the sequesters [spending cutbacks] estimated in the OMB/CBO report are implemented."

Under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, across-the-board spending cuts, called a sequester, are required to reach the $144 billion target if it appears that the target will be exceeded by $10 billion or more.

Thus, under the preliminary $163.4 billion estimate from the OMB and CBO, Congress faces the choice of reducing the deficit by about $9 billion or imposing a "sequester" of $19 billion.

Or, as many lawmakers believe is likely, it could simply rely on the tax-overhaul bill to provide a revenue windfall sufficient to fill the deficit gap, even though congressional leaders say they oppose such a course.

The findings from GAO, the auditing arm of Congress, are advisory only, but they may prove helpful to those in Congress who are arguing for additional budget cuts to assure that deficit targets are met for this year and for future years, when even larger deficit reductions are required by the budget-control law.

Congress is expected to begin dealing with the problem when it returns from its Labor Day recess Monday.

Congress had originally made GAO responsible for enforcing Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but the Supreme Court ruled last July that it violates the constitutional separation-of-powers doctrine to give executive powers to a legislative agency. Efforts are under way in Congress to reinstate GAO as the enforcement agency for future years by eliminating constitutional objections to its role.

The OMB/CBO deficit estimate of $163.4 billion was the result, as required by law, of averaging forecasts from the two agencies.

OMB calculated a deficit of $156.2 billion for next fiscal year, while CBO estimated it would be $170.6 billion. The GAO estimate fell in between, but closer to CBO's.

In its deficit projection for next year, the GAO contended that the OMB underestimated costs of military programs, the Federal pay increase and costs of defaults on ship construction mortgages. It found that the CBO underestimated U.S. Postal Service savings.

While not using the lower figure in its calculations, the GAO also said that economic growth in fiscal 1987 was likely to be 2.8 percent, as opposed to CBO's figure of 3.2 percent and OMB's 3.7 percent. If the CBO's estimate were recalculated by using a 2.8 percent growth rate, the deficit projection would be $173.9 billion, which Brooks said "may well be the most realistic figure available."

VAST UNCERTAINTY IS THE ONLY CONSENSUS ABOUT THE MEASURE'S REVENUE NEUTRALITY

(By Paul Blustein)

WASHINGTON.—Two years ago, when President Reagan proposed overhauling the Tax Code, he insisted that the new tax system must generate the same amount of revenue as the current one. The President said he didn't want a tax increase, and he didn't want tax revision to exacerbate the budget deficit either.

Congressional tax-writers promised to abide by Mr. Reagan's rule. Indeed, they took it so seriously that House-Senate negotiations nearly fell apart late last week when a compromise tax plan turned out to have a $17 billion revenue shortfall. Although the amount constituted a tiny fraction of the $5 trillion the Government expects to receive over the next five years, lawmakers worked over the weekend to patch up the problem.

So, on paper, the tax bill moving toward final passage is "revenue neutral." But there are reasons to doubt that the paper projections would prove accurate.

Some economists fear that the tax plan would widen the already huge deficit. They argue that the bill would weaken the economy and that certain provisions, such as the one eliminating preferential treatment for capital gains, would raise less money than expected.

A smaller group of analysts insists that the plan would engender a bonanza of unexpected revenue by spurring economic growth. Everyone agrees on only one thing: The uncertainties are vast.

"In the best of times, it's difficult to work up an estimate of the revenue effect of just a modest change in the tax law," says Murray Weidenbaum, the President's former chief economist. "When you have such a conglomeration of interacting changes as this, it's a real challenge."

Sen. Bob Packwood, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, goes even further. In a press conference Friday, he blasted as "untrustworthy information" the official revenue estimates prepared by the staff economists of the congressional Joint Tax Committee.

The Oregon Republican recounted disgustedly how the estimates had changed several times for the worse in recent weeks, with the cruelest blow coming Thursday night, just as he was wrapping up a hard-fought deal with House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski. Sen. Packwood said he and the Illinois Democrat "almost cried" over the latest shortfall estimate. Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole said his recommendation was: "Shoot the estimator."

Other lawmakers decried such talk as unfair scapegoating. In the end, the tax-writers overcame their frustration and fixed the plan because nobody really questions the professional integrity of the revenue-estimating staffs at the Joint Tax Committee and the Treasury.

But the estimators themselves say that much of their job involves educated guesswork. Even though they use computer models based on extensive tax-return data, their numbers can prove wildly off the mark. A classic example is the 1981 tax change allowing all taxpayers to deduct contributions to an Individual Retirement Account. The official estimate projected a $5.5 billion revenue loss from IRA's over the fiscal 1983-85 period. The loss turned out to be a whopping $32 billion.

Thomas Vasquez, who headed the Treasury's revenue-estimating staff at the time, acknowledges that he "blew" the estimate by assuming that taxpayer response to IRA's would be restrained, as had been the case with the limited number of individuals who were eligible for the retirement accounts prior to 1981. But once the tax break became available to all, "banks started advertising all over the place, offering things like toasters to people who started IRAs," Mr. Vasquez says. The result was a far bigger flood of money into the tax-sheltered investments than the Treasury estimators had imagined.

Are there any IRA-like time bombs amid the revenue estimates for the current tax bill? Some economists, including former White House economist Martin Feldstein, think that one case is the provision eliminating the preferential treatment for capital gains.

The Joint Tax Committee staff projects a revenue gain of about $25 billion to $30 billion over five years from eliminating the capital-gains preference. Mr. Feldstein, contends that the change actually will lose revenue. Lifting tax rates on capital gains above a certain point, he says, induces taxpayers to sell substantially fewer assets, resulting in fewer taxable gains.

The estimators most vociferous critics are supply-siders, who anticipate a surge in economic growth and revenue from lower tax rates. They accuse the estimators of failing to take account of the fact that taxpayers will alter their behavior in response to changes in the tax law.

The estimators say that this accusation is simply wrong and that their figures factor in changes in taxpayer behavior in response to specific tax changes such as the elimination of a deduction or credit. They acknowledge that their estimates don't assume a burst in economic growth. But they point out that both the Treasury and Congress prohibited the use of any such assumption—partly on the grounds that economists disagree sharply about whether the "macro" economic effects of tax revision will be positive or negative.

Mr. Weidenbaum, for one, believes that the bill's repeal of business and investment tax breaks will stunt growth, leading to a worsening of the budget deficit. "You can quarrel about how much, but I think the directional changes, at least in the short run, are pretty clear," he says.

J. Gregory Ballentine, a former Treasury official, sees another reason for wondering whether the revenue estimates are overly rosy. The estimators, he says, don't account for the fact that dividend income to individuals likely would drop as a result of the bill's stiff tax boost on corporate profits. Lower dividend income translates into lower individual tax payments—perhaps $10 billion worth over five years, says Mr. Ballentine, who is now national director of tax analysis for the accounting firm of Peat, Marwick Mitchell & Co.

But Mr. Ballentine adds that he doesn't see any overall bias in the numbers one way or the other. The estimators, he says, have made complex calculations about how taxpayers will respond to—and circumvent—new tax rules. Some look a bit high, others a bit low. "It's so blessed uncertain," he says, "and it cuts both ways."

James Wetzler, the former deputy chief of staff at the Joint Tax Committee, recalls that when he left Capitol Hill at the end of 1984 he admonished the revenue estimators to err on the side of caution. Now an associate director at Bear, Stearns & Co., Mr. Wetzler remembers telling the economists that if federal revenue rolls in at higher-than-anticipated rates, the only thing that will happen is that "President Reagan will be saying this proves what a great idea tax reform is, and what a great success supply-side economics is." But "if revenues turn out lower than expected," he continued, "then they (the estimators) will have aggravated a serious fiscal problem in this country."

Even a revenue-neutral plan, after all, would still leave a budget deficit in the $165 billion to $200 billion range for the next fiscal year. Yesterday, Rep. Rostenkowski said that Congress should turn its attention to narrowing that gap with a tax increase—despite the administration's strong objections.

WHY TAX REFORM WILL UNRAVEL

(By Mervyn King)

The euphoria of the House-Senate tax conferees is understandable, but it reflects a misplaced optimism. For although the bill isn't even law yet, it's already easy to see reasons why this tax revolution is likely to unravel in a few years time.

The prospective problems with the tax bill stem mainly from the harmful effects it is likely to have on business. The reduction in personal tax rates (to the two eventual rates of 15 percent and 28 percent, with an effective top rate of 33 percent) is to be paid for with increased taxes from companies. The corporate rate will be cut from 46 percent to 34 percent. But the major source of new revenue in the bill will be an increase in business taxes of about $100 billion over five years.

Legislators and taxpayers alike seem convinced by the argument that companies—like individuals—should pay their "fair share" of taxes. But this approach is totally fallacious. Taxes levied on companies are paid ultimately by individuals. They affect the welfare of those who work for or own the company, or buy its products.

I see three basic reasons why the new tax bill is likely to unravel over the next several years:

INVESTMENT WILL DECLINE

The abolition of the investment tax credit and the smaller depreciation allowances for companies will reduce the incentive for companies to invest. Lower investment in the future will inevitably lead to pressure either to bring back the investment tax credit or to introduce equivalent new incentives. These could be financed by raising the corporate income tax rate from its new level of 34 percent to a higher rate. This apparently costless way of stimulating new investment might be irresistible to politicians.

The problem is that businessmen will anticipate this scenario, making it a self-fulfilling prophecy. They will be skeptical of how long the new 34 percent rate will last. Fears of a higher tax rate in the future, and the incentive to delay investment in order to benefit from any restored credits, would depress investment even further.

TAX REVENUES WILL FALL

The proposals mean that companies will pay more taxes in the early years and lower taxes in the later years of an investment project than at present. That's because of changes in depreciation rules that will require companies to pay more money "up front." Numbers have been produced to justify the claim of revenue neutrality over the next five years. But will the plan raise as much revenue after that period as the current system? Isn't it possible that revenues will decline?

These revenue worries, coupled with fears about the size of the federal deficit, raise the possibility that tax rates will have to be raised in the future. If tax rates were to rise in the future—either to reduce the federal deficit or to put more of the tax burden on the better-off—then many of the tax simplifications in the bill would come under great pressure. A special rate for capital gains might be necessary once again, for example, if the top tax rate was increased much beyond 28 percent.

INFLATION WILL ERODE THE BILL'S EFFECTS

When the current cycle of tax reform started, the Treasury plan contained proposals for comprehensive indexation of the tax base, covering individual capital gains, interest and corporate depreciation. All of these have been scrapped.

The lack of indexation in the bill leaves individuals and companies exposed to the effects of inflation. For example, the bill treats capital gains that result from inflation as income, rather than an erosion of real capital. The bill is also likely to tie depreciation allowances to the historic cost of purchasing an asset, which means they won't be adequate to finance replacement of the asset when there is inflation. It is true that inflation is lower than in the recent past. But even with an inflation rate of 5 percent, the lack of indexing will double the effective tax rate on a security yielding a return of 10 percent.

Despite these criticisms, the tax bill has some obvious benefits. It has shown that Congress can prevail over the many lobbying groups, so long as it comes up with a tax package sufficiently comprehensive that the number of gainers exceeds the number of losers. A simpler tax system with lower marginal tax rates has indeed emerged. But nobody should assume that it will propel America into a economy with growth rates that (until recently) we associated with competitors such as Japan. Remember that in Britain over 95 percent of taxpayers face a marginal income tax rate of only 29 percent.

But a successful tax reform should create a solid tax base that can withstand the vagaries of the fiscal climate. And in this respect, the current bill isn't adequate. The need for an extraordinarily complicated minimum tax, on both individuals and corporations, illustrates how far the plan is from a satisfactory overhaul of the tax base.

Is there an alternative way to attain a tax system that is simple, fair and encourages growth? Many distinguished economists and lawyers agree that the solution would be a gradual move towards a system that taxes cash flows.

At the personal level this would imply taxing consumption, and for companies, a cashflow corporate income tax. What would this mean in practice? All forms of saving would be treated as IRAs are now. New saving would be tax free and spending out of dissaving (proceeds of stock sales that were not reinvested, for example) would be taxed. Capital gains would be taxed at ordinary income tax rates if spent and would be tax-free if reinvested. The opportunities for tax avoidance—and the resulting diversion of valuable resources into activities with a very high private and very low social payoff, which stems from our present distinction between captial and income—would be largely eliminated.

The most important feature of the new tax bill may be that it is the last gasp of income taxation, and a prelude to just such a consumption-tax approach. During the post-war period there has been a steady shift in this direction, towards the taxation of cash flows and consumption, in most advanced economies. The logic of both experience and economic analysis—for once happily united—points to consumption taxation as the basis for successful and lasting reform. The cashflow tax may be an idea whose time has not yet come. But it is waiting in the wings. If the reformed income tax is at the plate, the cashflow tax is on deck—anticipating a strikeout.

DEALING A ONE-TWO PUNCH TO GROWTH

(By Murray L. Weidenbaum)

The euphoria on Capitol Hill about the benefits of tax reform is a rare bipartisan phenomenon that should make an economist reluctant to play the traditional role of wet blanket. But, alas, that is the destiny of our profession. Stepping back from the details of the 1986 tax reform bill and focusing on the big picture, it is evident that the impending changes in the Internal Revenue Code will depress the economy.

True, most individual and family taxpayers will pay less in Federal taxes. But, simultaneously, the "revenue neutral" tax bill will shift $120 billion of Federal taxes to business over the next five years. Politically, that is a neat switch. Our political representatives can first crow about cutting our taxes and then sympathize when prices rise more rapidly or when wages rise more slowly as companies adjust to the higher tax burden. The economic problem is that taxes are being raised on savings and investment, key ingredients for economic growth and job creation.

Many elements of the tax bill hurt capital formation. The investment tax credit is repealed. Depreciation allowances are tightened. The capital gains differential is eliminated. The dividend exclusion is dropped. The rate of the minimum tax is expanded (offsetting many of the remaining investment incentives). The tax credit for research and development is cut. The cap on annual contributions to contractual (401k) employee retirement plans is lowered. Fewer taxpayers are allowed to make tax-exempt payments to I.R.A.'s.

Although we can debate the precise economic effects of these changes, the direction of impact is clear: less investment, lower economic growth, fewer new jobs. As a partial offset, an added rise in consumer disposable incomes and hence in consumer outlays should be anticipated. On balance, I expect the tax bill to lower growth in gross national product in 1987 by about one percentage point and to raise the unemployment rate almost five-tenths of one percentage point.

The changes, while not overwhelming, come at a time when the economy is vulnerable to a shift in direction. Just last week, the Commerce Department revised downward its estimate of economic growth for the second quarter of 1986 to a marginal six-tenths of 1 percent. It will not take much to tip the economy into recession.

In an unhappy coincidence, 1987 also may be the year that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has its initial substantial effect on the budget deficit. It is ironic that in 1986, the first year of operation of that ambitious deficit-reduction law, we are witnessing the largest total of budgetary red ink in American history, about $230 billion. It is likely that next year the deficit will decline substantially, but not down to the Gramm-Rudman target of $144 billion. Yet a drop from $230 billion, to say, $175 billion would be a significant loss of fiscal stimulus.

And the timing is unfortunate. Advocates of the economy in government have long been urging reductions in expenditures and in the deficits. But now that Congress is getting around to doing so, the economy is softening. The combination of the negative effects of tax reform and Gramm-Rudman could push the United States into a recession.

My pessimistic conclusion varies from the upbeat assessments by the supporters of the tax bill. They count heavily on large gains in output after resources begin to be allocated more according to economic considerations than the tax code. In this view, the sharp decline in marginal tax rates will unleash a surge of work effort, saving and investment. This dismal scientist must recall, however, that these are the same predictions made for the 1981 tax cuts that yielded such modest initial results.

To be sure, many other changes in the tax code will, over time, produce more investments in economically productive activities. A shift away from tax-sheltered office buildings and to capital formation in industry would be welcomed. With lower tax rates, people also should be less likely to incur expenses merely because they are tax deductible. No longer will taxpayers seek out "deep shelter" investments that yield no economic return.

While these desirable changes will lead in the long run to a more efficient economy, they are not likely to occur with the speed and magnitude needed to offset the early negative effects of reducing or eliminating direct investment incentives.

There is one major reason why we may avoid recession, despite the tax bill. The Federal Reserve system often serves as a balance wheel in the economy, although not without errors in direction, magnitude and timing. The challenge to the Fed in 1987 will be tough: to make up for lack of concern about the economy on the part of Congress.

Of course, the Fed already is following a policy of stimulus, allowing rapid growth in the money supply. In fact, policymakers must wonder about the long-term inflationary potential of still faster monetary growth. Nevertheless, the present challenge to monetary policy is clear—to offset the bad timing of the current round of change in fiscal policy and the new tax revision. That is not a very happy view of the early impact of the tax reform bill that Congress seems determined to pass, but it is a realistic one.

TAX BILL'S ECONOMIC IMPACT WEIGHED

(By Jane Seaberry)

Last-minute maneuvers to keep tax overhaul legislation on track Saturday night would result in lower economic growth next year and not much improvement after that, economists said yesterday.

Interest rates would decline slightly in the next two years as a result of the tax bill, but that wouldn't help increase business investment or consumer spending until 1988 at the earliest, economists said.

Many economists originally had forecast that tax revision would have no impact on growth, or that it would produce a slight improvement next year because they expected a surge in consumer spending resulting from tax rate cuts.

However, at the last minute, Senate and House conferees agreed to a tax increase for some middle and high-income taxpayers. On top of that, business investment and construction are expected to plunge next year if the bill becomes law because many industries would lose lucrative tax breaks.

Even in the long run, economists are now saying, economic growth wouldn't be much better with tax reform than without it.

"It will be in 1989, 1990" before the benefits of tax reform show up, and even then it will be very modest," said Lawrence Chimerine of Chase Econometrics. "What you're going to get from tax reform is a shift in the components in the economy rather than more overall growth.

"Over the next 10 years, [economic growth] will not be much different."

Chimerine said growth next year would be shaved by about four-tenths of a percentage point because of the negative effects of the tax proposal on business investment and construction and the tax increase for some taxpayers.

He also said there would be no significant effect on interest rates or inflation.

"Essentially, you have a tax increase for 1987," said Martin Mauro, senior economist for Merrill Lynch Economics. The tax bill "raises revenue by about $11 billion next year. That's exactly the wrong thing to do for an economy in the shape that it's in."

Mauro said there was no danger that the tax bill could plunge the economy into a recession, "but this is something that will detract from growth."

In an effort to raise more revenue, tax rates for higher-income filers were not reduced as sharply as expected for next year. Many families earning more than $75,000 annually would face a tax increase in 1987.

The increase in the personal exemption from $1,080 to $2,000 would not go into effect all at once on Jan. 1, but would be phased in between 1987 and 1989. Both changes would mean consumers would have less money to spend than if rates had been cut immediately.

Business investment would be expected to decline as a result of changes in two major incentives for business spending: accelerated depreciation schedules would be lengthened and the investment tax credit repealed. These two items were the centerpiece of President Reagan's 1981 tax-cut program.

Accelerated depreciation allows businesses to write off the cost of new facilities during a very short period; investment tax credits allow businesses to directly deduct part of the cost of some investments from their tax bills.

Mauro said the benefits to the economy might start showing up in 1988, the first full year of the tax-rate cuts. Economic growth would occur when consumers began spending the money from their tax cuts and companies, then decided they needed to rev up production to produce more goods, Mauro said.

"Overall, I think it's a good bill in that it does make tax considerations less of a factor in business decisionmaking," Mauro said. "It should improve economic efficiency and improve economic growth. But it will take a while for these good effects to show up."

According to Wharton Econometrics, economic growth next year would increase 4 percent with tax reform, compared with 4.3 percent without it. In 1988, the growth rates would be the same at 2.9 percent, a Wharton analysis said.

Interest rates would decline slightly, economists said, because borrowing would not be as attractive under tax reform since much of that interest no longer would be deductible. What interest could be deducted, moreover, would be worth less because of the reduction in tax rates.

Wharton said it expects mortgage rates would average 10.1 percent next year because of tax reform, rather than 10.3 percent in 1988, rates would be 10.4 percent, rather than 10.7 percent, Wharton said.

Data Resources Inc. said it also is forecasting that mortgage rates would be 10.1 percent next year with tax reform, compared with 10.78 percent without it.

THE FAR SIDE OF TAX REFORM

The tax code heavily subsidizes many areas of American life. One effect of tax reform will be to reduce these studies, which mask true costs. It is not quite accurate to say that costs will rise, but some perceived costs will.

State and local government provides one example. In the short run many states expect a windfall from tax reform. Because they use the federal definition of taxable income, which reform will broaden, they will have more to tax. But the longer-term effect of reform on the states will be in the opposite direction. Now all state and local taxes are deductible on the federal return. Under the bill, sales taxes will not be deductible, and the remaining deduction will be less valuable because it will come at a lower rate. The federal government will be defraying a smaller share of state and local costs. It will become that much harder for state and local governments to raise their taxes.

The impact is likely to be even greater in housing, particularly on rents. Real estate is now heavily tax-favored. Its financing actually depends on the high rates that under the bill will decline. The range of deductions will also be narrowed. Because they will be able to deduct less, landlords will want to charge more. There will be upward pressure on rents.

No one knows quite how severe this will be. One recent estimate by William Apgar of Harvard and Arthur Doud, a Philadelphia economist, is that rents may eventually rise 20 percent to 25 percent after inflation. Much has been made of the tax cuts the forthcoming bill will give to the poor. But the poor tend more than the rich to live in rental housing, and Messrs. Apgar and Doud estimate that many poor people will see their rents go up much more than their already small taxes come down. In the short run, they say, there will also be less incentive to build rental housing, which will put more pressure on the market.

In the tax committees, this prospect was invoked as an argument for retaining those elements of the code that benefit low-income housing, and in weakened form some were retained. But creating tax shelters for the rich so that they will invest in housing for the poor is a distasteful and some would say inefficient solution to this problem. And the tax programs have never been more than a partial solution in any case.

In the budget, the Reagan administration has already stopped the growth of direct housing subsidies for the poor. Now tax reform will reduce the indirect. In an area of urgent need for most poor people, the government will have no program. There was already a need to reexamine how the country planned to house the poor. But the tax bill has made this more acute.

IT'S A NEW ECONOMIC LANDSCAPE NOW

(By Monroe W. Karmin)

Even Donald Regan is baffled by tax reform. And so are his friends on Wall Street. "They are as confused as I am," says the White House chief of staff. "They don't know the effect."

Regan and his friends aren't the only ones who are perplexed. The historic rewrite of the tax code that Congress is poised to enact this autumn is sending off all sorts of contradictory signals. It promises economic efficiency but penalizes investment. It advertises tax cuts for everyone but will increase the govenment's tax take by $11 bilion next year. It will help many newer, growing industries such as high tech but will hurt many older, declining ones such as steel.

Though most experts see a better working economy down the road, they aren't sure whether that journey will begin when the new tax law goes into effect next year, or whether a recession is in store first.

That uncertainty is being made worse by tax reform's awkward timing. The economy, in its 45th month of expansion, suffers from severe fatigue. The April-to-June quarter was even weaker than had been thought, the government reported, and there is little evidence of a pickup in the current quarter. "We simply do not know whether the economy is going up or down," says Delos Smith of the Conference Board, a New York economic-research group.

Initially at least, tax reform is looked upon as a downer because of the harm it poses for sagging business investment. The bill repeals the investment tax credit retroactively to last January 1, fully 18 months before corporate tax rates are cut on July 1, 1987. Over six years, tax reform would take $120 billion more in taxes from companies to pay for cuts in personal-income-tax rates. The measure stiffens depreciation rules and abolishes the special treatment given capital gains as an incentive for risk takers to invest in start-up companies.

Because of these blows to business, many forecasters are upping the odds of a recession by next summer. Allen Sinai of Shearson Lehman Brothers in New York put the chances of a downturn at 1 in 10 last winter but now rates them at 1 in 5. A recession is "a close call," agrees Alan Greenspan, an economist who advises the White House.

The Federal Reserve Board is concerned. On August 20, it moved to lower interest rates by cutting the discount rate it charges on loans to member banks to 5½ percent from 6. It was the fourth cut this year, but many analysts doubt it will be enough. "The question is how many more reductions will be needed," says Brian Fabbri, chief economist at Thomson McKinnon Securities in New York. Tax reform, by making borrowing less attractive, is expected to help nudge rates down over time. Nariman Behravesh of Wharton Econometrics in Philadelphia think rates will be half a percentage point lower due to tax reform.

FROM BAD TO WORSE

Even if a slump is avoided, reform offers little help for the Midwest's rust bowl and the Southwest's oil patch. Steel and other smokestack industries that support those regions will suffer most from the loss of the investment tax credit. "Those industries and regions that are hurting now will be hurt even more," says Ira Shapiro, a senior tax analyst at Coopers & Lybrand in Washington.

Throughout the U.S., construction of apartment and office buildings will be clobbered as write-offs are stretched out and tax shelters are eliminated. Home building, however, should remain healthy because mortgage interest still will be deductible.

But the strong service sector will get a lift. Retailers and firms that sell information, recreation, entertainment and other serivces for the most part pay high tax rates and don't make heavy capital outlays. Thus, they stand to gain from the coming cut in corporate tax rates.

Tax reform's potential impact on employment is unclear. Higher taxes may give some multinational corporations more reason to expand abroad. Robert Perlman, tax director at Intel, the big California semiconductor company, says he'll recommend that "all the R&D that can be done offshore should be." But Roger Brinner, chief economist for Data Resources of Lexington, Mass., thinks the damper that reform is expected to put on business outlays for machinery will increase the labor demand in this country and shave unemployment. In particular, he says, more "spouses will be encouraged to come out of the home."

Much of the economic growth that tax reform promises will come from more spending by consumers after they receive tax cuts. Some 6 million poor families will be knocked off the tax rolls, and taxpayers on average will get a cut of 6.1 percent.

But that will take time. Tax rates don't start falling until January and won't drop fully until January, 1988. Even then, the effect on consumer spending remains to be seen. Many of the tax cuts will not be large percentages, particularly for those in the $50,000-to-$100,000 bracket. Credit buying may be stunted by new limits on interest deductibility.

The auto industry for one, is not worried. "People buy cars because they need them, not because of the deduction of interest," says Baron Bates, a Chrysler spokesman. Chairman Roger Smith of General Motors thinks "the nation will be well served" by tax reform's positive effect on growth.

Congress seems sure to approve tax reform this fall, though not without hot debate. The bill voted out by a Senate-House conference in mid-August now must be accepted or rejected in its entirety by both chambers. Neither is likely to deny the President his top domestic priority. Most lobbyists are giving up the fight. "The die is cast," sighs Wayne Thevenot, president of the National Realty Committee. "The deed is done." But business groups plan to try to recoup their losses next year.

By that time, tax reform will have begun to take effect, with its alluring promise of a more efficient economy over the long pull—if only the nation can ride out the increasing dangers of recession in the year ahead.

FOR CORPORATE AMERICA, ANOTHER "RIVERBOAT" GAMBLE?

(I keep thinking to myself, "We ain't in Kansas anymore, Toto."—The chief executive of a Fortune 500 company on the new tax law.)

Very little looks the same anymore. For American business, the tax-reform bill is the most radical overhaul of the economic landscape in decades. It will affect the decisions of virtually every company in the country. And for precisely that reason, it raises economic forecasting—a dubious business at best under the old tax code—to the level of mysticism. What are the economic consequences of tax reform? The truth is, no one really knows. "We can make estimates," says Gregory Ballentine, an economist at Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., "but really we're off the charts, in unknown country."

In 1981 it was a mere "riverboat" gamble: Congress, despite many misgivings, ratified Ronald Reagan's "supply side" tax cuts. In 1986 the game may even be riskier. The U.S. economy is stagnant and the government is still running huge annual budget deficits. Congress chose not to deal with the deficit in the context of the tax bill, deciding it should be "revenue neutral." "The last thing we need is to rewrite the tax code from top to bottom," says Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. Yardeni, among others, argues that by taking investment incentives away from corporations, tax reform will be "a deflationary bill at a time when the risk is deflation and recession."

Not so, says the Reagan administration. Reagan officials believe the 1981 tax cuts paid off handsomely, putting money in consumers' pockets and propelling the country into a long recovery. "This new reform," says Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, "is going to have the same consequences." Few are as optimistic as Baker—but he may not be wrong. There are powerful arguments in favor of tax reform. With tax rates lower and many shelters eliminated, individuals and companies alike will make investments based on their potential to generate profits, not phony tax losses. Millions of dollars used to construct monuments to inefficiency—such as Houston's empty office towers—should go instead to more economically productive ventures. "We're taking the hip fakes and swindles out of our economic lives," says reform proponent Robert McIntyre.

Some reformers also expect the bill to lower interest rates—swiftly and perhaps substantially. The supply-side catechism, for example, holds that lowering tax rates will increase savings, which in time should prompt rates to fall. And lower interest rates, in turn, should spur economic growth. The administration's chief economist, Beryl Sprinkel, believes tax reform will add one-quarter of 1 percent to growth every quarter for the next six years.

A segment of corporate America, however, is bewildered by the general euphoria surrounding the tax bill. At best, many executives argue, the economic future is now uncertain. At worst, they contend, the economy has been wounded unnecessarily. Even though the top tax rate for corporations falls to 34 percent from 46 percent, the overall tax burden on business will rise by $120 billion. Some companies will now have to pay a "minimum tax" that amounts to 20 percent of taxable income. The biggest tax increase will come at the expense of basic industries. Highly capital-intensive businesses such as steel and autos have benefited over the years from lucrative tax breaks on investment in plant and equipment. To some executives in those industries, effective subsidies such as the Investment Tax Credit came to be seen as a birthright. Now the ITC and other lucrative tax preferences have been stripped away. The bill, for instance, reduces the value of deductions companies can take for depreciation on some capital structures. That can hurt. Next year Chrysler Corp. may pay around 14 percent more in taxes than it did in 1986.

Competitive damage: The administration portrayed such complaints as the selfish whinning of greedy "special interests." But criticism that the bill promotes consumption at the expense of investment and thus damages America's industrial competitiveness is hardly limited to the rust bowl. "The repeal of the ITC is a big mistake," says Harvard economist Lawrence H. Summers. "The effect is to lower taxes on old investment and increase them on new investment. That's exactly backward." Even some high-technology companies that supported tax reform are concerned. "I'd have to line up with the side that says this is an anticompetitive bill," says Ralph Thomson of the American Electronics Association.

The tax-bill bears could be in for a surprise, though: the economy may have already absorbed the worst of the bill's negative impact. Many companies postponed investment decisions as Congress debated tax reform. That's contributed to the current economic sluggishness. But now, says Deborah Olivier, an economist at the Claremont Institute, the flight of funds out of tax shelters will send stock prices higher and interest rates lower. Olivier predicts a "pretty good capital-spending surge in six to nine months." If she's right, the economy next year could be much healthier than it is today. Then, seemingly, only the budget deficit would remain as a major economic problem—albeit one that in time may force Congress to fiddle again with a tax system it just got through reforming.

GOOD NEWS FOR ACCOUNTANTS, BAD FOR MOST OTHER SMALL FIRMS

(By Paul Thiel)

For small businesses, the tax-overhaul bill is bad news—unless the business is an accounting firm.

The tax revision would raise accounting and other administrative costs substantially because of the complexity of the package, said local small-business owners who gathered in Washington last week for the national White House Conference on Small Business.

The substantive parts of the package, delegates to the conference said, have negative and positive aspects that are likely to hurt companies that use a lot of equipment and help those who don't.

"The administrative costs will be a real burden," said Harvey Goldstein, a Los Angeles accountant who led the discussion of taxation at the conference. "Tax returns will be significantly more complex to prepare. If you are in business, you will no longer be able to prepare your own return without assistance of an accountant."

"As it's presently written, the tax bill is a serious blow to small business," said Gregory K. Washington, who runs his own accounting firm in the District.

The tax bill would make certain firms switch to the calendar year for their fiscal year while others would have to restructure their employe pension plans, either of which would require large, one-time accounting costs for most companies, the entrepreneurs said. Firms also would have to spend more time with accountants every year because of complicated rules for keeping track of inventories, anticipating bad debts, depreciating buildings and equipment, and preparing financial statements, including tax returns.

Accounting fees also are expected to increase because of the complexity of the new code. "Somebody has to pay for all our studying," Goldstein said.

While administrative costs would increase for everyone, other implications of the tax bill depend almost entirely on the nature of a business. For capital-intensive companies—firms that use a lot of machinery and equipment—the bill could be a big hindrance to expansion.

"It [the tax program] takes a lot of the investment incentive away because of the changes in capital gains," Washington said. "Small business tends to be high risk, so unless the investor has the chance to defer his taxes in the event the company is successful, there's little incentive for him to invest."

Businesses that need to buy new machinery to grow may face new obstacles. Under current law, businesses receive tax credits when they buy new machinery. "It's not that they buy machines just to avoid taxes," said Sara Ross, spokeswoman for the National Association of Manufacturers. "A lot of small businesses want to grow into big businesses, so they reinvest their profits and pay a lower tax rate." Service companies, however, probably would pay less tax under the new code "because they're not capital-intensive," Washington said.

Service companies usually don't need much money to get started, so there isn't much need for incentives to invest, Washington said. He added that they would benefit from the lower corporate tax rates.

Corporate tax rates would be cut to a maximum of 34 percent for businesses with income of more than $75,000, 25 percent for incomes between $50,000 and $75,000, and 15 percent for less than $50,000.

A common practice in which a person owns a building and leases it to the business would be less attractive under the plan. The bill would eliminate the writing off of "paper losses," produced by depreciation of the building.

A benefit for all small companies with inventories would be the simplified rules for using an accounting procedure that allows sales to be recorded in a way that assumes the last products purchased by a company also are the first to be sold.

Despite all the hoopla about the tax revision, many owners of small businesses said that they are too caught up in running their businesses to examine a tax code that hasn't passed Congress yet. Besides, they said, their accountants handle the taxes.

SMALL-BUSINESS CONFEREES VOICE WORRIES ABOUT IMPACT OF OVERHAUL

(By Sanford L. Jacobs)

WASHINGTON.—The tax-overhaul bill isn't popular with small-business people assembled in the capital this week for the White House Conference on Small Business.

The bill would eliminate a number of business tax benefits and would add some accounting requirements that many small-company owners believe will be a heavier burden for them than for big corporations. "The increases are going to hit small business harder," said Steve Sellers, a delegate to the conference and owner of Sellers Advertising Co., Dallas.

"There's no way we can pass on the added tax because our business is so competitive," said Stuart Grossman, owner of Spot Distributing Co., a candy and tobacco wholesaler in Louisville, Ky., and a conference delegate.

TAX RELIEF

Despite the generally negative remarks heard about the bill at the conference here, tax specialists note that it contains some relief for some small companies.

Those that don't invest much in depreciable assets won't be hurt by the loss of the investment tax credit or the less-generous depreciation schedules, and will gain from the rate reduction, said Abe Schneier, tax counsel at the National Federation of Independent Business. "The rate cut is a big plus," Mr. Schneier said. About 65% of NFIB's more than 500,000 members report earnings of less than $25,000 a year.

Along with cutting the top corporate rate to 34%, the tax bill would continue to allow even lower rates for small businesses. Income of as much as $50,000 would be taxed at 15%, and income between $50,000 and $75,000 would be taxed at a 25% rate. The top corporate rate would apply to incomes above $75,000.

Small companies with relatively higher revenues would get hit by several provisions in the bill. New inventory-accounting rules, applied to companies with more than $10 million of annual receipts, would require keeping track of inventory-related costs such as payroll expenses for employees who order, stock and maintain inventoried items, and other expenses that businesses have been deducting as they were paid.

Under the proposed law, such costs would have to be capitalized and written off as inventory is sold. "It's a whole new ball game if you are a retailer or wholesaler," said Stephen R. Corrick, a partner in the Washington office of the accounting firm of Arthur Anderson & Co. But the new rules would apply only to businesses with annual gross receipts exceeding $10 million a year.

That won't exempt Mr. Grossman's distribution firm. "It will mean a lot more paperwork and expense," said his wife, Phyllis.

SIMPLIFIED RULES

A benefit for small companies with inventories will come from simplified rules for using last-in, first-out inventory reporting. LIFO tends to keep taxes lower in inflationary periods than the first-in, first-out, or FIFO, method. Many small companies, however, use FIFO because the accounting methods that the tax code required for LIFO were too costly. "We think this will help small retailers and wholesalers," Mr. Schneier said.

The bill ends the tax benefits a business owner could gain by also owning the firm's buildings and then leasing the property to the company. The new restrictions on so-called "passive losses" will bar writing off the paper losses from such an arrangement against the owner's salary. The new bill would allow losses from passive investments such as real estate to be written off only against passive income, which doesn't include income from portfolio investments such as stocks and bonds.

Still there would be financial reasons and some tax benefits for the business owner and his family to own the company's real estate, said Robert Milburn, a tax partner at the accounting firm of Laventhol & Horwath. He said one advantage "is that you can dispose of it without having to pay corporate tax."

BENEFIT FOR FAMILY MEMBERS

A common practice in closely held retail chains is for family members to own real estate partnerships that own stores and lease them to the corporation. C. Clinton Stretch, tax director of Washington office of Deloitte, Haskins & Sells, accountants, said it is a way to provide benefits for family members who aren't employed in the business. The partners will lose the tax advantages—mainly deducting paper losses from depreciating the properties—in the new law.

Tougher rules on sharing pension benefits more quickly and with more employees will force many small companies to rewrite retirement plans to qualify under the new rules. Mr. Grossman said he recently paid $5,000 to have his company's retirement plan rewritten. "In a small firm, $5,000 here and $5,000 there can be the difference between profit and loss," he said. Mr. Stretch noted there is concern that "the way some small companies will handle the required modification is to junk the plan."

Partnerships, proprietorships and Subchapter S corporations, whose profits and losses are taxed to the owners as partners are taxed, would be forced onto calendar-year accounting for tax purposes under the new law. Often, businesses use a fiscal year while the owners report income on a calendar year, and thus have the use of the profits for a time before they are taxed.

CAPITAL GAINS

Next year, capital gains would be taxed at 28%, making it advantageous to take gains this year while the rate is 20%. And in some states there will be significantly greater state tax due on capital gains next year because of the interplay between state tax schedules and the change in the federal rules, Mr. Milburn said. "You can end up owning state tax on 100% of the profit," he said. Under current law, as much as 60% of a captial gain is free of tax in a number of states.

Cashing out of a small business with a minimal tax bite has been possible if the liquidation complied with rules following the so-called General Utilities doctrine. The proposed law would phase out this advantageous procedure.

Overall, the tax bill "is no great news for small business," said Gerald G. Portney, a partner in the Washington tax office of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES SEE NOTHING GOOD IN TAX PLAN

(By John Curley)

Tax reform is going to be a rocky road for most transportation companies.

"Everybody is going to wind up paying more taxes," says an Air Transport Association official. Comments an Association of American Railroads spokesman: "I can't see anything but negative impacts coming out of this."

Details of the tax-reform package remain to be hammered out, but key provisions are likely to remain intact. The bill would drop the maximum corporate tax rate to 34 percent from 46 percent and would establish a minimum corporate tax of 20 percent.

The result: The total corporate tax bill is expected to jump by $120 billion over five years. The bill is expected to be signed in September.

Trucking is the only major transportation industry that favors tax reform. Truckers, who currently pay one of the highest average taxes of any industry, expect to see their tax bills drop when the maximum rate falls.

That could jack up profits nicely. Publicly traded Arkansas Best Corp.'s profit, for example, would jump to $5 a share in 1987 from a previously projected $3.95 because of lower taxes, estimates Wheat, First Securities Inc. Says American Trucking Association spokesman Robert S. Reese: "We are going to be supporting tax reform full bore. We give Congress an A."

Railroads aren't nearly as enthusiastic. With an effective average tax rate of only 4 percent in recent years, railroads won't benefit from the lower maximum rate. What's more, the elimination of investment credits and accelerated depreciation will crimp carriers' cash flow and will hurt their biggest customers—coal companies, steel and auto producers, and utilities.

"We could suffer a double whammy," says American Railroad Association spokesman Frank N. Wilner.

The tax changes also could discourage investment in the railroad industry and could dry up funds for track improvements, Wilner said. And they would increase pressure to control costs, particularly labor costs, which account for more than half of the industry's overhead.

Will that mean more management-labor showdowns in an industry already attacked by disputes? Absolutely," Wilner says. "The whole survival of our industry depends on our controlling these labor costs."

The railroad industry is lobbying heavily for the same kind of "transition rules" that will allow the steel industry to receive refunds for half its unused investment tax credits. That would boost carriers' bottom lines by hundreds of millions of dollars.

Unlike trucking stocks, railroad stocks will be depressed by the proposed tax-law changes, analysts say. Standard & Poor's analyst Stephen Klein recommends buying only one railroad, Norfolk & Western, because of its relatively low debt and high cash reserves. "I see only negatives coming out of (tax reform)," Klein says.

Airlines don't like it any better. They spend about $5 billion a year on new equipment, expenditures that used to generate hundreds of millions of dollars in tax credits. Under current law, a profitable carrier that makes maximum use of investment tax credits and depreciation allowances can reduce its 46 percent tax liability to 7 percent.

"There's no doubt we will be paying higher taxes," says William M. Hawkins, vice president of finance and taxation at the Air Transport Association. "In some cases it will be substantially higher."

It isn't certain what will happen to the roughly $750 million in investment tax credits that airlines accumulated but didn't use. Under current proposals, the carriers would be able to use part of those credits to offset future tax bills.

The tax changes come as steep fare discounts are undermining airline profits. In the 1986 first quarter, the industry's net loss widened to about $600 million from $100 million a year earlier.

In better times, the barge industry might howl about tax reform, but after five years of recession, few barge operators are making money. Thus the question of how much taxes they pay is moot.

Nobody is building new barges because of an enormous glut of vessels. That means the changes in investment credits and depreciation probably won't come into play.

Joseph Farrell, president of the American Waterways Association, a barge industry trade group, sees a silver lining in the tax legislation: "It means a withdrawal of the government from the marketplace. That means that companies can make decisions based on real economic factors, not tax consideration. That's good."

But the industry has such serious problems that it may be years before barge companies will benefit from the lower maximum tax rate. Says Farrell: "Things aren't getting any worse, but I still don't see the time when we can say it will get better. The barge and towing industry won't find the relief it needs in the new tax code."

TAX BILL'S EFFECT ON BANKING ALARMS FDIC

(By James L. Rowe, Jr.)

The head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said yesterday the tax bill approved last weekend by the House and Senate conference committee undercuts efforts of federal bank regulators to strengthen the badly weakened banking system.

"It doesn't help us," FDIC chairman L. William Seidman said in an interview. He complained that the tax bill discourages big banks from building up reserves against bad loans, at a time when federal regulators are pushing them to do so.

In recent years, regulators have pressured banks to increase their reserves to bolster the safety and soundness of the banking system. Banks were weakened by back-to-back recessions early in the decade and recently have suffered severe problems with foreign loans, energy loans and farm loans.

The tax plan would prohibit big banks from deducting contributions to their loan loss reserves from their income. Advocates of the change have argued that setting aside loan loss reserves is merely a paper transaction and banks should not be allowed to deduct the money until they actually pay for losses.

The proposed changes apply only to banks with assets of more than $500 million. Smaller banks still can deduct from their taxes money put in their loan loss reserves.

Seidman said banks will still set aside loan loss reserves, but, because the after tax cost of reserve additions will be higher, bigger banks will be reluctant to put in as much money. Banks will be allowed to deduct loan losses when they occur, but will not get a tax break for setting aside reserves for possible future problems.

Not only does the proposed bill eliminate tax deductions for loan loss reserve contributions by big banks, it also requires those banks to pay taxes on reserves they have already accumulated.

The tax writers exempted problem banks from paying back taxes, but Seidman said it will be difficult to devise a formula for determining if a bank qualifies for that break.

The tax writers define problem banks as those whose problem loans—loans that are in danger of going bad—are equivalent to 75 percent or more of a bank's equity capital. Seidman said this rule would not cover all the banks his agency considers troubled.

He also said the tax bill would make it more difficult for banks to participate in the U.S. government's plan to help heavily indebted developing countries resume economic growth.

Seidman said that because the tax bill makes it costlier for big banks to build reserves, and removes the credits they can take for foreign taxes they pay on income earned abroad, it will discourage banks from participating in the debtor nation initiative proposed last fall by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III.

TAX BILL HITS RENTAL-REALTY OWNERS HARD

(By Alan Murray)

Washington—Some taxpayers with rental real estate may find that their marginal tax rate remains as high as 49.5% under the new tax bill, virtually unchanged from the 50% top rate under current law.

The 49.5% marginal rate would apply even to these taxpayers' long-term capital gains, a sharp boost from the current top capital-gains rate of 20%.

The marginal rate is the rate that applies to each additional dollar of income a taxpayer earns. Economist pay close attention to the rate, because they say it affects a taxpayer's willingness to work harder or invest more.

The new tax bill specifies a top rate of only 28%. But in a sense, that's deceptive advertising. The bill includes a number of provisions under which certain tax benefits would be phased out for people with high incomes, and these provisions have the effect of pushing the marginal rate above 28%.

A family that earns $100,000 to $150,000 a year and that owns rental real estate could be subject to two separate phase-out provisions. For such a family, the marginal rate may drop scarcely at all from current law.

While only a small percentage of the population falls into that high rate category, it's still "a lot more common than you would expect," says Peter Davis, vice president in the Washington office of Prudential Bache Securities Inc. "A lot of people I've talked to are upset about this," he says.

The marginal rate for families earning between $71,900 and about $200,000 would in effect be 33%. That's because of a phaseout of the bill's 15% lower tax rate and of the personal exemption.

Under current law, even the wealthiest taxpayers get the advantage of lower tax rates on the first dollars of income they earn, and even the wealthiest may take the personal exemptions for themselves and their dependents. But under the new law, that 15% rate benefit would be phased out, in effect, by placing a 5% surcharge on income in the $71,900-$149,250 range.

Personal exemptions would be phased out by placing a 5% surcharge on family income above $149,250 until the exemptions were all offset.

That means families earning between $71,900 and about $200,000—the exact figure depends on the number of exemptions—would face a marginal rate of 33%. The marginal rate for taxpayers with higher incomes would again drop to 28%.

Then, many families that use tax losses from rental real estate to offset other income would face another surcharge. The bill would allow families with incomes of less than $100,000 to take rental real estate losses of as much as $25,000. Once their income exceeded $100,000, however, that special allowance would begin phasing out—with 50 cents of the loss being denied for every extra dollar earned.

The effect of that provision is to impose another surtax of about 16.5% on income between $100,000 and $150,000. That means the marginal tax rate for those taxpayers would be 49.5%, just a shade under the 50% rate in current law.

Mr. Davis points out that many investors with incomes in excess of $100,000 own rental real estate. And many may also have capital-gains income as well. So the 49.5% rate would hit a large number of rate in current law.

NEW VENTURES WOULD BE HARDER TO BUILD, FINANCING MAY CHANGE

(By Udayan Gupta)

The proposed tax bill would make it more difficult to build new companies and would change the manner in which new ventures are financed.

For venture capitalists, the most significant aspect of the tax bill is the elimination of the preferential treatment of long-term capital gains. The lower taxation of capital gains, long one of the major incentives driving the industry, has encouraged investors to tie up funds in risky start-ups. In addition, the low capital gains rate has been a major factor in attracting talented entrepreneurs to new companies.

"We will have to pay more to get the people to staff new companies," says Burton McMurtry of Technology Venture Investors, a Menlo Park, Calif., venture capital firm. With the top rate on earned income at 50% and capital gains taxed at a maximum 20% under current law, it was easy to attract senior managers from established companies, Mr. McMurtry says. That's because executives at established companies tend to receive most of their compensation in salary while managers of new ventures get a big chunk of their pay in the form of stock.

Increasing salaries will certainly raise new companies' costs, and it will also reduce the rate of return earned by investors. That could make it harder to attract new investments.

Eliminating the preferential treatment of long-term capital gains could also reduce the flow of new money in a more direct way. The National Venture Capital Association estimates that while tax-exempt sources such as pension funds play a large part in financing, taxable sources contributed more than 80% of the money received by venture-backed companies in 1985. Many of those taxable sources are individual investors sometimes referred to in the business as "angels." Almost 90% of the money for start-ups came from that pool, the trade group says.

"Individuals are the ones who get these companies started, not venture capital firms. By increasing capital gains, you'll surely drive them away," argues James Swartz, a venture capitalist with Accel Partners in Princeton, N.J.

In contrast to existing law, the new legislation provides greater rewards for short-term trading than long-term investing, adds Norton Garfinkle, a New York venture investor. "Given the choice, I'll do more trading than investing in venture capital," he says.

Venture capitalists also expect to see a change in the way new deals are structured. Investors, who now usually take an equity stake in a venture, will look for more immediate income, says venture capitalist Robert Pavey of Cleveland's Morgenthaler Ventures. "We'll be more inclined to invest in interest-producing, income-producing ventures," he says.

Others see venture capitalists shifting from risky, start-up investments to more predictable and more mature companies as well as financing leveraged buyouts, as they did in the early 1970s. Then, capital gains were taxed at an even higher rate than under the proposed bill. Mr. Swartz says. "It's quite possible we could return to a 1974 environment, where there was one start-up done during the entire year."

TAX BILL PROVISIONS CRITICIZED AS HARMFUL TO HIGHER EDUCATION

(By Lisa Leff)

The tax-overhaul package approved by conferees last week drew cries of outrage from an army of special interest groups, but few have been as vocal as academic officials, who say the new tax provisions could be a "catastrophe" for higher education.

The bill, headed for a final vote in Congress this fall, would drastically impair the ability of colleges and universities to raise money to repair and expand facilities, to retain outstanding faculty members and to subsidize the educations of needy students, academic officials said yesterday.

Although large private schools that rely heavily on donations and investments to meet their costs would be particularly hard-hit, educators at public and private institutions from California to Connecticut predicted serious financial problems if the bill is passed in its current form.

"This bill is the greatest catastrophe for higher education in 25 years," said Sheldon Steinbach, counsel for the American Council on Education, which represents 1,500 institutions of higher learning. "As a matter of public policy it might seem like a good idea, but as a matter of social policy it's just terrible."

Educators cite three provisions they say would affect the quality of their institutions; a cap of $150 million on the amount of tax-exempt bonds that any private college or university could have outstanding at any time; a plan that would make sizable gifts of stock or real estate subject to a minimum tax; and a tax on portions of student fellowships and scholarships that are not used for tuition or course-related equipment.

The tax on scholarships would particularly hurt graduate students, who are more likely to receive aid packages that exceed the costs of their tuitions and equipment and who have fewer sources of outside support than undergraduates, the officials said. Graduate students also are more likely to have spouses whose income they would have to declare for tax purposes.

For example, a married graduate student who receives a $10,000 stipend for living expenses and whose spouse earns $15,000 a year would be taxed for an income of $25,000 under the provision. Under current law, only the spouse's income is taxable.

"That could double the taxation to a family without doubling that family's income," said James Sankovitz, vice president of government relations for Marquette University in Wisconsin. "to me, that seems like a pretty cruel way of ensuring that the tax system is fair, especially when we're talking about people who live pretty frugally in the first place."

Another provision that has alarmed educators would make donors of large gifts of appreciated property subject to a minimum tax rate of 21 percent on the increase in value of the donations, making that form of charity less advantageous to the donor. Currently, the full market value of such gifts, usually real estate or stocks, can be deducted fully from a donor's gross income.

Under the bill, however, the appreciated value of these gifts would be added to the value of other items with special tax preferences—investments in mining operations or low-income housing, for example—and made subject to a minimum tax if the total exceeded 25 percent of an individual's income.

Because taxpayers wouldn't know until the end of the year whether their investments alone would put then into the alternative minimum tax category, they might view making a large gift to their alma maters as a risky enterprise.

"Whether or not someone decides to give doesn't live or die with a tax incentive," said Robert Smucker, who heads Independent Sector, an umbrella group of non-profit organizations. "But once they've made the decision to give, the amount is very much influenced by tax policy."

While gifts of appreciated property represent a small number of donations to a school, the American Council on Education estimates that such gifts, which usually start in value at $250,000, account for about 40 percent of all dollars donated. At Princeton University, 80 percent of the gifts over $250,000 were in appreciated property.

Large gifts, however, are not the only contributions at risk, educators said. The bill also would eliminate the deduction of charitable contributions for taxpayers who do not itemize on their returns, making it less likely, officials said, that young alumni would get into the "giving habit."

Private institutions face an additional stumbling block in the cap on tax-free bonds. Patricia Hayes, president of St. Edwards University in Austin, Tex., criticized the bond cap as a "punitive and arbitrary" measure that gives public schools, not subject to a cap, an unfair advantage.

"We're the free-enterprise system of higher education. It doesn't make sense for the government to favor public institutions," Hayes said.

At least 24 private research universities, including Harvard, Yale, George Washington and the University of Chicago, either are approaching or have exceeded the ceiling on tax-free bonds, which generally are used to build or renovate structures. The University of Pennsylvania, for example, used $100 million in bonds last year to build a clinical services center and renovate and remove asbestos from a dormitory complex housing 1,000 students.

The scholarship tax, bond cap and minimum tax on appreciated property provisions were part of the tax plan approved by the House but were not included in the Senate bill. Stienbach, who coordinated a lobbying effort on behalf of higher education, said he and other educators were surprised when the conference committee agreed to all three.

"After you work on something for 18 months, you don't expect to do worse than you expected when you come out of conference," Steinbach said. "But we did. A lot worse."

EDUCATORS SEE GREAT HARM

(By Leslie Maitland Werner)

WASHINGTON, August 20.—The tax legislation would cause serious economic problems for colleges and universities as well as for their faculty and students, according to school officials, who said the bill attacks higher education from numerous directions.

At Stanford University, Larry Horton, the director of government relations, said: "We took a bath on the tax bill which was even dirtier and uglier than we had feared. We lost on every major issue. It may be that no other institutions are as adversely affected by the change in the tax bill as are universities, especially private universities."

Michael I. Sovern, the president of Columbia University, said: "I don't think they fully understand the damage that they've done. The dollars from the point of view of the Federal budget are not enormous numbers, but they are from our point of view. It's very damaging."

RATHER SEVERE EFFECTS

And a Princeton University official, Robert Durkee, said universities would suffer "rather severe effects" in return for "very modest gains" to the nation's coffers. Aid to graduate students is already "minimal," he said, and will now be cut still further, while private schools will also have greater trouble raising funds to maintain and modernize facilities.

Some educators also said that the measure would discriminate between public and private institutions in the area of financing.

The Secretary of Education, William J. Bennett, criticized universities for not looking at the broader picture, saying, "Colleges and universities should look beyond their narrow, immediate self-interest and look to the common prosperity in which they will share."

Mr. Bennett said: "In dollars and cents the Ronald Reagan years have been great for colleges and universities. They have profited from economic recovery, and they will profit from the continued economic growth that the tax bill promises."

Mr. Sovern said that universities, like other philanthropic institutions that depend on donations, had "anticipated damage simply by virtue of a rate reduction and were resigned to that."

"We recognized that to the extent rate reduction might be economically productive, we thought that as good citizens, we should not oppose it," he said. "But the bill does a number of other things that go beyond that damage."

The tax measure's changes include the following:

The bill would reduce the incentive for taxpayers to make donations to colleges and universities by increasing the ranks of nonitemizers and barring them from claiming deductions for gifts to charity.

It would no longer permit taxpayers who make charitable donations of appreciated property like stocks or bonds to claim the current market value of the gifts as a tax deduction.

It would set a cap of $150 million on the authority of private institutions to issue tax-exempt bonds, thereby limiting their access to lower-cost financing for capital improvements.

It would for the first time make scholarships and fellowships taxable if they are used to help defray students' living costs and would also eliminate the deduction for interest on student loans.

It would affect the ability of universities to attract professors by offering them special tax-deferred retirement plans unless they extend those plans to all other workers.

It would no longer permit parents to transfer income to their young children, to be taxed at the children's rate, as a means of reducing taxable income while saving for future tuition money.

In a joint statement issued today, the presidents of three major higher education groups said the bill would discriminate between public and private institutions. It would prevent more than 20 of the nation's top research universities from obtaining funding through new tax-exempt bond issues because they are already near the $150 million limit, although public institutions would face no such cap because their financing is raised under state authority.

Robert H. Atwell of the American Council on Education, which represents 1,500 colleges, universities and organizations; Robert M. Rosenzweig of the Association of American Universities, which represent 54 major research universities, and John D. Phillips of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, which represents 800 private colleges and universities, also said the change affecting gifts of appreciated property would have a large impact.

Such gifts, which are now fully deductible, account for 40 percent of all private giving to colleges and universities, they said.

DAMAGE TO NEEDY SEEN

The provision that calls for taxing scholarships and fellowships that exceed the amount of tuition and required equipment, they said, creates a situation that hurts the needy.

MORE IMPORTS, LESS INVESTMENT PREDICTED AT END OF TAX TRAIL

(BY JANE SEABERRY)

The historic shift in the tax burden from individuals to corporations not only may create confusion among consumers and corporations, but, in the next few months, also could lead to more imports, reduced business investment and lower output in an already weak economy.

In the long run, many economists expect the economy to benefit from the tax proposals.

Consumers eventually would spend their higher after-tax incomes.

With investment decisions no longer driven by tax incentives and shelters, business spending would be allocated more efficiently, resulting in higher economic growth.

Data Resources Inc., an economic consulting firm, predicted that, by 1988, the nation's economy will grow at a much faster rate than without tax overhaul.

But these benefits won't occur until the economy settles down from the near-term dislocations, economists said.

Starting next year, most consumers would have more money to spend as the result of lower taxes. Interest rates probably would fall. But economists generally predict that the economic benefits of these developments will be offset during the first year by other provisions of the tax bill and the last-minute change raising taxes next year for many high-income taxpayers.

Economists earlier had counted on the tax cut for individuals to help propel the economy through the adverse short-term effects of tax overhaul. Based on the Saturday night compromise, however, they said yesterday that if there is any boost in consumer spending, it would be slight next year, but more significant after that.

In an effort to raise more revenues, tax rates for higher-income filers were not reduced as sharply as expected for 1987. Many families earning more than $75,000 a year would face a tax increase next year. The increase in the personal exemption from $1,080 to $2,000 would not go into effect all at once on Jan. 1 as expected, but would be phased in between 1987 and 1989. Both changes would mean consumers would have less to spend next year than if rates had been cut immediately.

Economists also caution that the overall economic impact of the tax bill would depend on how tax revision affects the Federal budget deficit and the general direction of the economy during the next few months. If the economy is weak, the tax measure probably would make it weaker; but if it is strong, the tax revisions probably would have little effect.

"It depends entirely on how that impacts on the budget deficit," said Harvey Galper, an economist with the Brookings Institution. "The biggest determinant is going to be what's going on with the economy in any event. If the economy turns around it's not likely to have a significant effect the first year."

Business investment is expected to be reduced as a result of changes in two major incentives for business spending: accelerated depreciation schedules would be lengthened and the investment tax credit would be repealed. These two items were the centerpiece of President Reagan's 1981 tax-cut program.

Accelerated depreciation allows businesses to write off the cost of new facilities during a very short period; investment tax credits allow businesses to directly deduct part of the cost of some investments from their tax bills.

Reagan administration officials acknowledge that business investment has fallen this year because corporate executives were uncertain of the effects of the tax proposals.

In the near term, "the implications for manufacturing are more adverse, since the effective tax burden of manufacturing and its user cost of capital will increase at a time when heavy industry is already battered by import competition," said Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers. "As a result, the forecast for industrial production is significantly worse than for the economy as a whole."

"What we're doing is delaying and weakening the investment recovery," said Roger Brinner of Data Resources Inc. "Tax reform extends the decline in investment.

"This is a bill which is not revenue-neutral between consumers and business," Brinner said. "We're getting rid of the high-powered business incentives . . . and replacing them partially with the weak stimulus of lower rates."

"For the short term, I think there are a lot of adjustment costs" making the economy "somewhat worse off," said Stephen Zeller of Wharton Econometrics. The impact on business spending of removing the investment tax credit "may turn out to be more significant in the near term" than the expected increase in consumer spending.

One of the main short-term benefits of the tax proposal is expected to be slightly lower interest rates. Business and consumers are expected to borrow less because the after-tax cost of borrowing will go up. Consumers won't be able to deduct many consumer credit costs. The interest businesses and consumers do deduct will save them less due to the lower tax rates.

But the economic impact of lower interest rates may be somewhat offset by the decision not to permit consumers to deduct most interest on credit cards and other consumer loans.

Only the interest on home mortgages would be fully deductible, and there are provisions to make it more difficult for consumers to borrow against their home and use the tax-deductible loan for other purposes. Creative lenders may be able to get around that with some new kinds of loans that would allow consumers to keep buying and deducting interest, economists said. "What we've seen over the years, people in financial institutions have been very inventive," Zeller said.

Economists cite two reasons why the tax proposal could make the trade deficit worse. Generally, when consumers spend more, they tend to buy more imported products. Additionally, shifting the tax burden to business would raise the costs of U.S. firms' goods, making them more costly overseas.

"Increased consumption will be effectively offset by two negative factors," manufacturers' association spokesman Jasinowski said, "the contraction in investment and the increase in the trade deficit caused by the higher demand for imports."

Jasinowski also said tax revision would tend to deindustrialize the Nation, "at least with respect to capital-intensive sectors," which will tend to lose many tax breaks, such as accelerated depreciation and the investment tax credit.

"Over the long term, the economy will undergo a shift in the mix of output away from capital-intensive manufacturing toward more labor-intensive industries and services, which the mix of inputs will shift away from capital and toward labor," Jasinowski said.

On the bright side, however, a switch to more labor-intensive industries and services means more employment. DRI said lower tax brackets would encourage more people to join the labor force. Families would no longer have to worry that if a non-employed spouse goes to work, the added income would push them into a higher tax bracket.

"This is quite a boon for the service sector and their costs will be reduced," as more people would be willing to work, Brinner said. Unemployment rates may rise slightly with the influx of more workers, "but the stimulus provided by spending" would make that a wash.

Also, the influx of more workers would help keep down wages, Brinner said.

Because of intense competition—both domestic and foreign—businesses may find it difficult to pass along any tax increases to consumers, some economists predict. Many of the companies expected to get the biggest tax increases already are holding down price hikes because of international competition, they note.

SMOOTH TRANSITION SOUGHT ON TAX BILL

(By Gerald M. Boyd)

SANTA BARBARA, CA.—Donald T. Regan, the White House chief of staff, said today that the Administration will seek to assure the tax revision legislation is phased in without disruption to the economy.

Meeting with a small group of reporters here, Mr. Regan acknowledged confusion about how the historic legislation would be phased in under the so-called "transition rules," which govern how the current tax codes will shift to the new provisions that Congress is likely to enact.

Mr. Regan, a former Wall Street executive, said that many officials in the financial community were unclear about how the provisions would be phased in and how it would affect the economy.

THEY'RE AS CONFUSED AS I AM

"They're as confused as I am," he said. "I don't know what the effect will be on me, because I don't know what the transition rules are.

"At this point the economists are, for the most part, doing what I'm doing—trying to figure out what will be the effect on the economy."

The remarks, which came in an interview, suggested some White House concern about the proposal, which moved a step closer to enactment Saturday, when it was approved by a House-Senate conference.

Mr. Regan said that, at this point, the President had no plans to seek changes in the legislation after it is enacted, remarking, "We think, on balance, it's good."

IMPACT STUDIES REQUESTED

But in underscoring his concern, the chief of staff, who is also the former Treasury Secretary, said that he had requested both the Treasury Department and the President's Council of Economic Advisers to conduct studies of the economic impact of the legislation once the transition rules are finalized.

They are expected to be submitted with the conference report to Congress when it returns in September.

"We don't know what the transition rules are, Mr. Regan said. "If the transition rules for real estate are five years, that's one thing; if the transition rules are only one year, that's something else again."

These transition rules remain unwritten; the staff of the conference committee still has to work out myriad such details.

Mr. Regan's comments suggested that the White House plans to be actively involved in shaping the final details of the historic bill, which has been shepherded through Congress by top Treasury officials. But the White House would be limited by the general guidelines set by the conferees.

The transition rules are important in determining the final shape of the new Tax Code and could be written in a manner that makes some provisions more favorable than they might appear at this point.

"There'll be any number of things that'll reduce the impact, some favorable, and some unfavorable," Mr. Regan said.

Under the conference version of the legislation, capital gains would be taxed at the same rate as salary income next year, a maximum of 28 percent. Currently, capital gains is taxed a maximum of 20 percent.

Mr. Regan said that he had decided to request the studies at a planning meeting Monday and that it was "premature" to predict, before the review is completed, how the legislation will affect the economy.

IMPACT A GUESS AT BEST

"How do you know the economic effects of the tax bill if it's not written yet by the Congress? It's got to be a guess at best," he said. "I don't see it's going to have a negative effect, and I don't see it having a positive effect."

Discussing the political impact of the bill, Mr. Regan said that he believed that it would be seen a plus for Republicans and Democrats in that people from both parties had been active in the attempt to secure passage.

Mr. Regan used the interview to hint that the administration could be agreeable to using additional revenue that is expected to be generated from the tax revision to meet deficit targets that Mr. Reagan has committed himself to in a desire to balance the Federal budget.

While saying that he remains philosophically opposed to that approach, he said that the Administration could support holding the additional funds in reserve until next year, when they might be applied to the deficit. Congress has projected about a $10 billion to $11 billion revenue "windfall" from the tax legislation.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I take the floor at this time because there is a pause in the proceedings of the Senate, and it seems a good time to address, at least for the first time by me since the agreement to the conference report by the tax conferees, it seems to me to be a good time to address some of the questions that have been raised by the tax bill that we agreed to.

Some Senators have asked me since our return from the recess if there is a single place that they can turn to find out some analysis of the bill. There have been a number of articles written, a number of columns written, over the past few weeks on the question of the tax bill. But we have been in recess, Members of the Senate have scattered to the four points of the compass, and it would be only natural if Members did not have the opportunity to see gathered in one place the analysis that has been put together on the tax bill.

So what I have done in this statement is to put together a variety of newspaper articles and columns raising questions about the tax bill with the hope that Members of the Senate or staff representatives of Senators will be able to examine this material and to find out some of the concerns about the tax bill.

As a lot of people know, what occurred on the 16th of August was that the conferees, both House and Senate conferees, agreed to a conference report which will be several thousand pages in length without seeing the conference report.

It struck me at the time a little bit unusual. The week before we recessed, we spent 2 or 3 days on the floor of the Senate fine-tuning in meticulous detail the terms of a $100 million grant to Contras in Nicaragua. At the same time that we were finetuning in meticulous detail a $100 million grant, we, the conferees on the tax bill, were approving a conference report which we had never seen, the details of which had yet to be drafted and which are not yet drafted.

A lot of Members of the Senate that I have talked to, I have said, "How do you plan to vote on the tax conference report?" And they said, "Well, we do not know. We will have to look at it. We want to find out what is in the transition rules before we make up our minds. We want to analyze it further."

When the conference report was adopted by the House and Senate conferees, we had not analyzed what was in it. I thought that was unusual and that was too bad, especially since we had the whole recess ahead of us. The drafting could have gone on, and then the conferees could have acted. But we did not do it.

Mr. President, the basic reasons for my concern about the tax bill go far beyond questions of process with respect to the doings of the conference committee. I believe, and the various analyses that are incorporated with my prepared statement also suggest that the fundamental difficulty of the tax bill is something that is much more long term than the process adopted by the conferees when we put the bill together.

The basic problem has to do with the long-term future of the United States. We tend so often in the Congress to think day to day or even minute to minute. How are we going to get through the next day, the next week? How are we going to get through the next election?

How are we going to put together some legislation which we believe responds to the demand which we hear from our constituents, and for this thing in our mind to take the long view of anything? The tax bill which was being put together this year is a short-term-view tax bill. It is a bill which essentially promotes immediate consumption at the expense of savings and investment.

The theory of the bill is to say to the people of the United States, you get a rate cut. You get a rate cut of maybe $4 or $5 a week. And in exchange for the rate cut, well, we will pay for it by taking the money out of business, by taking the money out of particularly a capital investment business. We will increase the tax on capital. We will make the United States less competitive in the world markets. We will reduce the tax credit for research and development. We will repeal the investment tax credit. We will take about $13 billion out of the depreciation. We will hit very hard our universities, and in a number of different ways. As a matter of fact, in every conceivable way the conferees agree to hit our universities, which are perhaps the greatest way to invest in the future of the United States.

So basically what we have done is to say we are so anxious to provide this $4 or $5 a week rate reduction that we are willing to pay for that immediate consumption, oriented rate reduction by penalizing and retarding the future economic growth of the United States by making us less efficient as a country, less modern, less research oriented, less able to maintain the cutting edge of new technology which heretofore had been the great pride of the United States. That was the nature of the bill.

Then we look at the budget consequences. You know, our idea was to produce a revenue, neutral tax bill. If anybody wanted to bet his or her life-savings on whether or not this bill is revenue neutral, he should have his head examined. Yet, we are betting the economic future of the United States on the revenue neutrality of this tax bill.

During the 4 weeks before the conference committee completed its work, revenue projections for the tax bill fluctuated by $20 billion. Revenue projections were a constantly moving target created by the latest estimates, and the latest economic projections that were handed out. Frantically the conferees were scrambling to throw more and more revenue into the pot in order to meet the changing projections.

We cannot predict revenue consequences 5 years down the road. Yet, we say this is a revenue-neutral tax bill. I do not think it is revenue neutral. Just as an example of why I do not think it is revenue neutral, back in 1981 the capital gains rate was 28 percent. We reduced the capital gains rate from 28 percent to 20 percent, and we argued that the reduction in the capital gains rate would produce revenue from the Treasury. We argued at that time in 1981 that when you reduce capital gains rates you produce revenue because the number of transactions increase. Now we are writing a tax bill which moves the capital gains rate back from 20 percent to 28 percent again. We are arguing—and I am told the economic projections will show this when the Joint Committee on Taxation completes its work—that when you increase the capital gains tax, you increase revenue by $25 billion to $30 billion.

Mr. President, we cannot have it both ways. We cannot say that you pick up revenue when you reduce capital gains taxes and you pick up revenue when you increase capital gains taxes.

In 1981 we were proved correct. It turned out that as a consequence of 1981, it was true that Treasury revenues were increased when capital gains taxes were reduced. If that was true in 1981, we are not going to gain revenues by increasing capital gains. That is just one of the problems in the revenue estimates of this bill.

Talk about smoke and mirrors. This is it. Then there is the even more serious question as to the timing of the revenue changes which we guess are going to occur because of this bill. We believe that there will be a front-end load of $11 billion of revenue that will be picked up in 1987. Then we believe that in 1988 there will be a loss of $17 billion in revenue. So what we are doing now, my understanding of what we are contemplating doing right now, is to try to rush to pass the tax bill prior to October 1. And if we pass the tax bill prior to October 1, then the front-end load of $11 billion is available to count against the deficit for 1987.

So we start with a target of $144 billion deficit which we promised to the American people, and then we say we do not really have to hit the bull's eye. We just have to hit the perimeter of the bull's-eye which is $154 billion because that avoids sequestration if you come within $10 billion.

Then we say we can make that money up between $154 billion and $173 billion or whatever. We can make that money up by the front-end load of the tax bill.

So we do not have to do anything. We tell the American people, "We are handling the problem of the deficit. We passed Gramm-Rudman. It does not mean anything. It does not mean that we actually have to do anything or act. All we do is pass it and then miss the bull's-eye. Come within $10 billion and use this phony front-end load of revenue to come close enough for 1987."

Then what happens in 1988? Well, in 1988, we are supposed to get down to $108 billion as the deficit, now being at $144 billion. Instead of having $11 billion in front-end load from the tax bill, we have, by our estimates, $17 billion in revenue shortfall. So we have to get down to $108 billion plus come up with $17 billion plus not have available the $11 billion from the front-end load.

How are we going to do that? How are we going to find that money? What is going to come of Gramm-Rudman in 1988?

Then if we factor in the widely held view of economists that the effect of the tax bill, at least initially, is going to be a reduction in the gross national product, we are not even close to Gramm-Rudman in 1988.

I suppose that it could be said, "Well, we are banking on the fact that we are going to have a recession and that the recession will vitiate the requirements of Gramm-Rudman for the following fiscal year."

I would hope that that is not the way we do business around here, to hope for a recession to get us out of our responsibility.

But, Mr. President, the fact of the matter is that this tax bill is going to guarantee the failure of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, guarantee it. We make no changes for 1987. We create a $17 billion problem for 1988. We follow tax policies which economists tell us will lead to a decline of the gross national product by 1 percentage point, according to Murry Weidenbaum, who was President Reagan's chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

We convince ourselves that by increasing capital gains taxes we are going to raise revenue. And we are blissfully unaware today of the consequences for next year of passing this tax bill.

Mr. President, there is going to be ample opportunity in the weeks ahead to discuss the problems with the tax bill. I know that the great advocates of the bill would just as soon have us just take it up and pass it under a half-hour time limit some night. "Please do not look at it." That was the concept when we finished the conference committee. "Do not look at the draft. The lobbyists will look at it. People will turn against it if they have a chance to examine it." You are darn right they will turn against it if they have a chance to examine it.

I saw in the paper a couple of days ago that the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, made a speech last week and said, "Well, next year we are going to have to increase rates."

That is a ridiculous state of events. We say we are going to broaden the base, remove incentives for investment, remove incentives for the future of this country in order to provide a fund of money with which to reduce tax rates, and then the next year we are going to increase rates again.

That is the position of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Our leader, Senator DOLE, said, at least according to the newspaper, "Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI should not say that."

Let us just be blissfully ignorant of future tax increases as we pass the bill. That, I guess, is the way to pass the tax bill. "Please do not pay attention to what we are doing. Mum is the word. do not pay any attention to it. Somebody might catch on."

I think what we are doing is penalizing the future of the United States of America and causing great, great havoc for the future of our country.

The President said a year or so ago that tax reform for him was of equal priority with deficit reduction. To me it was not of equal priority with deficit reduction. Deficit reduction always came first. I think that is the feeling of most Members of the Senate, that deficit reduction comes first. If we pass this bill, deficit reduction is just shoved aside, pushed into the closet somewhere. Gramm-Rudman is shoved aside, pushed into the closet somewhere. Rate reductions come first.

A lot of Members of the Senate were home talking to their constituents over the past few weeks, and I think it is a widely held view that our constituents are a little more skeptical about the tax bill than we thought they might be. We are not getting too much comment on it.

I have to credit the people of the United States with a lot of wisdom. We have been telling them of the danger of a $2 trillion national debt. We have been telling them of the danger of the $200 billion deficit in the Federal budget. Then we say to them, "And by the way, now that we have finished talking to you about the national debt and the deficit in the budget, guess what: You get a tax cut of $4 a week."

Is it any wonder that the American people think something is goofy around here? Is it any wonder that people are skeptical about politicians talking always about deficits and then saying, "You got a tax cut?"

Well, there is a lot to be said about this bill, a lot to be said, and it will be said in the weeks ahead. The whole question of fairness should be discussed. Is it really a fair bill? I would hope to address that question at some future time.

Is it really fair, for example, if a well-to-do parent who owns a home in suburbia, which has appreciated in value, borrows against that home to provide an education for the parent's child and is able to deduct the interest paid on the student's loan, whereas the poor kid who lives in the inner city, whose family does not own a home, takes out a loan, pays the loan over the working years of his life, is not able to deduct the interest? Is that fair?

Is it fair to have a higher tax rate, marginal rate, for people in the middle-income levels than people in the upper-income levels?

These are all questions which will have to be discussed and debated, and they will be. But for the time being, Mr. President, suffice it to say that some very comprehensive and excellent analyses have been put together and they can be found in one place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. They have just been inserted in the RECORD. If anybody is wondering what is wrong with the tax bill, if anybody is wondering what went wrong in the conference, there is a ready resource to find out what went wrong. That is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and that material has just been submitted.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for a short few minutes as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL O'BRIEN VISITOR CENTER

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today I am proposing an amendment to reverse a very regrettable omission in the Interior appropriation bill by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The House bill included language in the general provisions for the Department of the Interior which would designate a visitor center for the Illinois and Michigan Canal National Heritage Corridor as the "George M. O'Brien Visitor Center," in memory of this great man and in recognition of his outstanding leadership in the effort to gain national recognition of this historic canal and corridor.

As my colleagues know, George O'Brien was a dear friend of mine and of many others here. He was as dedicated a public servant as I have ever known, and he made a difference to his country and his State.

This amendment does not add one penny to this bill. It merely names an already existing visitor center in Lockport, IL, in Representative George M. O'Brien's district, after a man who was deeply involved in the establishment of the National Heritage Corridor. In fact, $1 million has been spent on the renovation of the Gaylord Building, the oldest industrial building in Lockport, into a visitor center, museum, and restaurant.

The Interior appropriation does not include funds which my colleague, Mr. SIMON, and I requested for the operation of the Heritage Corridor Commission in the amount of $250,000. We regret that the committee failed to appropriate this modest sum, but hope that it will be given favorable consideration in conference.

The Illinois and Michigan Canal has exceeded our expectations in its first 2 years of existence. It has been the impetus for many economic development projects in addition to recreation and historic projects. It has generated much more in State, local, and private funds than the modest Federal contribution.

At the end of my remarks I would like to include a list of projects which are directly attributable to the I and M Canal National Heritage Corridor.

Mr. President, I hope the committee's action was an oversight, and that there will be no objection to restoring the language honoring our friend, former Representative George O'Brien, with a most appropriate tribute, making him a permanent part of the project he worked so hard to see realized.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of progress reports on the canal and how it has helped this area of Illinois be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I AND M CANAL—PROGRESS REPORT

Several new projects are underway which are directly attributable to the National Heritage Corridor designation which was granted to the I and M in 1984.

(1) New funds from the State of Illinois of over $1 million for use on new trail development along the canal. Also, renovation of the lodge at Starved Rock State Park, and work on locks.

(2) The U.S. Steel/Heritage Business Park.—This project would not have happened without the National Heritage Corridor designation. It will eventually create 1,500 new jobs in Joliet. Requests for proposals are already distributed for the first phase of this project. It is the first time that a grant from the National Trust for Historic Preservation was made to a corporation for the purpose of developing a plan for utilizing this site. The company matched the $45,000 grant, and the result was a plan for this new redevelopment project. It is precisely what we all hoped to achieve with the National Heritage Corridor.

(3) The Gaylord Building renovation in Lockport, Illinois.—This is the oldest industrial building in Lockport. $1 million is being spent to develop it into a restaurant, banquet facility, visitors center and museum. 55 new jobs are anticipated to be created by this project.

(4) Joliet downtown redevelopment.—The National Trust named 8 urban development demonstration projects. Joliet was one of them.

(5) Waterfront Park in Bridgeport is being developed at the site where the canal begins. It will be a community park and gateway to the corridor.

(6) Cook, DuPage and Will County Forest Preserves are developing a 25-mile canoe trail on the Des Plaines River.

(7) Cache Island in the Will County Forest Preserve District is being developed as a major visitors' center with interpretation of the French and Indian periods.

(8) The State of Illinois purchased Fitzpatrick House as the headquarters for the National Heritage Corridor Commission.

In Lamont, Illinois, a $20 million project, a private psychiatric hospital, Four Winds, will be located on the Brown Family estate. It will be a teaching institution affiliated with the University of Chicago. The private company listed the corridor as one of the factors it considered in locating in Lamont.

(10) Buffalo Rock Effigy Tumuli is a mine reclamation project in Ottawa, Illinois. There are 1.5 miles of abandoned strip mines owned by the Ottawa Silica Co. The Abandoned Mined Lands Reclamation Council included the site on its list of priorities and $1 million was going to be spent to reclaim it as a flat field. Edmund Thornton, President of Ottawa Silica, decided to make it something special, and hired Michael Heizer, an earth sculptor. He was inspired by Indian mounds, and has created five sculptures of animals out of the land. They are the largest earth sculptures in the world. Additional costs were assumed by Thornton and the National Endowment for the Arts. It has received world-wide attention and is the subject of an extensive article in the April edition of Smithsonian Magazine. It will be a major tourist attraction within the National Heritage Corridor.

There are many other projects in various stages of development. But it is fair to say that much has been accomplished in the short life of the National Heritage Corridor. The expenditure of millions of dollars in private, state and local funds and the promise of thousands of jobs.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1987

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DIXON. At this point, Mr. President, I would like to submit an amendment to H.R. 5233 now pending in the Senate which I understand is not subject to call at this time, Mr. President, but will be subject to call on another occasion.

I simply want to file the amendment at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the quorum be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPPORT FOR WIN FUNDING

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to discuss with my distinguished colleagues from Connecticut and Oregon a matter of deep concern to us: the elimination of funding in fiscal year 1987 for the Work Incentive [WIN] Program.

As my colleagues will recall, this program was established in 1967 with the goal of assisting recipients of aid to families with dependent children [AFDC] to become self-sufficient. In 1981, under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act [OBRA], WIN was expanded. Congress granted States the flexibility to create WIN demonstration programs, administered solely by State welfare agencies. Since then, 26 State "demo" programs have arisen, each of which receives Federal WIN matching funds to help run vital education and training, skills assessment, job search, community work experience, and other programs to encourage self-sufficiency for welfare recipients.

The Subcommittee on Labor-HHS-Education of the Appropriations Committee agreed that WIN warranted enough funding to continue current services. Therefore, the subcommittee included $220 million for WIN in its fiscal year 1987 appropriation measure, slightly more than the House bill which included $200 million for WIN in its version of the fiscal year 1987 Labor-HHS appropriations bill.

Shortly thereafter, the full Appropriations Committee adopted an amendment to eliminate all funding for the program next year. It is my understanding funding for WIN was eliminated because of procedural obstacles by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation.

Is this a correct understanding of the situation?

Mr. WEICKER. The Senator from New York is correct, and I am sure that Senator HATFIELD will agree.

Mr. HATFIELD. I do.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. To elaborate a bit, I understand that under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, each committee and subcommittee is required to meet a section 302(b) allocation for both budget authority and outlays. Is it not correct that the WIN Program was eliminated because the Labor-HHS appropriations bill would otherwise have faced a section 302(f) point of order, requiring a supermajority of three-fifths to overturn?

Mr. WEICKER. The Senator's summary of the budget problem that confronted the committee is accurate. Funding was not eliminated because of a judgment that the program was ineffective and ought to be eliminated. And may I say to the Senator, more generally, I voted against Gramm-Rudman-Hollings because I knew we would have to arbitrarily cut worthy programs such as WIN, and I have joined the Senator in voting to repeal that act for the same reason.

Mr. HATFIELD. So have I.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Not 5 months ago, I offered an amendment with several of our colleagues to provide $211 million for the WIN Program in the fiscal year 1987 budget resolution. A month earlier, the Senate Budget Committee had passed a budget which assumed the elimination of WIN.

During the floor debate, I argued that WIN funds have allowed States to successfully educate and train welfare recipients for productive, private-sector jobs. Senators KENNEDY and KERRY spoke of the documented success of the Massachusetts E.T. Program. And Senators MITCHELL, GORE, and CHAFEE shared the accomplishments of the WIN-funded training programs in their home States.

Each of these States, like my own State of New York, has used WIN funds to move welfare recipients off the public assistance roll. In New York, for example, the WIN demonstration program helped 20,000 welfare recipients last year find employment. The State's network of on-the-job training, grant diversion, and other training programs, which also rely on WIN funding, has helped over 80,000 persons find jobs in the last 2 years. One of the most successful programs, the Training and Employment Assistance Program [TEAP], involves private sector employees who are willing to help public assistance recipients attain job opportunities—and ultimate self-sufficiency.

The Members of this body voted in a strong, bipartisan show of support to restore funding for WIN to the budget resolution. The 55-to-40 vote was notable because it cut across party, geographic, and ideological lines.

Indeed, a majority of the members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, including the senior Senator from Connecticut and Chairman HATFIELD, supported restoration of funding for WIN in the April 30 budget vote.

Would not my distinguished colleagues agree that there is strong support for the WIN Program among our colleagues?

Mr. WEICKER. I most certainly would.

Mr. HATFIELD. Definitely.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. In a recent letter to our colleagues, 24 Governors of both parties urged the restoration of WIN funding to the Labor-HHS appropriations bill. The Governors made an important argument.

[t]he success of WIN and WIN Demonstration programs has inspired many members from both Houses and both sides of the aisle to introduce legislation modeled on successful state initiatives. Eliminating WIN funding would not only hinder the development and continuation of these initiatives, it would remove the catalyst for comprehensive employment and training legislation that will certainly be an integral part of the upcoming welfare reform debate.

In short, this is a particularly inopportune moment to withdraw support for the WIN Program. Though its annual appropriation is modest, the program has proven in recent years to be the only real impetus for reform of our welfare system.

Moreover, the WIN Program, after several years of refinement and exploration, is working. It is my view that this is no time to give up on America's dependent poor; no time to say, "There is no work for the likes of you, stay on welfare, do not find an independent and self-respecting job for yourself, and for your children."

Mr. WEICKER. I could not agree more.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. When the Senator from Connecticut goes to conference on this measure with the House, it is my strongest hope that he, Chairman HATFIELD, and the other Senate conferees will make their greatest effort to secure the maximum possible level of funding for the WIN Program. While I understand that my colleagues face very real and difficult fiscal constraints, I am confident that we share a common concern for the WIN Program, and a desire to resolve this matter to the advantage of the program. The beneficiaries of the program have so much to gain from its continuation, and so very much more to lose from its abrupt termination.

Mr. WEICKER. May I say to my colleague from New York that I have always sought to maintain at least the current level of services for the program and will do my utmost to ensure that Congress provides the maximum possible funding level for WIN. I will work with our colleagues, and Members of the House of Representatives, to that end.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the comments of the subcommittee chairman, Senator WEICKER, regarding the Work Incentive Program. We have an excellent program in the State of Oregon. Our program—funded by the Federal WIN Program and State funds—puts people on welfare to work. It gives them real job skills and an opportunity to join the work force and end their dependence on welfare. What happened to the WIN account in the full Appropriations Committee markup had much to do with our fiscal year 1987 outlay problems and little or nothing to do with the merits of the WIN Program. I want to assure my colleagues that I will do what I can, working with Senator WEICKER, to restore funding for the WIN Program in conference.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank my distinguished colleagues for their commitment to the program and their attention to this important matter. I am aware of a number of other Senators who would like to make statements at this time.

Mr. DODD. Let me concur with what has just been discussed with respect to funding for the WIN Program. As my distinguished colleague from Connecticut knows, that program has played a critical role in our State of Connecticut in helping families climb out of poverty. Just about 5,000 women a year leave the AFDC rolls in Connecticut, after having been placed in permanent, nonsubsidized jobs through WIN.

Given the importance of the WIN Program to our State and every other, I would hope the Senate would be able to secure level for WIN when it goes to conference with the House on this measure.

Mr. WEICKER. As I just indicated to my colleagues from New York and Oregon, I will do my utmost to ensure that Congress provides the maximum possible funding level for WIN.

Mr. CHAFEE. I share Senator MOYNIHAN's deep concern about the deletion of funds for the Work Incentive Program from the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies appropriation bill. It is my hope that the conferees will consider restoring funds to this very important program.

The WIN Program is essential to States' efforts to promote self-sufficiency and reduce welfare dependence among AFDC recipients. In Rhode Island there are approximately 16,000 AFDC recipients, 90 percent of whom are women and single parents, and the age of this population is growing younger each year. Under fiscal year 1986 funding, the WIN Program in Rhode Island provided day care assistance, education, job training, and job search services to 2,000 of the eligible AFDC population. It would be a mistake to weaken our commitment to assist these young families in their quest for independence. It is my hope that Senate conferees will work to restore funding for the WIN Program when the conference takes place for the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies appropriation bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to join my colleagues in addressing the success of the WIN Program. I commend the managers of the bill for agreeing to work out a satisfactory solution, and I hope we can save what has been a remarkably successful program.

During my 23 years of service on the Labor and Human Resources Committee, we have fashioned various program to help those who are on assistance programs to find some way to become constructive and productive members of their community. Some programs have succeeded and other have not.

By any fair evaluation of the WIN Program, it has had remarkable success. In Massachusetts, $6 million of the WIN Program is combined with $24 million from the State for the development of the ET Program. The results has been dramatic. Eighty-six percent of the individuals who have gone through the ET Program are not on welfare 1 year later.

The program has also resulted in substantial savings for the taxpayers of Massachusetts and for the Federal taxpayer as well. This program stands on its own merits as a successful training and education program for getting people onto the job rolls and off welfare rolls. When you cost it out in dollars and cents, which so often guides the judgment of the Members of this body, it saves millions of dollars at both the Federal and State level.

It is irresponsible to zero this program out, as has been recommended in the committee bill. It is successful. The lessons that we are learning from this program are helping us deal with millions of people across the country who are on welfare.

Single heads of household are predominantly women. Ninety percent of those who get jobs through the ET Program are women. In Massachusetts this has had an enormous impact for those individuals and for their children.

This program impacting has a positive impact on families. We hear a great deal in this body about support for families, and how we ought to be doing more for them. This program does something for families in our country. It is a lifeline, a hand up rather than a handout for millions of Americans.

No principle is more fundamental to the long-term success and continued vitality of this Nation than the idea that there must be opportunity for all citizens to lead productive and rewarding lives. Yet, every day, millions of citizens wake to a morning that brings no hope or opportunity because there are no jobs for them. We should never underestimate the destructive effect of this dead end psychology on those who face the implicit judgment that they are useless and of no account. The dark shadow of that judgment has fallen on millions more Americans in the last few years; they join millions of other Americans for whom economic recovery has always been other people's news.

I sincerely hope that the managers and conferees will do everything within their power to save this successful and cost effective program from the chopping block. I thank my colleagues for their pledges of support today, and for the votes of confidence they have given this program in the past.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I again rise in support of the Work Incentive Program (WIN).

As I, and many others have stated in the past, the WIN Program is the only source of Federal money specifically dedicated to helping recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] achieve self-sufficiency.

The WIN Program is cost effective. The Win Program emphasizes placing the maximum number of participants in self-supporting employment to reduce the Nation's welfare assistance costs. The program benefits the welfare recipients and the Federal Government. The program saves State and Federal Governments millions of dollars in welfare payments.

In my home State of Maine, 4,500 welfare recipients have found jobs since the start of the WIN demonstration in 1982, for welfare savings of $11.5 million. In Maine, the program emphasizes education and training for recipients to enable them to be placed in long term employment. It is not a "make work" program.

The elimination of the WIN program is a shortsighted savings. In a 1985 GAO report, the General Accounting Office concluded that State AFDC employment and training programs financed by WIN were exhibiting encouraging progress in reducing welfare dependency.

We cannot afford to eliminate this important program. The cost of such action will be high—both in economic costs to the Federal Government and in human terms in the loss of self-sufficiency by many now trapped in poverty.

During Senate debate on the budget reconciliation bill in April, a majority of the Senate voted to continue to support this modest, but important program. I urge the House and Senate conferees on this bill to support continued funding for the WIN Program in the fiscal year 1987 budget.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, my colleagues have just done a very good job of laying out the reasons for keeping the WIN Program alive and healthy. It has been mentioned before, but I believe it bears noting again—the Senate, some 4 months ago affirmed its overwhelming bipartisan support by voting 55 to 40 to keep WIN in the budget.

Those of us who are familiar with the program's success greatly appreciate both the chairman of the subcommittee and the chairman of the full committee's continuing support for WIN as well as their commitment to try and continue its unique and important work for the next fiscal year.

My own experience with WIN stems from my work as Lieutenant Governor with Massachusetts' tremendously successful "ET" Program which is partially funded by Federal WIN dollars. Since 1983, ET has placed some 30,000 welfare recipients into unsubsidized mostly private sector jobs provided by 8,000 employers throughout Massachusetts. In 1986 alone the ET Program will save Federal and State taxpayers over $100 million in reduced welfare payments and increased tax revenues. At a time when we are looking to find every available means to reduce deficits, we need to be careful to avoid cutting those programs that are already saving Federal and State tax dollars.

The average full-time ET graduate earns wages 2½ times greater than what they received in basic welfare payments, and they keep these well-paying jobs. Over 86 percent of those who leave welfare due to ET are still off the rolls 1 year later. These statistics are impressive, but the human side of ET is perhaps more telling.

ET also measures its success by the accomplishments of graduates like Dawn Lawson who is a word processor at a fortune 500 company in Worchester, MA. She not only has moved off of welfare, but he has also moved out of public housing and into her own apartment. She now contemplates something that would have been inconceivable not long ago—the chance that she might one day go into business for herself.

The success Massachusetts has been able to achieve through the WIN Program is happening all across the country—placing people in real jobs at real wages. In fiscal year 1985 alone over 330,000 welfare recipients found jobs thanks to WIN, achieving reductions in welfare payments at least twice the Federal investment in the WIN Program.

I once again commend my colleagues for their concern in this issue and I am convinced that they will bring a strong desire to work this problem out in conference with their House counterparts.

I also ask unanimous consent to include at this time a letter signed by 24 of the Nation's Governors stating their strong support for the WIN Program.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GOVERNOR'S ASSOCIATION,
August 26, 1986.

To Members of the U.S. Senate:

The National Governors' Association is deeply concerned by the Senate Appropriations Committee voice vote to eliminate funding for the Work Incentive Program (WIN), the only program specifically designed to provide employment and training opportunities for welfare recipients. This action is especially disturbing given the bipartisan Senate vote last April in support of the WIN program during deliberations on the fiscal year 1987 budget resolution.

The WIN program and the WIN Demonstration authority, created in 1981, have enabled Governors to design employment and training programs which have proven effective in placing welfare recipients into private sector jobs and giving them an opportunity to achieve economic self-sufficiency.

Moreover, Governors have demonstrated that the WIN program, rather than contributing to the federal deficit, can result in substantial savings to both federal and state governments. Ironically, the federal government has been the primary beneficiary of savings generated by successful state programs since, as you know, it contributes over 50 percent of the costs of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and the Medicaid programs, and 100 percent of Food Stamp benefits. The Department of Labor's own data indicate that the savings in AFDC dollars alone more than pay for the costs of the WIN and WIN Demo programs.

In addition, the success of WIN and WIN Demonstration programs has inspired Members from both Houses and both sides of the aisle to introduce legislation modeled on successful state initiatives. Eliminating WIN funding would not only hinder the development and continuation of these initiatives, it would remove the catalyst for comprehensive employment and training legislation that will certainly be an integral part of the upcoming welfare reform debate. The extent of recent Congressional activity on work and welfare legislation indicates a strong commitment to a continued federal role in financing employment and training programs for welfare recipients.

Therefore, we strongly urge you to overturn what we feel is the misguided and short-sighted decision of the Senate Appropriations Committee to eliminate federal funding for the WIN program. As state experience illustrates, WIN represents a cost-effective investment in people, helping welfare recipients to move off of the welfare rolls while at the same time resulting in substantial savings to federal and state governments.

Sincerely,

Gov. Bill Clinton, Chairman, NGA; Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, Chairman, Committee on Economic Development; Gov. John Carlin, State of Kansas; Gov. William A. O'Neill, State of Connecticut; Gov. Martha Layne Collins, Commonwealth of Kentucky; Gov. Madeleine M. Kunin, State of Vermont; Gov. Victor G. Atiyeh, State of Oregon; Gov. Richard F. Celeste, State of Ohio; Gov. Michael N. Castle, Chairman, Committee on Human Resources; Gov. Thomas H. Kean, State of New Jersey; Gov. Richard W. Riley, State of South Carolina; Gov. Rudy Perpich, State of Minnesota; Gov. Harry R. Hughes, State of Maryland; Gov. James J. Blanchard, State of Michigan; Gov. Mario M. Cuomo, State of New York; Gov. James R. Thompson, State of Illinois; Gov. Bill Allain, State of Mississippi; Gov. Norman H. Bangerter, State of Utah; Gov. Anthony S. Earl, State of Wisconsin; Gov. Mark White, State of Texas; Gov. Ted Schwinden, State of Montana; Gov. Joseph E. Brennan, State of Maine; Gov. Terry E. Branstad, State of Iowa; Gov. George Nigh, State of Oklahoma.

THE WORK INCENTIVE (WIN) PROGRAM

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased that, during consideration of appropriations for the coming fiscal year, Senators have seen fit to note the importance of the Work Incentive [WIN] Program and to express their hopes that the Congress will provide appropriations for the program to continue. I rise to join in their expression of support for the continuation of the WIN Program. Given our supposed commitment to the goal of breaking the cycle of welfare dependency by encouraging self-sufficiency, continued Federal support for this program is not just appropriate—it is essential.

Earlier this year, I joined the senior Senator from New York, my colleague from Maine, and others as a cosponsor of an amendment to the budget resolution for the coming fiscal year which provided for $211 million to maintain the WIN Program at current levels. The Senate approved that amendment by a vote of 55 to 40. I am confident that a clear majority in this body still support the continuation of the WIN Program.

I am disappointed that the measure now before the Senate provides no funding for the WIN Program. Fortunately, the upcoming conference between the Senate and the House of Representatives on appropriations for next fiscal year will provide an opportunity to rectify this omission.

WIN is the only Federal program targeting employment training and placement assistance directly to Aid to Families With Dependent Children [AFDC] recipients. The program offers tremendous flexibility to States to design their own programs of training, work and employment with an emphasis on direct placement of participants in private employment and labor market exposure. While I cannot necessarily speak for the success of the WIN Program in other States, I can attest to its accomplishments in Maine.

Currently, 6 percent of Maine's families—90 percent of which are headed by single mothers—are on AFDC. The WIN demonstration project in Maine, known as the Welfare Employment, Education and Training Program [WEET] provides job counseling, training, placement, child care, and transportation to program participants. Participation is mandatory for AFDC recipients living near any of Maine's 14 program sites—about half the recipients in the State. Mothers with children under 6 are exempt as are recipients who are disabled or caring for someone who is disabled.

Approximately 1,200 AFDC recipients enter employment through the WEET Program each year. Since its inception in 1982, 4,500 AFDC recipients have gotten jobs through the program. If these same 4,500 WEET participants had not gone to work—if they had stayed on welfare—they would have cost the taxpayers $11.5 million in welfare payments. The cost of the WEET Program over the same time was $6 million. Therefore, the taxpayer has saved almost $2 for every $1 spent. Clearly, at least in Maine, the charges that the WIN Program is not cost-effective, are simply not true. In recognition of the program's success, the Maine State Legislature has increased its share of funding for the program from the federally required 10 to 32 percent.

Cost-benefit ratios are, of course, extremely important in evaluating the success or failure of any program. While not so easily measured, the gains in human potential for those individuals for whom the cycle of welfare dependency has been broken, must also be taken into account in evaluating the effectiveness of the program. Maine's WEET Program has not just provided 4,500 jobs, it has changed the lives of 4,500 welfare recipients and their families.

Helping people on welfare to find and to keep useful jobs is surely the best way to cut both welfare costs and poverty in the long run. Therefore, the Federal Government should not abandon a program that gives welfare recipients the opportunity to realize their full potential and to lead to more independent and meaningful lives. Accordingly, I hope that, during the upcoming appropriations conference, the Senate will agree with the House of Representatives on the continuation of the WIN Program.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that further proceedings under the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2792

(Purpose: To extend the eligibility for trade adjustment assistance to certain workers whose employment was terminated a short time before the time limit).

Mr. DOLE. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

I ask unanimous consent the committee amendments be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] proposes an amendment numbered 2792.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . Notwithstanding section 223(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2273(b)), the certification made under section 223(a) of such Act on August 29, 1986, in response to a petition for trade adjustment assistance filed on April 23, 1986, by a group of workers of a firm that produces cardiopulmonary surgical devices and plastic administration sets shall apply to any worker of such firm whose last total or partial separation from such firm occurred on or after March 15, 1985.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am offering an amendment to extend Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] benefits to a large group of workers in my State who only just missed the time limit on benefits due to a late application.

In March 1985, 100 workers were laid off by a manufacturing plant in Kansas that had announced its decision to completely close down the facility over a period of some months. This plant is located in a small town that lies in the midst of a struggling agriculture and oil economy. There were few jobs to go around for these workers and many were forced to accept unemployment checks as a replacement income for themselves and their families.

About 1 month after those 100 workers lost their jobs, 75 more were laid off on April 19. The layoffs continued in a phasedown of plant operations until the last person walked out the door in December 1985, leaving more than 600 jobless. The State responded with a Dislocated Workers Program in which a majority of former employees participated, seeking new skills and a chance at other employment.

Given the depressed economy that prevailed in this farming community, the Dislocated Workers Program came and went and, still, many were without hope of future employment. A local group of former employees became active in seeking out other means of assistance and seized upon the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program as one more hope for hanging on. They filed a petition with the Department of Labor on April 23, 1986. After 6 months of anxious waiting, that application was approved only days ago.

Unfortunately, those first two groups of employees have been excluded from receiving these benefits—and many of them still need help. The law restricts the reach of TAA to exclude those employees whose employment was terminated more than 1 year before the filing of a petition. The petition was filed on April 23, 1986, so those employees who were laid off only 39 days before—and some who were laid off only 4 days before—the April 23, 1985 cutoff date are out of luck.

I certainly support the concept of limiting TAA eligibility. We cannot offer assistance to employees going back indefinitely. But, in this case, I think it is important that an exception be made. The cause of the plant closing—import competition from producers in Singapore—resulted in a series of layoffs, beginning March 15, 1985. The cutoff date we are dealing with is April 23.

We are not reaching back very far to encompass all affected employees and I would not advocate doing that if it were some distant date that unduly extended the benefit period. We are talking about 39 days to help a good number of people.

This body should be able to make exceptions in such cases as these. We have the authority and, I think, the responsibility, to see that the programs we have established are responsive and fair.

One note of irony that I might mention in this case: One woman who was instrumental from the beginning in seeing this successful petition for TAA to its fruition happened to be in one of these first groups of employees to be laid off. Therefore, she is not eligible.

I hope the Senate can support this amendment.

I understand there is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have generally supported trade adjustment assistance being extended wherever possible. I am concerned about the cost of this amendment. Can the Senator tell me how the costs will be covered?

Mr. DOLE. As I understand, there is no additional cost.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If there is not any cost, where will the money come from? You pay out money to unemployed workers.

Mr. DOLE. It comes from the Kansas allocation, I am advised.

Mr. METZENBAUM. For what group of employees is this trade adjustment assistance being extended, what classification?

Mr. DOLE. Travenol Laboratories had a plant in a small town called Hays, KS, which employed about 600 or 700 people. They closed it with very little notice, I might add, and it resulted in 600 or 700 people losing their jobs. In March 1985, 100 workers were laid off by this plant after announcing they were going to close down over a period of time and then they started laying off 100 and 75 and they were all finally gone, but as I understand—I can double-check—there is no additional cost.

What happened, they filed a petition with the Department of Labor on April 23, 1986. After 6 months of anxiously waiting, the application was approved only days ago. Unfortunately, the first two groups that were laid off, the 100 and then the 75, were excluded from receiving benefits and many of them still need help.

The law restricts the reach of trade adjustment assistance to exclude those employees whose employment was terminated more than 1 year before the filing of the petition. The petition was filed on April 23, 1986, so those employees laid off only 39 days before—and some were laid off only 4 days before the April 23, 1985 cutoff date were just out of luck.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I would say to my colleague from Kansas I think it is fraught with some danger to start making trade adjustment assistance retroactive. I do not intend to stand in the way of his going forward with the amendment, but I think that once we start down that road I am not sure where we will finish. I hope that the matter is not precedent setting.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared both with the majority and minority sides and I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2792) was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I withdraw the committee amendment on page 41, lines 6 and 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to withdraw the amendment on behalf of the committee on page 41.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments on page 59, lines 11 through 25; page 60, lines 1 through 25, and page 61, lines 1 through 3 be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I commend the chairman and the ranking member of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies, for their work in committee and on the floor.

Mr. President, I remain concerned over the backlog of black lung claims. The delays experienced by coal miners in getting a decision on their claims for black lung benefits are intolerable. This is not a new problem, it is a problem that I have addressed time and again in meetings in my office with the Department of Labor, in the Appropriations Committee, and on the Senate floor.

In fiscal year 1985, I added $1.6 million to expand the Benefits Review Board from three to nine members and to provide support staffing in order to reduce the backlog at the appeals level of the process. In 1984, a three-member board disposed of 1,862 black lung appeals and had a backlog of 5,234 black lung claims. In fiscal year 1986, the expanded nine-member board is expected to dispose of 2,920 black lung cases and carry over 5,413 cases. In fiscal year 1987, the Board is expected to increase the number of black lung dispositions at the appeals level to 3,360 and carry over 4,693 cases. This bill provides $7,412,000 and 168 full-time equivalents [FTE's] for the Benefits Review Board in fiscal year 1987.

In fiscal year 1986, I added $3.5 million to provide 16 additional administrative law judges and support staffing to the Office of Administrative Law Judges to reduce the backlog at the hearing level. At the end of fiscal year 1984, 5,790 black lung claims had been disposed of at the hearing level, with a backlog of 20,442 claims. By the end of fiscal year 1986, 8,050 black lung decisions at the hearing level will be issued with a backlog of 18,745 cases pending. This bill now provides $19,246,000—my amendment adding $1.5 million having been adopted earlier today—for the Office of Administrative Law Judges. Given these resources, the Office of Administrative Law Judges should be able to increase productivity to reach well over 10,500 black lung dispositions in fiscal year 1987.

The Black Lung Program is of tremendous importance to coal mining States like West Virginia. Some progress is being made in reducing the backlogs at both the administrative law judge and Benefits Review Board levels. However, more needs to be done. The backlogs will not be reduced as long as there remains a particular "mind set" at the Department that says this cannot be done. I am not interested in excuses. Those suffering from black lung are not interested in excuses. Excuses do not put food on the table. What I am interested in is seeing that substantial progress is made in reducing the backlogs.

I want to thank the distinguished chairman Mr. WEICKER, and the ranking member, Mr. PROXMIRE, of the Senate Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Appropriation Subcommittee. As always, they have exhibited understanding and compassion for the plight of those afflicted with this disease.

IN SUPPORT OF THE LISTER HILL CENTER FOR HEALTH POLICY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the provision in the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies appropriations bill pertaining to the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy.

The amount recommended for the Office of Assistant Secretary for Health includes $5 million to provide for the permanent operations of the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy to be located at the University of Alabama in Birmingham. The funds will be used to establish an endowment fund for the center. No part of the $5 million provided will be used for construction or other capital purposes; instead, the funds will be handled by professional investment managers who will invest these funds with a view toward growth of the endowment over the long term. In this way, the income from the fund will grow with inflation so that a consistent level of operations may be maintained. Investments will be in low-risk securities consistent with the protection of the principal amount.

The establishment of the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy honors in his own State the memory of a great senator whose legislative achievements in public health, biomedical research and hospital care earned him the title of the Nation's "statesman for health." The center would be dedicated, as was Senator Hill, to improving the quality of our health care system. The center would function as a national center for the advancement of disease prevention and health promotion, and would work specifically to refocus national health policy upon such goals as the development of a proactive health care system, the integration of treatment and prevention strategies, and the reduction of societally imposed threats to health. The Lister Hill Center would support research and scholarship on prevention topics, and its activities would include the establishment of a program of Lister Hill health care fellows, who would receive support to serve as congressional staff knowledgeable in the area of prevention.

Mr. President, certainly the establishment of the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy is an appropriate method to honor one of America's greatest statesmen. Here in the Senate, Lister Hill stood tall—a giant among giants. His record of accomplishments is awesome. They are massive in number and impressive in scope and substance.

Motivated by an inherent sense of noblesse oblige, Senator Hill recognized and embraced the responsibilities of public service from the first day he went to Congress in 1923 at age 27, until his retirement in 1969. For more than 4½ decades, Lister Hill's single goal was a better life for all people, and throughout his entire career he worked so that the blessings of America might be shared by all the people.

Senator Hill's particular charge was his work in the fields of health and medical research. He devoted his entire service in the Congress to helping fashion the tools and lay the foundations for the medical research, hospitals, and training and educational facilities which have led to the great strides that science, medicine, and public health have taken.

Of the many outstanding health programs which bear Lister Hill's name, perhaps the one with the most importance is the Hospital and Health Center Construction Act, popularly known as the Hill-Burton Act. More than 10,000 general hospitals, tuberculosis sanitariums, crippled children's clinics, diagnostic and training centers, and other medical facilities have been built throughout our Nation under the program.

The Hill-Burton Act is, of course, only one of the many programs that Senator Hill initiated or gave powerful impetus to in the fields of health and medicine. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to find anyone in our history who has done so much for the health of his fellowman as Lister Hill. Millions of Americans live better and longer because of Lister Hill, because of his total commitment to their well-being.

Upon America's horizon of greatness, there is no brighter luminary than Lister Hill, the pure personification of a public servant. The betterment of his fellowman was his platform, his creed, and his record.

In the State of Alabama, the people have good cause to remember Senator Hill's accomplishments. Daily we may see how the medical center at the University of Alabama in Birmingham took shape and prospered because of Senator Hill's pervasive interest in the health and well-being of mankind. The UAB Medical Center is a tangible expression of the fruits of his work and, indeed, are representative of what it was possible to accomplish as a result of one man's interest in the humanistic problems of society.

Senator Hill's legislation was responsible for the construction of hospitals and other health related buildings, for aid to medical and dental schools, for organization of an international health research program, erection of centers for treatment of mental illness and mental retardation, training programs for nurses and paramedical personnel, regional centers for treatment of heart disease, cancer and stroke, as well as other important health measures.

Mr. President, let me mention again some of Senator Hill's handiwork through the Hill-Burton Act. This important legislation initiated the concept of local, State, and Federal cost sharing of hospital facilities transformed the character of health care of the United States. It began a spectacular renaissance of health facilities in Alabama and throughout the United States.

The legislation had an immeasurable impact upon the University of Alabama in Birmingham where the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy will be located. Not only were a number of our buildings at UAB constructed through Hill-Burton funds, but many of our health and education programs were initiated or aided by subsequent Hill-inspired legislation. These programs, along with our internationally respected research activities, have enabled UAB to recruit superbly qualified faculty members.

The establishment of the National Institutes of Health began a long and successful sponsorship of legislation that supported investigations not only in the NIH laboratories but in medical centers throughout the land. It is impossible to estimate the number of lives that have been saved, prolonged, and made more comfortable because of the diagnostic and therapeutic technology developed with this support. As a result of Senator Hill's efforts, on behalf of NIH and its programs, millions of Americans—young and old, wealthy and impoverished—have benefited.

It is altogether fitting and proper that the Congress adopt legislation to endow the Lister Hill Center for Health Policy as a tribute to this great American. Among the extensive library holdings at UAB are much of Lister Hill's memorabilia and an original sculpture and painting of him. In view of his consuming interest in the transfer of biomedical information as well as all matters relating to health, this tribute is particulary fitting; a dynamic monument to be situated in the midst of an important medical center, in the Senator's own home State.

I urge the entire Congress to join me in adopting this legislation which will pay tribute to this unique individual of special quality.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to praise the efforts of the Senators and staffs that have labored so long on this bill. I compliment the Senators on the Subcommittee on Labor, HHS, Education Appropriations especially the distinguished chairman of that subcommittee, Senator WEICKER, for their hard work and diligence in getting this legislation to the Senate floor and enhancing the chances of having a separate appropriations bill for these agencies instead of being forced to provide the funding for these programs through a continuing resolution.

There are many important provisions in this legislation. Senator WEICKER and I share a concern over the adverse reactions associated with the pertussis childhood vaccine. We both feel that a compensation system for those injured children is needed to address the liability issues that have driven up the costs of vaccines, but we are also in agreement that Congress should concentrate its efforts on improving the Immunization Program while we try to resolve the compensation issue. I am very pleased that the committee bill has increased the funding for State grants for immunization to cover the rapidly escalating costs of vaccines. In addition, the Senate bill gives the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases an increase in its intramural research budget and directed that a portion of those funds be used to intensify the research efforts in development of a highly purified pertussis vaccine using recombinant DNA technology.

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, I have jurisdiction over several programs which need to be reauthorized this year. Head Start, Follow Through, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the community service block grant and the Dependent Care Program are contained in H.R. 4422 whose conference is completed and should be considered by Congress next week. The Domestic Service Volunteer Act is also in a House-Senate conference and I am hopeful that we will complete action on that measure before the House-Senate conference on this appropriations bill is completed. I am grateful to Senator WEICKER and the committee for having faith in the authorizing committee that we will complete action on these reauthorization bills before adjournment.

I am also pleased with the appropriation levels for drug and alcohol abuse research, training and direct operations.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the appropriations bill for the Department of Labor that we are considering today includes increased funding for the Pension and Welfare Benefit Administration. The bill provides additional funds to be used for new positions in ERISA field activities and for employee training. It would also provide $1.1 million for the development of an automated ERISA data base system.

The Pension and Welfare Benefit Administration is responsible for carrying out the Department of Labor's duties under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, better known as ERISA. Among the PWBA's tasks are the implementation of the reporting and disclosure requirements placed on pension and welfare benefit plans under ERISA and assuring compliance with the fiduciary duty and prohibited transaction provisions of the law.

Last year, the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, which I chair, investigated and held hearings on how well the Department of Labor has performed its responsibilities under ERISA. The subcommittee's investigation found that the PWBA, for much of its history, has been overwhelmed by its responsibilities under ERISA, and has been plagued by inadequate resources, conflicting priorities, and rapid turnover in leadership.

The subcommittee concluded that the inadequate resources and low priority assigned to the ERISA Program have hampered the ability of the Department of Labor to enforce this complex law. With less than 1 percent of pension plans being audited each year by the Department, for example, the chances of detecting violations of ERISA are minuscule at best. There has been growing concern that the lack of meaningful oversight of pension plans and their fiduciaries may jeopardize the important pension protections established by ERISA for millions of workers and retirees.

Over the past year, the Department of Labor has taken several important steps to address the problems of ERISA enforcement. It has, for example, elevated the Administrator of the PWBA to the rank of Assistant Secretary. The Pension Office has made substantial progress toward improving its operations, especially in the areas of training, information handling, and auditing of pension plans.

The moneys included in this appropriations bill will allow the pension office to continue its efforts to improve ERISA enforcement and oversight. Particularly important are the funds allocated for development of an automated ERISA data base. This project will go far in improving the accuracy, timeliness and completeness of information provided by private pension plans to the Department. Improvements in the quality and processing of this crucial data will, in turn, aid the pension office's overall enforcement capabilities.

I am pleased that the Department of Labor and the Office of Management and Budget are working together to develop a coordinated ERISA data base and hope that the OMB will continue to support this project as it moves toward implementation over the next 2 years.

Mr. President, I recognize that fiscal restraints necessarily require us to limit the resources of many worthwhile Government programs. The Congress should, however, endorse expenditures, such as those for the PWBA contained in this bill, that will help the Government perform its functions more efficiently. The millions of workers and retirees dependent on the protections established by ERISA deserve full and efficient enforcement of that law, and I urge my colleagues to support efforts to attain that goal.

DEPENDENT CARE BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I want to briefly discuss with the chairman of the subcommittee, and manager of this bill, the funding level for the Dependent Care Block Grant Program, which provides critical funding for setting up before and after school child care programs. As the chairman knows, the Dependent Care, or Latchkey Program, received a $5 million appropriation for fiscal year 1986, which was reduced by approximately $300,000 as a result of the Gramm-Rudman sequester which went into effect on March 1, 1986. The current bill, before us today, restores the full $5 million for this important new program which is just now getting under way.

As the Senator from Connecticut knows, $5 million was appropriated after the fiscal year had started, and was intended to provide partial year funding to get the program off the ground. The authorizing legislation, for which conference action has been completed, but which is not yet ratified by the House and Senate, provides for $20 million for the Dependent Care Program. It would be my hope that the chairman of the subcommittee, in his negotiations with the House in conference on this appropriations bill, will do his utmost to provide as much funding up to the full authorization level of $20 million as possible. Because the authorizing legislation was not adopted, the House differed action on this item.

In addition to providing the opportunity for schools and other community-based organizations to set up before and after school child care programs, these funds are also available to provide information and referral services for all dependent individuals including children, senior citizens and disabled persons.

Mr. WEICKER. The Senator from Michigan has my assurance that I will work with the House conferees to provide as much funding as possible, under the authorizing ceiling and within the constraints of the budget. As the Senator knows, this is a program I support. I appreciate his interest in this matter.

STATE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND EMPLOYMENT SERVICE OPERATIONS FUNDING INCLUDED IN H.R. 5233

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am deeply concerned over the level of funding for unemployment service operations in the Labor, HHS, Education and Related Agencies Appropriations bill. As approved by the committee, unemployment trust fund expenditures for the unemployment insurance service would be limited to approximately $1.6 billion in fiscal year 1987. This is over $144 million less than the administration's request. While the committee's recommendation will provide for approximately 39,200 State staff-years of work, this is 2,980 staff-years below 1986 levels and approximately 4,500 less than the administration request and House allowance.

In my home State of Washington, significant reductions in funding for State unemployment insurance services have led to dramatic cutbacks in staff and services. Last year, Washington lost $6 million in Federal support for this program. The Washington Employment Security Department recently announced that due in part to these reductions, it was closing an unemployment office in downtown Seattle. The loss of this office will complicate the job search of unemployed citizens in the Seattle area. Without the additional funding requested by the administration, Washington's Employment Security Department may have to close up to 3 other local unemployment offices around the State and could lose between 130 and 240 staff positions.

Mr. President, I would ask the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, HHS, Education and Related Agencies, Senator WEICKER, whether the committee considered the effects the recommended level of funding would have on unemployment services.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the senior Senator from Washington. I can assure him that the committee has, and will continue, to examine carefully the way funding for unemployment services affects Americans looking for work. The committee has taken action to limit the impact that the recommended level of funding will have on State programs.

We have acted to restore part of the funding in this program by accepting the Metzenbaum amendment. This amendment will transfer an additional $33 million into the claims processing activity.

I can assure the Senator from Washington that I will carefully consider the higher level of funding approved by the House of Representatives when H.R. 5233 goes to conference. Obviously, the funding level for this program is an issue we will have to resolve in conference, and I appreciate my colleague's bringing his concerns to my attention.

Mr. GORTON. I thank my colleague from Connecticut, and I appreciate his attention to this important issue.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee added $3.7 million to the administration's budget request for the Department of Labor, and directed that the money be used to hire 90 additional full-time mine inspectors within the Mine Safety and Health Administration [MSHA]. This increase represents a responsible effort to address a serious problem that threatens the health and safety of our Nation's miners.

Since the Reagan administration took office in 1981, MSHA has cut the number of field inspectors by 25 percent. As a result of this drastic reduction, MSHA has violated applicable provisions of Federal law by failing to complete thousands of mandatory mine inspections every year since 1983. In addition, many of our Nation's smaller coal mines are uninspected or underinspected disasters waiting to happen.

I know that the Senator has repeatedly expressed concern about the mine inspector issue. During the fiscal year 1986 appropriations process, you agreed to my floor amendment adding money for the hiring of 90 new inspectors. When MSHA defied the express intent of Congress by using that additional money to absorb Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts, I indicated a desire to address the issue as part of the supplemental appropriations bill. At your request, I did not act at that time, and we agreed to work together to see that the problem was resolved in the fiscal year 1987 appropriation.

The committee report is explicit about the need to use the additional $3.7 million to hire mine inspectors. The report directs that most of the hiring be done on or before January 31, 1987, and indicates the committee's expectation that the new inspectors will be assigned to mines or classes of mines that have a higher probability of fatality or serious injury.

In recent weeks, the Secretary of Labor has expressed his belief that the 90 new mine inspectors can be hired without expending the additional $3.7 million. In light of our past experience in this area, I was skeptical as to how this could be accomplished. At my request, the Secretary has spelled out this proposal in detail. He plans to hire 90 inspectors, in addition to the administration's projected levels for fiscal year 1987, while meeting the related concerns set forth in the committee report.

The Secretary's proposal is contained in a letter dated September 9, 1986, which I submit for the RECORD. In summary, the Secretary intends to reinstate former inspectors who voluntarily left the agency, and to pursue an aggressive and expedited new hire plan. This new hire plan will take advantage of existing vacancies in other areas of MSHA. Secretary Brock has stated that he anticipates the majority of the 90 inspectors will be on board by January 31, 1987—as the committee directed they should be—and that this will be a top priority for MSHA. The Secretary further assures me that if there are any mandated budget cuts during fiscal year 1987, they will not have a disproportionate effect on the mine inspector effort. Finally, the Secretary makes clear that the inspectors will be assigned to those mines or classes of mines that have a higher probability of fatality or serious injury.

I believe this proposal by the Secretary meets the goals set forth by the committee with respect to mine inspectors. I share those goals; my intention is to restore the number of mine inspectors to a reasonable level. If we can achieve that end without the expenditure of additional Federal funds, I for one would be satisfied.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator. I appreciate the Senator's leadership on this issue over the past year, and willingness at this time to seek a resolution that saves money as well as preserving the health and safety of miners. The Secretary's proposed solution in my view may be an appropriate way for us to resolve this issue in conference with the House of Representatives. However, for the time being, I believe most of the funding for new inspectors should be kept in the bill, and the report language approved by the Appropriations Committee should be retained.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Once again, I appreciate the tremendous assistance you have provided in this area. I am more than willing to continue our efforts to satisfactorily resolve this issue. I concur in the response you have set forth, and I share your belief that the Secretary's letter may well form the appropriate basis for a resolution in conference.

The letter follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
SECRETARY OF LABOR,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1986.

Hon. HOWARD METZENBAUM,
U.S. Senate
Washington, DC.

DEAR HOWARD: As you know, the Senate Appropriations Committee has included in its report an increase of $3.7 million to provide for 90 additional mine inspectors over the President's request. I believe that the Committee's goal of increasing the Mine Safety and Health Administration's (MSHA's) enforcement staff can be accomplished within the President's fiscal year 1987 budget request.

The fiscal year 1987 budget request includes an increase of 81 full time equivalent positions over the fiscal year 1986 sequestration level. With MSHA currently under the proposed ceiling by 173, there will be 84 vacant inspector positions and 89 vacant other positions for fiscal year 1987 within the President's request. These positions allow MSHA the flexibility to immediately begin to increase the inspector force to meet the Committee's goal, while allowing hiring as needed to fill key openings in other areas. I propose to accomplish the Committee's goal of an increased inspector force as follows.

First, we intend to reinstate former mine inspectors who voluntarily left their positions. Our preliminary analysis indicates that there could be as many as 55 former coal and 10 former metal-non-metal inspectors interested in returning to the MSHA inspectorate ranks. These applicants must pass the required physical and, of course, location requirements must be considered. However, the inspectors reinstated will be fully productive after only minimal retraining.

Second, MSHA is beginning an aggressive and expedited new hire plan. The register for applicants will be open during the month of September, with a significant number of applicants expected. The majority of new inspectors will be hired through this process. These newly hired inspectors will become fully productive after about two years of training and apprenticeship.

Third, a reorganization plan for the Metal and Non-Metal organization has been initiated which could create between 23 and 48 new inspector positions in a short time period. These positions will be created by two methods. In most cases, certain administrative positions will be reclassified as inspector positions as they become vacant. In some limited cases, existing personnel who were formerly inspectors will be reassigned to inspector positions. A similar reorganization is planned for the Coal Mine Safety and Health organization. The reorganization is a longer-term process due to complex personnel issues involved. In order to minimize any impact on existing employees, the reorganizations will be accomplished largely through attrition, the rate of which is uncertain. Therefore it is difficult to predict exactly how many new inspector positions will be open under these plans in fiscal year 1987. MSHA expects to continue those functions such as dust measurement and roof control plan approval with no adverse impact attributable to the conversions and transfers mentioned herein.

The net result accomplished through the three methods outlined above will be to fill approximately 84 inspector positions to reach fiscal year 1987 planned levels plus 90 additional inspectors to achieve the goal of the Committee. As stated in the Committee's fiscal year 1987 appropriation report, the Department of Labor anticipates that these additional 90 inspectors will be assigned to those mines or classes of mines that have a higher probability of fatality or serious injury. I anticipate that about 130 of the new inspectors will be hired by January 31, 1987 and MSHA will make that target a top priority. Although I know you are aware of the possibility of mandated budget cuts for fiscal year 1987, such cuts will not have a disproportionate effect on mine inspector positions.

I know that you share my concern over the budget deficits faced by this country. For that reason, I am pleased that this proposal accomplishes the Committee's goal of increasing MSHA's inspector force, but does so without increased funding.

Thank you for your continuing interest in the safety and health of the nation's miners.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

AIDS EDUCATION FOR HEALTH PROFESSIONALS

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The committee has provided $355.4 million for research and other activities relating to treatment and prevention of acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS]. The rapid spread of this deadly disease can be truly called an epidemic. Much valuable work in the fight against AIDS will go forward with the funding provided in this bill.

One such activity is the education of health professionals. Because they are in the frontlines, dealing every day with AIDS patients and people who are concerned about the disease, it is essential that health workers have the best possible information.

This appropriation bill includes funds for the dissemination of information on AIDS to professional, technical and support personnel in the health field. The Centers for Disease Control generally takes the lead in information dissemination, with other agencies such as the Health Resources and Services Administration, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA], and the National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases [NIAID] taking a secondary role. I understand that CDC has performed its AIDS education function by disseminating information to State health agencies which are expected to take the responsibility for timely communication with health professionals.

I would like to ask the chairman if he thinks that the effort to educate health professionals should be strengthened.

Mr. WEICKER. I would like to thank the Senator from New Jersey for his interest in this question. Research on the causes, prevention, and treatment of AIDS is essential. But, we must not forget the importance of getting new and updated information to health workers as quickly as possible. I believe that a timely flow of current information on AIDS research and developments in the field is vital to the success of the effort against this disease and more should be done.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. One of the best ways to improve this effort would be to make use of the most up-to-date communications technology. I believe the chairman is familiar with the Model Information Dissemination Program begun by the NIAID. I would like to know if the chairman would agree that this NIAID Program should be expanded in fiscal year 1987.

Mr. WEICKER. I agree that the NIAID effort should be continued. The funds provided in this bill are adequate for this purpose and the agency should proceed with an expanded program.

THE IMPACT AID PROGRAM

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, there has been some confusion concerning the action taken by the full Senate Appropriations Committee with respect to fiscal year 1987 funding for the Impact Aid Program. The Subcommittee on Labor-HHS, Education and Related Agencies, chaired by the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut, approved an increase in funds for both category "A" payments and construction assistance, agreeing to continue to fund category "B" payments at the fiscal year 1986 presequestration level. The subcommittee recommendation exceeded the House-passed total for impact aid by $15 million.

The chairman and ranking minority member of the subcommittee subsequently asked the full committee to approve a reduction in category "B" of $65 million, along with reductions in a couple of other programs, in order to meet the lower outlay numbers developed by the Budget Committee the evening prior to the full committee markup. Since impact aid is current-year funded, unlike most other education programs, the outlay savings are immediate.

This action does not signify in any way a lack of commitment to our Nation's federally impacted schools. Rather, it is my understanding that the chairman will work with the House conferees, as he has so diligently in the past, to bring about the best possible result.

Mr. WEICKER. The Senator from South Dakota is correct in his characterization of the reduction in funds for category "B" children. I expect the House conferees to make a strong argument for the higher figure for "B" payments just as I intend to insist upon the $20 million increase—over the fiscal year 1986 presequestration level—we have recommended in category "A" payments.

Mr. ABDNOR. I thank the able chairman for his clarification and commend him for the tremendous effort he has put forth each and every year he has chaired this subcommittee. It is no small task to come up with a bill that strikes the appropriate balance in all the vital programs under his jurisdiction; yet, the chairman demonstrates time and again his ability to do so.

IMPACT AID—PART B

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I join with my good friend from South

Dakota in calling for a careful look at the appropriation for impact aid part B. Impact aid is not a supplemental program that merely provides nice-to-have services. This program, instead, provides school systems with reimbursement for the loss of tax revenue associated with servicing federally connected children. In my home State of Washington, school districts have been able to provide the children of the men and women in the armed services with a quality education through the Impact Aid Program. Similarly, school districts educating Indian children have relied on Impact Aid reimbursement in providing quality services to these children.

I hope the conference committee closely examines the Impact Aid issue. I urge the committee to adopt the House position on the part B program, and I thank Senator WEICKER for his comments.

FINANCIAL AID VERIFICATION REGULATIONS

Mr. EVANS. I would like to raise an issue of concern that has been brought to my attention by a number of my constituents regarding the delays they have experienced this year in the processing and disbursement of student aid dollars to their children who are enrolled in postsecondary education. In an effort to determine the cause of these delays, I have discussed the matter with financial aid administrators and others in our State who are directly involved in the actual administration and delivery of these funds to students. I am told the delays are the result of new regulations adopted by the Education Department and imposed on postsecondary schools on March 14 of this year.

These regulations deal with required institutional verification of the accuracy of data submitted on the student aid application. While I recognize the importance of verifying the accuracy of information, it is clear that the timing and the complexity of the regulations have created difficulties for schools, students, and their parents. The regulations were issued on March 14 for the 1986 award year, but most institutions begin to process financial aid applications in January. Guidelines and training sessions were first available in mid-April, before many of the critical pieces had been worked out. Updates and modifications have continued to arrive throughout the summer. These new regulations have required institutions to retroactively collect a substantial amount of supporting documentation and reconfirm eligibility.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I share the sentiments of my colleague from Washington. Small colleges throughout Washington State have told me of the terrible hardships associated with complying with these new verification requirements. These hardships have touched not only the institutions trying to comply with these new rules, but also the current and prospective students and their families who must provide verification data.

Those struggling to meet the requirements set down by the Department of Education have no quarrel over the verification of data items. The concern lies with the burdensome verification process chosen by the Department of Education, and the timing involved in promulgating the new rules. The regulation was published in March 1986, and was to become effective July 1, 1986. This is inadequate time to absorb the new rules, much less implement effective policies and procedures to begin the verification process.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, the institutions' greatest fear at this time is that they may be held responsible for unintended errors resulting from the confusion surrounding the new verification requirements. I note that the House labor appropriations bill includes report language directing the Department to delay implementation and enforcement of the March 14 regulations. The House asks that the March 14 regulations not be considered in effect during the 1986 award year, and that institutions not be held responsible for errors made in the verification process in 1986. I would ask the chairman of the Labor Appropriations Subcommittee whether the conference report might include language directing the Department to not hold institutions financially liable for verification errors during the 1986 award year, except, of course, where there was blatant disregard of the verification regulations?

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, while we have chosen not to adopt legislative language in our fiscal year 1987 appropriations bill to address this issue, believing that it should be addressed in the Higher Education Act conference, we are aware there is concern over the confusion surrounding the Department's verification regulations.

We expect that the Department will continue to evaluate the verification requirements, and will indicate how they intend to treat unintentional errors by institutions. When we go to conference on this appropriations bill, we will consider the need to develop conference report language that ensures that institutions are not held liable for unintended errors in the verification process during 1986.

Mr. EVANS. I thank my colleague from Connecticut and appreciate his concern in this matter.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am aware of the strong support which the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator WEICKER, has given to the Maternal and Child Health Program. For this reason, I would ask my friend from Connecticut about the prospects for increasing this program's appropriation by $75 million—the amount necessary to bring it to the level agreed in the budget resolution.

When the Senate considered the budget resolution, I proposed a $200 million child health initiative, including the increase for Maternal and Child Health Block Grant Program. The initiative was included in the budget, and I am eager to see that these funds are appropriated.

I am aware that the current authorization for this program is $478 million—$75 million below the budget resolution level. However, the Senate Finance Committee today increased that authorization to $553 million. The House has made it clear that it also supports an increased authorization level.

I had intended to offer an amendment to this bill, appropriating the $75 million for maternal and child health. However, I have been informed by the chairman that the continuing resolution may provide a more appropriate vehicle for this action. I certainly value the Senator's advice, particularly given his long history of support for Federal efforts to provide health care for children and mothers in need.

Mr. President, it is a scandal that today there are over 13 million American children living below the poverty line; that one-third of this Nation's children lack adequate health insurance; that over half of all black preschool children are not immunized against childhood diseases; that 1 in 10 poor children under the age of 2 do not see a physician even once during an entire year.

Ours is a nation where technological genius abounds, yet ours is also a nation where infant mortality rates for black infants in Cleveland, Chicago, and Detroit exceed those in Cuba, Jamaica, and Puerto Rico.

The gap between black and white infant mortality has increased to the worst point in over 40 years. Obviously, Mr. President, we have a problem providing for the basic health needs of millions of poor children. Yet we have a program with a proven track record of success in promoting the health of these children and their mothers. The problem is this program's funding level has fallen in real terms—over 20 percent since 1981.

I refer to the Maternal and Child Health Program which provides critical maternal and child health services ranging from basic prenatal care, checkups, and immunizations to the most sophisticated types of medical care for high-risk newborns and children suffering from handicapping conditions and crippling diseases.

The Maternal and Child Health Program saves anywhere from $3 to $11 million in the costs of medical care after birth and of institutional care for some of the babies who would have been born handicapped.

Clearly, an investment in the health of pregnant women and their children is an investment in the future. It's extremely cost effective. Mr. President, it just makes sense.

I am hopeful that the chairman will be able to give us some assurances regarding an increased funding level for this critical program.

Mr. WEICKER. I want to commend my colleague for his concern regarding this invaluable program, and want to assure him that only the authorization ceiling—now set at $478 million—precluded the committee from including additional funds provided in the budget resolution for this program. Also, I want to assure my colleague that I will most certainly do everything possible to increase the appropriation, which is now set at the authorized ceiling of $478 million, should the authorization ceiling be increased.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I rise to draw the attention of my colleagues to a program which falls under the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education appropriations bill, but which unfortunately has received no funding in the Senate version.

The Leadership in Educational Administration Development Act [LEAD], title IX of Public Law 98-558, was created to meet the Nation's urgent need for better administrative leadership in elementary and secondary schools. While teachers from the core of a school's education team, it is the principal who gives overall direction and purpose to the school. In order for the current wave of educational reform to be successful, we need school administrators who have both educational vision and the practical managerial skills necessary to effectively pursue that vision.

The LEAD Program will establish in every State an institute where current and potential school administrators would work to acquire the leadership and managerial skills that their jobs demand. LEAD centers would draw on expertise in business, academia, the schools, and Government agencies to prepare programs that will develop administrative excellence.

This exciting program has been enthusiastically anticipated in the States, and received in fiscal year 1986 its first appropriation of $7.5 million. Although authorized at $20 million, this year's appropriation was enough to get the program rolling. Indeed, proposed regulations prepared by the Department of Education are expected to be published any day, and State and local education agencies are already working on program proposals.

In light of the great momentum of the LEAD effort, I was disappointed to see that the Labor-HHS/Education appropriations bill contains no LEAD funding for fiscal year 1987. In speaking with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] however, I have learned that the money was simply unavailable at markup time, due to budget constraints. As the committee report points out, the House appropriation maintains the program at this year's post-Gramm-Rudman level of $7.177 million. The report language further indicates that the Senate supports this modest but worthwhile idea and will work to resolve the matter in conference with the House.

I am hopeful that Senator WEICKER and the other conferees will work in behalf of this important initiative in education reform by restoring funds for the LEAD Program. I thank the Senator for his efforts.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his comments, and appreciate his understanding of the fiscal constraints within which we are operating. The Senator and I have discussed this matter in the past several weeks, and I think I have made clear my support for the innovative approach of activities such as the LEAD Program. I assure Senator CHAFEE that we will do everything we can in conference to keep the program on track.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies, the senior Senator from Connecticut, Mr. WEICKER. Senator WEICKER and his staff have been sensitive to a number of concerns I have raised, and these concerns are reflected in report language adopted by the committee.

For some time I have been concerned about what might be called the human resources side of the farm crisis. The report accompanying H.R. 5233 contains language encouraging the Secretary of Health and Human Services to equally distribute the community services block grant program's community economic development discretionary funds equally between urban and rural areas. The report also encourages the Secretary of HHS to coordinate activities of the Office of Community Services with other Federal departments in order to develop a comprehensive Federal-State rural intervention strategy.

The Appropriations Committee provided $1.2 million in the research account of the National Institute of Mental Health for the purpose of establishing four State demonstration projects with the goal of promoting the development of comprehensive community mental health, health, job training, employment, and related services and opportunities appropriate to rural Americans experiencing serious emotional problems as a result of the farm crisis.

The last item having to do with the human resources dimension of the farm crisis is language recommending that the Secretary of Labor use a portion of his discretionary Job Training Partnership Act funds to assist States to develop rural-based pilot programs and demonstration activities. The report also encourages the Secretary of Labor to work with the Departments of Health and Human Services, Education, ACTION, Agriculture, and Commerce to develop a comprehensive State-Federal approach for a rural intervention strategy. I might add that this language is consistent with language contained in the report that accompanied S. 2069, amending the Job Training Partnership Act.

Our Nation's policies and programs affecting the elderly are another longstanding concern of mine. Again, I would like to express my appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut for his sensitivity to my concerns on a number of issues in this area. The committee has required the Health Care Financing Administration to spend $1.2 million for respite care demonstration projects to develop innovative service programs for victims of Alzheimer's disease.

The committee has also provided $500,000 to the National Institute on Aging for the purpose of coordinating statistical policy on aging.

Earlier this year, I was successful in persuading the Budget Committee to put enough money into the function 500 account to fund Older Americans' Act programs at their fiscal 1986 levels. In response to requests from myself and Senators HEINZ, PRESSLER, GLENN, METZENBAUM, MATSUNAGA, D'AMATO, and HAWKINS, the Appropriations Committee has restored the funding levels of most of the Older American's Act programs to their presequestration 1986 funding levels. The Appropriations Committee has also provided increases over the presequestration 1986 levels for the congregate and home-delivered meals programs.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to clarify one point about the Labor/HHS appropriations bill. It is my understanding that this bill contains an increase of $8 million over last year's title X funding level for family planning programs. I also understand that $600,000 of that is to be used for the Utah demonstration project that is included in the title X reauthorization bill, S. 881. I wonder if the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee would comment.

Mr. WEICKER. Yes, the Senator from Utah is correct; $600,000 of the $8 million is intended for the Utah demonstration project when it is authorized. Of course, without the authorization that money would not go to the Utah demonstration project. While I have the Senator from Utah's attention I wonder if he will agree to work with me in an effort to have the title X reauthorization bill scheduled for floor action. I would like to mention that as chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, the Senator from Utah successfully marked up the reauthorization bill in December of 1985. The committee report on the bill has been filed for 4 months now and I am eager to have the full Senate consider this bill. I might also point out that the Labor and Human Resources Committee unanimously endorsed S. 881, the 4-year reauthorization bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will indeed work with the Senator from Connecticut to encourage the majority leader to schedule S. 881 for floor action as soon as possible.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for H.R. 5233, the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and related agencies appropriation bill for fiscal year 1987. Budget constraints were so pressing that very painful decisions had to be made, and the chairman, Senator WEICKER, and the ranking member, Senator PROXMIRE, are to be commended for their leadership on this bill. They have reported a compromise measure in which they have tried to meet the needs of our neediest and most vulnerable citizens and at the same time provide for education, health, and training programs at a minimal level and in the most cost-effective way.

They were called on to address the huge public health crises of AIDS and drug abuse, and still provide funds for education of the disadvantaged and handicapped, prenatal care for poor mothers, immunizations for preschoolers, and biomedical research on cancer and Alzheimer's disease, to name a few things. There is not as much money in this bill as many of these problems deserve, but they have done an excellent job considering the severe budget constraints.

This bill provides funding for dozens of programs that offer great hope and promise to Americans. The Childhood Immunization Program provides hope for our Nation's children that they may thrive and be protected from infectious diseases that killed thousands of children in previous decades. It is easily the soundest investment, in terms of future dollars saved, that we could make in the health care area. The community health centers provide comprehensive primary and preventive care to millions of poor and medically underserved individuals, oftentimes elderly people, who otherwise might have no health care. The maternal and child health block grant guarantees prenatal care for indigent mothers so that their babies can at least get a healthy start in life.

This bill also offers the promise of education for the economically disadvantaged, for migrant students, and for the handicapped. It also provides job training through the Job Corps for thousands of young people who would otherwise be dismissed as untrainable and unemployable. This bill provides for programs that help Americans develop their abilities to the fullest.

I am pleased that the bill reported by the committee increases funding for several crucial children's health programs which have been of longstanding interest to both Betty and me. The funding recommended by the committee will help us prevent erosion in the delivery of basic health care services to infants and children and aid in the fight to ensure a healthy beginning for all our children.

I am particularly pleased by the committee recommendation that the Childhood Immunization Program be funded at $88.746 million, an increase of almost $32 million over the fiscal year 1986 funding level. The committee has responded to the rapid increase in vaccine prices with a big increase in grants for the purchase of vaccines. We also approved funding to implement the recommendation of the Centers for Disease Control Immunization Practices Advisory Committee that the haemophilus influenza type B vaccine be available to all 2-year-olds. H-flu is the leading cause of bacterial meningitis in the United States, and it will be a real step forward if we can immunize all our children against H-flu.

The committee also increased the preventive health block grant funding by almost $5 million over fiscal year 1986 levels, to $92.5 million. These grants give States funds for a wide range of preventive health activities. In my home State of Arkansas, the preventive health block grant funds activities include hypertension screening, health education, and immunizations. The Federal funds are vital to preventive health efforts and are an important supplement to funds appropriated by the State.

The committee also brought the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant Program to its authorized funding ceiling of $478 million. The fiscal year 1986 budget resolution provided an additional $75 million for the MCH block grant, and I hope that the Appropriations Committee will act on the budget recommendation after the authorizing committees raise the MCH spending levels.

As it has done in each of the last several years, the committee has wisely rejected the administration request that the Community Services Block Grant Program be eliminated. The committee recommended a modest increase for the block grant, which is used by community action agencies in my home State for weatherization, alcohol and drug abuse counseling, distribution of Federal surplus food, day care, Head Start, and a number of other activities. In Arkansas, the Federal funds that are made available through CSBG are matched many times over by local funds, volunteer services, and private funds.

I believe this bill is a solid one, especially in light of extreme budget constraints. There are differences between the House and Senate bills in several areas, including the Work Incentives Program and Impact Aid. I hope the conference committee can resolve these differences and provide for the continuation of WIN and Part B Impact Aid.

The programs funded by this measure are investments. They offer assurance to mothers that they will have healthy babies and hope for future generations that they may never suffer diseases whose cures today elude the scientists. The education programs will keep countless Americans off the unemployment or welfare rolls and help thousands realize their full potential in the workplace. The programs this measure funds will bring returns that will exceed our investment. We may not be able to measure all these returns in dollars and cents. But the satisfaction and contribution of men and women with job skills and the joy of families with healthy children are as real as the long-term monetary savings the measure guarantees. Healthy and well-educated citizens are the very basis of any Nation's defense. This measure says to the world that the greatest Nation on Earth cares about all its people and plans wisely for its future.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I have no further amendments at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments——

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF THE CRIME OF GENOCIDE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am introducing, at the request of the Department of Justice, a legislative proposal implementing the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

Earlier this year the Senate gave its advice and consent to the ratification of the Genocide Convention, subject to eight provisos in the form of two reservations, five understandings, and one declaration. Article V of the convention requires the parties to the convention to undertake the enactment of legislation to give effect to its provisions and to provide penalties for persons guilty of the crimes enumerated.

Under the declaration added by the Senate, the President will not deposit the instrument of ratification until after the implementing legislation referred to in article V has been enacted.

Mr. President, the administration believes that this legislation will appropriately implement the Genocide Convention and urges expeditious enactment.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the Department of Justice letter of transmittal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"50A. Genocide ..... 1091".

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, June 6, 1986.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: Enclosed for your consideration and appropriate reference is a legislative proposal implementing the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. The convention makes genocide a crime under international law. Article V of the Convention requires the contracting parties to undertake the enactment of legislation to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and to provide effective penalties for persons guilty of the crimes enumerated. We urge the Congress to take prompt action on this legislative proposal since the enactment of implementing legislation is a prerequisite to deposit by the United States of its instrument of ratification. Only with that act can the United States finally become a party to this important convention which symbolizes a commitment to human rights.

The Senate recently gave its advice and consent to the ratification of the genocide convention, subject to eight provisos in the form of two reservations, five understandings, and one declaration. 132 Cong. Rec. S1377-8 (daily ed. Feb. 19, 1986). The draft legislation implements the treaty as construed by the relevant provisos by making genocide a federal offense. Specifically, the treaty prohibits the commission of certain acts "with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such. . . ." Art. II. The acts specified are: killing members of the group, causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group, deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part, imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group, and forcibly transferring children of the group to another group. Art. II. The convention expressly applies not only to the crime of genocide, but also to conspiracy, direct and public incitement, and attempt to commit genocide, as well as complicity in the crime. Art. III.

The eight provisos adopted by the Senate are as follows:

RESERVATIONS

1. That with reference to Article IX of the Convention, before any dispute to which the United States is a party may be submitted to the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice under this article, the specific consent of the United States is required in each case.

2. That nothing in the Convention requires or authorizes legislation or other action by the United States of America prohibited by the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the United States.

UNDERSTANDINGS

1. That the term "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial, or religious group, as such" appearing in Article II means the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such by the acts specified in Article II.

2. That the term "mental harm" in Article II(b) means permanent impairment of mental faculties through drugs, torture or similar techniques.

3. That the pledge to grant extradition in accordance with a state's laws and treaties in force found in Article VII extends only to acts which are criminal under the laws of both the requesting and the requested state and nothing in Article VI affects the right of any state to bring to trial before its own tribunals any of its nationals for acts committed outside a state.

4. That acts in the course of armed conflicts committed without the specific intent required by Article II are not sufficient to constitute genocide as defined by this Convention.

5. That with regard to the reference to an international penal tribunal in Article VI of the Convention, the United States declares that it reserves the right to effect its participation in any such tribunal only by a treaty entered into specifically for that purpose with the advice and consent of the Senate.

DECLARATION

That the President will not deposit the instrument of ratification until after the implementing legislation referred to in Article V has been enacted.

The draft legislation adds a new chapter 50A to title 18, United States Code, and restates the offenses proscribed by the Convention as modified by the above provisos to the extent relevant. It also defines the terms "ethnic," "national," "racial," and "religious groups," as well as "children," "incite," and "substantial part." In addition, the proposal establishes United States jurisdiction over an offense if it is committed within the United States or if the alleged offender is a national of the United States. The proposal also provides that nothing in new chapter 50A shall be construed as precluding the application of State or local laws on the same subject or as creating any substantive or procedural right enforceable in a civil proceeding.

The draft legislation makes genocide or attempted genocide an offense punishable by a fine of $1,000,000 and imprisonment for not more than twenty years, and if death results, by either mandatory life imprisonment or a sentence of death, as well as a fine of $1,000,000. The Administration-supported death penalty bills, H.R. 343 and S. 239, would establish constitutionally required procedures for the implementation of the death penalty and would apply to genocide where death results, among other crimes. We recognize that without the enactment of such legislation the death penalty provided in the draft genocide legislation cannot be enforced. The draft genocide legislation also makes directly and publicly inciting another to commit genocide a crime punishable by a fine of $500,000 and imprisonment for five years.

Expeditious action on this proposal will enable the United States to join the many other nations which have become parties to the genocide convention.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that the enactment of this proposal would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BOLTON,
Assistant Attorney General.

By Mr. MATTINGLY:

S. 2805. A bill to provide for the imposition of the death penalty for certain continuing criminal enterprise drug offenses; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STRICTER PENALTIES UNDER THE CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would provide for stricter and more effective penalties under the Controlled Substances Act. Specifically, the measure would allow for the death penalty when an individual is convicted of a continuing criminal enterprise offense where intentional death results.

Congress has recognized that the continuing criminal enterprise offense is probably the most serious narcotics offense and has responded by enacting a mandatory minimum sentence of 10 years for the first offense. Those subject to conviction under this offense are most often the leaders of major narcotics organizations who derive substantial income for their narcotics enterprise and who act in a supervisory capacity and in concert with five or more other persons. Their activities put the public at grave risk. And let us make no mistake about it. They are fully aware of the consequences of actions. They act deliberately, destroying the lives of our citizens, preying upon innocent children, and undermining our national security. With wanton disregard for their fellow man, these reprehensible criminals place their own selfish profit motives above the fundamental rights of others. I believe it is fitting to target those kingpins who kill during the course of their activities for even stricter penalties.

Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I have supported the Federal death penalty as appropriate for the most heinous and serious Federal crimes, and I voted in favor of comprehensive Federal death penalty legislation when it was considered by the Senate in the previous Congress. As I said a moment ago, without question, the cases which this legislation targets are appropriate for such a penalty. They are heinous crimes. And I would hope that the majority of this body, who supported death penalty measures in the past, will support this legislation as well.

This measure is similar to legislation pending in the House of Representatives and follows constitutional requirements carefully. Again, let me stress that this measure is intended to single out the most serious offenders. Cases in which the death penalty might result would be the murder of an undercover drug officer or a law enforcement agent during a drug transaction. Law enforcement officials daily put their lives on the line in order to protect the public. Tragically, some pay the ultimate price. As a society we cannot tolerate this and we in Congress have a responsibility to do all in our power to prevent it. The enactment of tough criminal sanctions such as this, in my view, are an appropriate exercise of that responsibility. Serious criminal violations require serious penalties. The serious nature of the drug problem facing our Nation calls for serious actions.

The American people recognize the gravity of the drug problem in this country and the real threat it lays at their doorstep. Many have come to this knowledge through tragic and grievous experiences like the loss of a loved one. The American people are relying upon us to act to put an end to such tragedy. In the past few weeks, numerous of my fellow Georgians have discussed the drug scourge with me, appealing to us in Congress to give priority to the issue. When I have asked what measures they believe would be effective and what initiatives they would support, they have responded that we need to get tough with drug peddlers through stricter criminal statutes and penalties.

In other words, Mr. President, as the American people understand, those who destroy lives and undermine the safety of the citizenry must be punished. These criminals must know beforehand that it is their very lives which will be in jeopardy should they intentionally cause the death of others. I believe this measure will accomplish these goals, and I again urge the support of my colleagues.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. GLENN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 2806. A bill to amend title 11, United States Code, to clarify the current meaning of section 1113 relating to the rejection of collective bargaining agreements by debtors in bankruptcy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REJECTION OF COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, today I am introducing a measure that will clarify the current meaning of existing bankruptcy laws regarding the modification or rejection of collective-bargaining agreements.

On July 30 the Senate passed a measure that I authored to prevent the LTV Corp., from terminating retiree health benefits. That evening LTV requested the bankruptcy court to reinstate health benefits, and the court issued an order permitting benefits to be paid for a period of 6 months. The bank creditors have appealed that decision.

Mr. President, while I commend the court's action, I believe that current law prohibits the unilateral termination of health benefits to retirees.

In 1984, we enacted the bankruptcy reform amentments to protect the collective bargaining process. The termination of health insurance benefit coverage for LTV retirees was a clear violation of that 1984 law.

The measure that I am introducing today clarifies the meaning of current law. I hope that it will prevent companies in bankruptcy and their creditors from attempting to unilaterally terminate retiree health, life, and welfare benefits.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2806

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1113(f) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(including any provision relating to benefits for retired former employees)" after "provisions" the first place it appears.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective as of the effective date of section 1113 of title 11, United States Code, added by the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984, and shall be effective as if enacted in such Act.●

By Mr. GORE (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. MITCHELL):

S. 2808. A bill to amend title XI of the Social Security Act to require hospitals participating in the Medicare and Medicaid programs to establish protocols for organ procurement, to establish standards for organ procurement agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

HOSPITAL PROTOCOLS FOR ORGAN PROCUREMENT

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce with Senator HEINZ, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator MITCHELL important new organ transplant legislation. The bill will further strengthen the ability of the Nation's health care system to provide organ transplants.

It has been 4 years since Charles Fiske was forced to take to the Nation's airways to plead for a liver to save his daughter Jamie. It has been 2 years since Congress passed the National Organ Transplant Act of 1984 to save the lives of thousands of patients like Jamie.

We have seen much progress in that time. Transplant technology has blossomed, and the number of successful transplants has increased dramatically. In 2 years, we have managed to raise the number of kidney transplants from 6,112 to around 8,000, the number of heart transplants from 172 to 719, and the number of liver transplants from 164 to 602.

But as anyone who has seen the faces of Christina Wilson, Baby Jesse, Baby Calvin, or Alex Girard, on TV in recent months can tell, the problem has not been solved—in large part because the administration has refused to carry out the law. As the administration dragged its feet over key parts of the transplant law designed to increase organ donation and coordinate distribution, the list of people waiting for an organ to become available for transplant grew faster than ever. Many lives and many dollars have been lost while the administration waits to make up its mind.

We are introducing legislation today to meet the long neglected needs of transplant patients in this country. The bill builds on the foundation we laid down when we passed the National Organ Transplant Act. It follows the recommendations of two recent reports from the Department of Health and Human Services—the final report of the Task Force on Organ Transplantation required by the transplant act, and a report from the Office of the Inspector General on foreign nationals who come to this country to receive a transplant.

The bill does three things. First, it will carry out the task force's recommendation that organ procurement agencies be certified. The bill will require the agencies to meet Federal standards, and force them to work under the national network. Not only will the legislation bring the vast array of 110 procurement agencies under control, but in the long run, it will help the agencies to make more organs available to the patients who most need them.

Second, it will require that all hospitals performing transplants abide by the rules of the national network. This is especially important when it comes to how organs are shared. Our bill will make certain that when an organ is retrieved it will be allocated by a priority system based on medical need and not on who has the cutest face or the most money.

Finally, the bill requires every hospital that receives Medicare or Medicaid dollars to have a written protocol insuring that families are informed of the option of organ donation and that a certified organ procurement agency is notified. This is similar to the so-called required request laws that many States have passed.

Less than a quarter of the 20,000 potential organ donors each year actually become donors. Surveys have shown repeatedly that while most families would be willing to give permission for a donation to take place, many don't get the opportunity because doctors don't ask. It is equally tragic to see a donated organ go to waste because of the hospital and the organ procurement agency get their signals crossed. Our bill will avert those problems.

For the most part, transplants are living up to their promise. But if we have come a long way, we still have far to go. This bill will extend the miracle of transplants to thousands of Americans who cannot live without it.

Mr. President, I urge support for this bill.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator GORE and Senator HEINZ, in introducing this legislation. The measures we are proposing today will bring hope to thousands of Americans who must have organ transplants in order to live.

This legislation continues the process begun with the passage of the National Organ Transplant Act, which was signed into law on October 19, 1984. The National Organ Transplant Act mandated Federal funding for a national organ transplant and procurement network to assure that people needing an organ transplant in any area of the country would have full access to the national organ supply. It established a system of grants to organ procurement agencies to help them increase the supply of organs available for donation. And it established a national task force on organ procurement which was charged with examining all aspects of our national organ procurement system and recommending modifications.

The problems addressed by the task force were multifaceted. Most important was the lack of an adequate supply of organs for those needing transplants in order to live. All Americans are familiar with the heart-rending cases of parents desperately appealing for a donated organ to save the life of a dying son or daughter. Indeed, it was the case of Massachusetts child, Jamie Fiske, which first brought the organ transplant problem to national attention.

The statistics on the mismatch between the need for transplanted organs, the potential supply of organs, and the number of organs actually donated, are sobering. There are an estimated 26,000 potential organ donors every year, but only about 5,000 actually donate organs. At any one time there are approximately 10,000 people waiting for organ donations, and in excess of 40,000 people could benefit from kidney transplants alone if an adequate supply of organs were available.

Just as there is an inadequate supply of organs available, there are wide variations in the quality of organ procurement organizations, inadequate links between hospitals and organ procurement organizations, failure of some transplant programs to meet acceptable standards of quality, and no clear, generally accepted standards for prioritizing potential transplant recipients.

The task force has completed its work and has done a commendable job of recommending steps that should be taken to address each of these problems. The legislation we are proposing today implements many of the task force's most important recommendations.

Our legislation will increase the supply of organs by establishing required hospital protocols for organ procurement. These protocols will assure that all families of potential organ donors are made aware of the options of organ donation and that organ procurement agencies be notified of potential donors. The American people, I believe, understand the importance of organ donations and are willing to give this precious gift of life. Too often, however, they are denied the opportunity to give this gift because they are not made aware of the opportunity for donation at the right time. This requirement will assure that no life-giving organ is wasted because a potential donor or his family is not asked whether or not they want to make a donation.

This legislation will address the issue of the quality of organ transplant centers, ensure cooperation between centers, and assure access to organs on a priority basis by requiring all hospitals performing transplants to conform to guidelines and meet standards established by the national organ transplant network as a condition for receiving Medicare funding.

The quality of organ procurement organizations and their full participation in the national organ procurement and distribution system will be assured by requiring periodic certification and recertification every 2 years by the Secretary of HHS as a condition of Medicare participation.

Enactment of these measures will go a long way toward bringing us closer to the day when no child will die, no parent wil grieve, and no adult will be denied the opportunity for a full and productive life because a medically safe and effective organ transplant was not performed.

There are some other important legislative steps which are not included in this legislation. Legislation has been reported out by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and the House Energy and Commerce Committee which will fund the expensive immunosuppressive drugs necessary to prevent organ rejection once a transplant has been performed. Prompt enactment of this legislation is essential. In addition, I believe it is essential that a permanent Organ Transplant Advisory Board be established to monitor and assist in the implementation of the task force report. We also need to establish a national public education campaign to encourage organ donation. I intend to introduce legislation shortly that will accomplish this objective.

Just as important as passage of new legislation is implementation of the laws already on the books. Today, nearly 2 years after the signing of the National Organ Transplantation Act of 1984, there is no national organ matching network in existence. The administration has proposed, unsuccessfully, to rescind the moneys appropriated for grants to organ procurement agencies to increase the supply of organs and has indicated that it will not request money for this program in future budgets.

Mr. President, I urge prompt passage of the legislation we are proposing today and I call on the administration to show compassion and concern for individuals who need organ transplants in order to live by support and implementation of the legislation already on the books.●

By Mrs. HAWKINS (for herself and Mr. HELMS):

S. 2809. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to expand drug and other law enforcement programs on the National Forest System, to clarify certain law enforcement authorities of the Forest Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FOREST SERVICE DRUG LEGISLATION

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to enable the U.S. Forest Service to reclaim our national forests from the marijuana traffickers.

The Forest Service estimates that almost 1 million acres of our national forests have been abandoned as unmanageable because of the danger posed by criminal marijuana cultivation. The Forest Service at present has neither the resources nor the authority to extend its sway of management in these areas. This is another flagrant example of our Government being outgunned, outspent, and outmanned by the drug traffickers.

My bill will establish the necessary foundation for opening another front in the war on drugs in our national forests and should complement the President's call to get tough on the criminal element involved in supplying illegal drugs to our society.

This legislation is vital and necessary to combat the problem of marijuana cultivation in U.S. forests. I ask my colleagues to consider the following information supplied by the Forest Service. In excess of 20 percent of the cannabis cultivated within the United States is estimated to be grown on National Forest System land. Apparently, domestic growers of marijuana are moving their illegal activities into the national forests at an increasing rate. Although this can be attributed to the success of the Federal interdiction program and asset seizure enforcement, it is clearly an intolerable situation. Further evidence that the war on drugs is forcing marijuana growers to more extreme measures is the proliferation of often life-threatening boobytraps that the growers use to protect their hidden plants. These boobytraps include hand grenades detonated by trip wires, shotguns rigged to fire at chest level, and pipe bombs set to explode should an intruder approach an illegal garden in the forest. This bill will give the Forest Service appropriate authority to address this situation.

This legislation has been developed by my office, working in conjunction with the Senate Agriculture Committee staff. We have also relied closely on advice supplied at my request from the U.S. Forest Service.

My bill would empower the Forest Service, through the Secretary of Agriculture, to do the following:

Grant the Secretary of Agriculture authority to investigate, make arrests, and take other actions as necessary to locate, control, or eradicate the planting, cultivating, harvesting, manufacturing, transporting, purchasing, or selling of marijuana or any other controlled substance on National Forest System lands. In order to accomplish these activities, the Secretary would be given:

Authority to designate employees to carry firearms;

Authority to purchase necessary firearms and equipment;

Authority to designate employees to execute warrants, subpoenas, and other processes for arrest, search, and seizure, or production of evidence;

Authority to pursue suspects beyond National Forest System boundaries.

Permit the Secretary to allow the use of the resources, facilities, and equipment of the Secretary in supporting and cooperating in other law enforcement activities on other Federal and non-Federal lands, in cooperation with the appropriate Federal, State, and local authorities.

Permits the Secretary to coordinate activities under these provisions with Federal land management agencies and Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

Authorize appropriations of $20 million to carry out these activities.

Permit the transfer of receipts from National Forest System activities to fund activities under these provisions.

This legislation also amends the Controlled Substances Act in two ways. It provides for a maximum penalty of 5 years and a fine of $5,000 for any person found to be in possession of a firearm while manufacturing a controlled substance on Federal lands. Further, the bill provides for a maximum penalty of 10 years and a fine of $10,000 for any person who assembles, maintains, places, or causes a booby trap to be placed on Federal property.

It is time to protect our rights, as well as our assets, in the national forests from the marijuana growers. And reclaim some of our children in the process. I hope my colleagues will join me enthusiastically in this worthy cause.●

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the legislation introduced today by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS]. This legislation directly addresses the serious problem of marijuana production on our national forest lands.

Mr. President, the cultivation of marijuana in the National Forest System has mushroomed into a problem of tremendous proportions. The U.S. Forest Service estimates that our national forests account for 20 to 30 percent of all domestic marijuana production, a substantial jump from 5 percent in 1980.

Obviously, the U.S. Government cannot continue to be the unwitting accomplice to this burgeoning marijuana cultivation. These marijuana operations not only threaten the health and moral fiber of our society by making this dangerous drug available to our children, but more directly they often seriously imperil the safety of legitimate users of our public lands, who unknowingly stumble across marijuana plantations.

These illicit growing operations adversely affect the management of 785,000 acres of our national forests. More revealing, is the fact that during 1984–85 shootings, assaults, and injuries from booby traps were reported in all Southeastern States. During 1985, 21 States reported violent incidents affecting the general public or law enforcement officials.

The criminals who tend these marijuana plantations are vicious characters, who will deploy a variety of extremely dangerous booby traps to protect their crops. These dangerous devices include pipe bombs, punji pits, shotgun shell booby traps, guard dogs, and fishing hooks dangling at eye level from monofiliment lines.

People are not the only ones to suffer from these marijuana plantations. Deer are particularly vulnerable to the marijuana grower, as they like to eat the young plants. It is estimated that the illegal killing of deer in northern California equals or exceeds the total legal take by hunters. These criminals also use large amounts of herbicides and rodenticides which have a severe impact on all wildlife in the surrounding area.

Mr. President, it is obvious we must make our public lands less attractive to the marijuana grower and this bill will certainly meet that goal. Furthermore, this legislation specifically addresses the disturbing problem of the low ratio between the detection and confiscation of marijuana plants, and the apprehension of the growers. Last year, despite a record level of marijuana confiscated from our national forests in North Carolina, only two arrests were made. I look forward to correcting this problem, as this legislation intends.●

By Mr. DOLE:

S.J. Res. 408. Joint resolution designating "American Physiologists Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMERICAN PHYSIOLOGISTS WEEK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I introduce today a joint resolution to designate the week of March 29, 1987, as "American Physiologists Week" in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the American Physiological Society.

Physiology, the study of the process of life and all living matter, is the taproot from which the basic knowledge is drawn for all biomedical and behavioral research. Both modern day as well as early day advances in science can be traced directly to this single source of knowledge.

The pathways leading to the treatment, cure, and prevention of disease begin with physiology and American physiologists have contributed greatly to the scientific advances that have enriched the health and longevity of both humans and animals.

American physiologists and the American Physiological Society will be saluted by renowned physiologists and Nobel Laureates from every continent at a scientific and educational assembly in Washington, DC, the week of March 29, 1987. I hope that you will join with me in sponsoring this resolution to give proper recognition and encouragement to those who have contributed so much to our well-being.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 408

Whereas 1987 marks the one-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the American Physiology Society;

Whereas physiology is the taproot for all of the life sciences;

Whereas early findings by physiologists resulted in the development of blood transfusions and modern anesthesia, eradication of many diseases, and the discovery of antibiotics;

Whereas physiology continues to be the fountainhead from which life science research enriches the health and longevity of humans and animals;

Whereas internationally renowned physiologists from every continent are coming to the District of Columbia to engage in scientific and educational dialogue with the American Physiological Society during its Centennial Week celebration of a century of progress in physiology: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning March 29, 1987, is designated as "American Physiologists Week." The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

SENATE RESOLUTION 488—CALLING FOR A NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY PLAN

Mr. BENTSEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

SENATE RESOLUTION 488

Whereas, the national security of the United States is directly related to the maintenance of secure and reliable supplies of petroleum and lubricants needed for national defense and economic growth;

Whereas, the only strategic commodity which has been embargoed and supplies withheld from the United States in recent years is petroleum;

Whereas, the collapse of domestic petroleum prices is reducing exploration and production, and increasing demand, causing foreign petroleum imports to rise dangerously to 40 percent of consumption in July from 27 percent in 1985;

Whereas, the surge in imports has occurred primarily from OPEC nations which are supplying 43 percent of all United States imports;

Whereas, the President's National Security adviser has acknowledged that such rising American and free world dependence on OPEC oil supplies threatens United States national security;

Now therefore be it Resolved, that the President shall prepare and submit a National Petroleum Security Plan to Congress by December 31, 1986, designed to prevent further erosion in United States oil independence and national security caused by a growing reliance on unsecure foreign sources of petroleum.

SENATE RESOLUTION 489—PROPOSING A SENATE RULE FOR IMPEACHMENT OF CONVICTED FELONS

Mr. THURMOND submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

SENATE RESOLUTION 489

Resolved, at the end of the Rules of Procedure and Practice In The Senate When Sitting On Impeachment Trials add the following new rule:

XXVII. Whenever articles of impeachment are exhibited in the Senate against any person who has been convicted of a felony in the State or Federal courts of the United States, the Presiding Officer shall designate, with the approval of the Senate, a time for the yeas and nays to be taken on the articles of impeachment against such person. Provided, however, That prior to such vote, there shall be six hours of consideration of the articles; two hours of which shall be reserved for the managers of the impeachment, two hours of which shall be reserved for the accused or the representative of the accused, and two hours of which shall be reserved for deliberation and debate by members. If the impeachment is not sustained by the votes of two-thirds of the members present, a judgment of acquittal shall be entered; but if the person accused of such a felony conviction should be convicted by two-thirds of the members present, the Senate shall proceed to pronounce judgment, and a certified copy of such judgment shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as we, in the Senate, are all too painfully aware at this time, under current constitutional law, it is possible for certain officers of the United States who are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to continue to receive a salary after being convicted of a felony. In order to remove these officers from the Federal payroll, if they are unwilling to resign, it is necessary that they be impeached—a process which can occupy valuable time and resources of the Congress.

The Congress now has the power to impeach officers of the Government who have committed treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. However, when the courts of the Nation have found an official guilty of a serious crime, it should not be necessary for Congress to retry the official prior to his removal from the Federal payroll.

Mr. President, already this year, I have introduced a constitutional amendment which, I believe, would address this intolerable situation. At a recent hearing on my proposal, however, several distinguished witnesses expressed the view that a satisfactory remedy to this problem might exist short of amendment of the Constitution. Primarily, their suggestion was that Congress, through the impeachment process, provide for an expedited impeachment procedure in the case of an accused who has been convicted of a felony. I believe this may be an appropriate alternative means of addressing this dilemma. It was, in fact, an approach which I proposed to several of my colleagues with regard to the Claiborne impeachment.

Today, therefore, I am introducing a resolution which would add a new Senate rule to provide for expedited impeachment proceedings when the accused has been convicted of a felony. I am hopeful that it will receive the careful consideration of my colleagues.

Mr. President, I sent the resolution to the desk and ask that it appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COST ESTIMATE OF HENRY'S FORK OF THE SNAKE RIVER

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, with regard to S. 2635, a bill to protect the integrity and quality of certain reaches of the Henry's Fork of the Snake River, ID, and for other purposes, I request that the Congressional Budget Office's estimate of the costs of this measure be printed in the RECORD at this point. The cost estimate was not available at the time the report was filed.

The cost estimate follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, August 15, 1986.

Hon. JAMES A. McCLURE,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has reviewed S. 2635, a bill to protect the integrity and quality of certain reaches of the Henry's Fork of the Snake River, Idaho, and for other purposes, as ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, August 14, 1986. CBO expects that this bill would result in no cost to the federal government, or to state or local governments.

The bill would prohibit the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) from taking any further steps toward authorizing hydropower projects on a specific portion of Henry's Fork of the Snake River, Idaho. The prohibition established in the bill does not apply to the application for a FERC license for the Island Park Dam Hydropower project, or to the relicensing of the Island Park project. The prohibition also does not apply to relicensing of the Ponds Lodge hydropower project.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER.●

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
SCHOOL OF LAW,
New York, NY, September 4, 1986.

Hon. HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM: Your office has requested my opinion regarding the ethical propriety of certain conduct of William Rehnquist, currently a Justice of the United States Supreme Court whom President Reagan has nominated to be Chief Justice of the United States.

I am a professor of law at New York University, where I have been teaching since 1978. Prior to that, I was in the private practice of law for nine years and a law clerk to a United States District judge for one year. I teach professional and judicial ethics. I have written scholarly articles on the subject and articles for the popular press as well. I am also co-author of a casebook in professional responsibility entitled Regulation of Lawyers: Problems of Law and Ethics. I have served as an expert witness in several tribunals on issues of professional legal ethics. From 1980–83, I was a member of the lawyer disciplinary committee in Manhattan. In 1979–82, I was a member of the Committee on Professional and Judicial Ethics of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

The conduct about which you inquire is the decision of Justice Rehnquist to participate in the case of Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1 (1972), a decision he defended in a memorandum opinion reported at 409 U.S. 824 (1972).

In Laird, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge what they alleged to be unconstitutional army surveillance of the legal activities of American citizens. The Court did not address the merits of the claim, nor was a trial necessary to determine whether the plaintiffs' alleged facts were true. The plaintiffs were not entitled to have the facts determined because they lacked the injury necessary to give them the right to invoke federal jurisdiction under Article III of the Constitution. The Court held that their claim of a subjective "chill" of their exercise of constitutionality protected rights could not "substitute for a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm." 408 U.S. at 13–14.

Although Chief Justice Burger did recount "facts" in his majority opinion, and although these "facts" were contested by plaintiffs and had not been determined at a trial, nevertheless, the asserted facts were analytically unnecessary to the majority's conclusion that the plaintiffs lacked standing.

Justice Rehnquist and three other justices joined the Chief Justice's opinion. The case was decided five to four. Had Justice Rehnquist recused himself, the lower court's decision would have been affirmed by an equally divided Court and discovery would have proceeded in the district court. The affirmation would have had no precedential value.

Laird was decided June 26, 1972. Justice Rehnquist's decision not to recuse himself was published October 10, 1972.

Three reasons appear why Justice Rehnquist ought not to have participated in the Laird case. Two have been raised at his confirmation hearings. A third reason, in my opinion, is most compelling of all and makes Justice Rehnquist's participation especially inappropriate.

Some have suggested that Justice Rehnquist should not have participated in Laird because in March 1971, as Assistant Attorney General, Justice Rehnquist testified before the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee (the Ervin Committee) and expressed as facts some of the "facts" later recounted by the Chief Justice in his majority opinion in Laird and the accuracy of which the plaintiffs were attempting to challenge. While I do not applaud this action, I discount its seriousness because, as stated above, the facts did not play an analytically important role in the resolution of the case.

Some have also pointed to the fact that at the Ervin Committee hearings Justice Rehnquist had specifically addressed the legal issue in Laird (which was then pending in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.) Mr. Rehnquist gave the Ervin Committee his view that the plaintiffs lacked standing. Later, in his opinion refusing to recuse himself from ruling on the very same standing issue with the same case came before the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist chose not to quote the statement to the Ervin Committee in which he had provided his view on the standing issue. Instead, he mischaracterized his colloquy with the Chairman of the Committee as "a discussion of the applicable law."

It was not such a discussion. Mr. Rehnquist gave the Ervin Committee his opinion on the way the law of standing should apply to the facts of the case that later came before him as a Justice. Justice Rehnquist told the Ervin Committee that his "point of disagreement with you is to say whether as in the case of Tatum v. Laird that has been pending in the Court of Appeals here in the District of Columbia that an action will lie by private citizens to enjoin the gathering of information by the executive branch where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the Government."

In my view, any person who has given his opinion of what a particular rule of law requires in a particular context—here the law of standing in the context of the Laird pleadings—cannot properly sit as a judge or justice charged with applying that rule of law in that context. This is fundamental and Justice Rehnquist's decision to sit was fundamentally wrong.

I reach this conclusion based on Section 455 of the Judicial Code, as it read at the time Justice Rehnquist joined in the majority opinion in Laird v. Tatum; on the basis of the Canons of Judicial Ethics, which were in existence when Laird was decided; and on the basis of the Code of Judicial Conduct, the final form of which was available to Justice Rehnquist at the time of the Laird decision and which the A.B.A. had formally adopted as of the time of Justice Rehnquist's denial of the motion to recuse himself.

Let me emphasize that I believe that a person who, before appointment to the bench, ventures a view on the meaning of a legal rule in general may therefore properly sit in judgment in a case where that rule must be applied to specific facts. But this is not what Justice Rehnquist did. Justice Rehnquist, as a witness before the Ervin Committee, did not simply express his general view of the standing principle. Rather, he applied his view of that principle to a particular case and reached a conclusion that there was a lack of standing in that case. Later, as a Justice, he participated in a decision dismissing the same case because of the same conclusion.

Third, and most egregious, Justice Rehnquist should have recused himself in Laird because he was personally at risk if the Court, without his participation, were to affirm the lower court decision by an equally divided vote. In other words, by voting in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist violated the first principle of disinterested judging—he became a judge of his own cause. However—and this compounds the misconduct—the litigants and the public were unaware of Justice Rehnquist's personal stake in the outcome of the Laird case, and Justice Rehnquist did not reveal this stake when he denied the recusal motion.

It was apparently not until 1974 that the nation learned that as Assistant Attorney General Mr. Rehnquist had participated in defining the scope of the army's domestic surveillance of civilians. Among the documents published by the Ervin Committee at that time was a memorandum by Robert E. Jordan, III, General Counsel of the Army, and a copy of a draft memorandum to the President, dated March 25, 1969, prepared by William Rehnquist. These documents and others published by the Ervin Committee reveal Justice Rehnquist's critical role in fashioning the plan for the very military conduct challenged in Laird.

To see why Justice Rehnquist had a personal stake in avoiding an affirmation of the lower court's opinion in Laird, consider what would have happened if Laird had been affirmed. The case would have proceeded to discovery. The documents that did not come to light until 1974, and perhaps other documents, would have been obtained by the plaintiffs. Justice Rehnquist's involvement in the army surveillance plan would have been ascertained. Plaintiffs' counsel would likely have sought to depose Justice Rehnquist. Depending on what the facts revealed, Justice Rehnquist could have been named as a defendant and sued for money damages. The Supreme Court's earlier decision in Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), would have permitted just such a lawsuit.

By assuring with his swing vote that the case would go no further, Justice Rehnquist also assured that his participation in the creation of the challenged plan would go undiscovered and that he would avoid exposure to civil liability.

Justice Rehnquist's conduct is a clear violation (i) of the prohibition in Section 455 of the Judicial Code (as it read in 1972) against a justice or judge participating in "any case in which he has a substantial interest;" (ii) of the prohibition in Canon 29 of the Canons of Justicial Ethics against "performing any judicial act when his personal interests are involved;" and (iii) of the prohibition in the Code of Judicial Conduct against participating in a proceeding where the judge's "interest . . . could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding." The Court has very recently and unanimously reaffirmed these established principles. Aetna Life Insurance Co. v. Lavoie, 106 S.Ct. 1580 (1986).

The fact that Justice Rehnquist chose not to reveal his role in developing the program challenged in Laird, thereby denying the plaintiffs a chance to argue that this participation required disqualification, compounds his impropriety.

In conclusion, because Justice Rehnquist had previously expressed an opinion on how the legal requirement of standing should operate in the case of Laird v. Tatum, it was improper for him to participate in an opinion that applied the standing rule in that very case. Because Justice Rehnquist was a potential defendant in the event of an affirmation of Laird v. Tatum, and had financial and professional exposure, it was improper for him to participate in a decision to reverse the case.

Sincerely yours,

STEPHEN GILLERS,
Professor of Law.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE,
DEPARTMENT OF POLITICS,
South Hadley, MA, August 31, 1986.

Hon. HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM: From what I can gather from news reports of the Rehnquist hearings, you have been concerned with the ethics of his vote in the case of Laird v. Tatum. Accordingly, I am writing to add some information to your understanding of that vote.

First, I should explain the source of my knowledge. I helped to organize that case, which was based on information I had learned while a captain in Army intelligence. I testified about the surveillance before Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in February 1971, and was hired by that subcommittee between 1971 and 1974 to write its two book-length reports on the Army's surveillance. I also wrote my doctoral dissertation on the subject. It is scheduled for publication this year by Garland Press.

According to the New York Times of August 25, the chief unanswered question regarding Justice Rehnquist's 1972 vote in Laird is whether he prejudged the case while testifying at the Ervin hearings in March 1971 as a Justice Department lawyer.

In my opinion, the ethical violation was much worse than that. Mr. Rehnquist not only prejudged the legal merits of Laird; he served as a custodian of evidence in that case. That evidence, computer printouts from the Army's files on civil rights and anti-war activists, were sent to the Justice Department by the Army in March 1970 so that a "pending litigation" excuse could be involved to prevent them from being subpoenaed by Senator Sam J. Ervin's Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights.

At Justice Rehnquist's confirmation hearing last July 30, Senator Leahy asked him: "Did you have personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in Laird?" He replied "No." The Senator asked the question again, and again Justice Rehnquist said "No." I find this denial difficult to believe, for, while writing the Ervin committee's reports in the spring of 1971, I went to Mr. Rehnquist's office to inspect the computer printouts. They filed a large shopping cart.

The files were at the Justice Department in March 1971 when he prepared to defend the legality of the surveillance before Senator Ervin's subcommittee. Is it reasonable to believe that Mr. Rehnquist did not look at them before assuring the subcommittee that the surveillance that produced them was not unconstitutional? Even if he did not look at those files, his possession of them made him a potential witness (or deponent) in Laird, as the files turned out to be incomplete.

But the most unethical part of Justice Rehnquist's vote in Laird is not that he prejudged the case or that he had custody of the evidence as a lawyer in the "firm" which represented the defendants in both Congress and the courts. Much worse is the fact that he had a substantial personal and political interest in preventing the lawsuit from going forward.

As Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Rehnquist was part of the leadership group which decided, in the spring of 1969, to keep the Army's 1,500 plainclothes agents monitoring civilian politics. In March of that year, the Army's civilian leadership had tried to get their agents out of the surveillance business by transferring all responsibility for it to the FBI. Their reason: they had learned that the Army agents were not just passive recipients of FBI reports, but were conducting their own covert operations. They knew the "flap potential" of such activity, and wanted to get the Army out of it before it embarassed them personnally.

The Army's request went to Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst and his protege William H. Rehnquist. However, their administration was determined to intensify, not curb, domestic political surveillance. Mr. Rehnquist's draft memorandum of March 25, 1969, "clarifying" the surveillance policy would have expressly retained the military's surveillance, although under the Attorney General's direction. The final memorandum prepared for Attorney General Mitchell was more circumspect. By authorizing surveillance by unspecified intelligence agencies, it left the Army's operation intact until I disclosed its existence in an article in the January 1970 issue of the Washington Monthly.

I find it difficult to reconcile Justice Rehnquist's participation in that decision with his statement, in writing, to Senator Mathias, in which he said: "I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of the policy on the use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities." That is precisely what he did with his draft memorandum of March 25, 1969. It would also seem probable that he helped to write the final memorandum signed by Attorney General Mitchell in April of that year, since that was the function of his office.

Intensifying the government's surveillance of civil rights and anti-war activists was a top priority of the Justice Department and the White House throughout 1969 and 1970. It is inconceivable that Mr. Rehnquist, as head of the Office of Legal Counsel, was not involved in its development. It was his task to prepare a legal rationale for these covert activities, which he did by inventing a doctrine of "partial martial law." The Assistant Attorney General with whom he worked on these matters was Robert Mardian, who was later convicted for his role in the Watergate affair.

Yet when Senator Leahy asked Justice Rehnquist "did you have knowledge about the military's domestic surveillance policy?," he replied: "I had—if you would consider information obtained in the course of preparing for the May Day demonstrations, which did involve some activity, I suppose you could say yes."

This is a curious answer. The May Day demonstrations occurred in 1971 and had nothing to do with Laird v. Tatum or the surveillance activity it challenged. Indeed, they occurred after Mr. Rehnquist and Mr. Mardian had assured the Ervin subcommittee (in March 1971) that the Army's surveillance had ended. By the time the May Day protest occurred, the Army's surveillance policy had been front page news, off and on, for 14 months. (One NBC-TV documentary about it was seen by 9.5 million people.) If Justice Rehnquist is to be believed, he has forgotten all that public controversy and all of the strategy sessions it generated within the Justice Department. He has also forgotten the Army's request and his own memorandum, one of the first he wrote as a new assistant in Washington.

If the plaintiffs in Laird had been permitted to go forward with pre-trial discovery, it is very possible that they would have discovered the role played by Mitchell, Kleindienst, and Rehnquist, in continuing the surveillance in 1969. If they had, he might have been called as a witness (or to give a deposition) in the case about those decisions, as well as the missing computer printouts. They might also have discovered the 1970 Huston Plan, whereby the Nixon administration sought to commit the FBI, the CIA and military intelligence, in writing, to conducting admittedly illegal surveillance operations. Had that plan been disclosed during the summer of 1972, while the initial investigations of the Watergate burglary were underway in Congress, the administration's responsibility for those (and related) illegal activities might have been more fully disclosed before, rather than after, the 1972 elections.

But Justice Rehnquist blocked this inquiry in a court decision that was rendered in June 1972, just nine days after the Watergate burglary.

I hope this information is of use to you. If I can be of further assistance, I can be reached at (413) 532-3627.

Sincerely,

CHRISTOPHER H. PYLE,
Professor.

SEPTEMBER 5, 1986.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
The Judiciary Committee,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: Enclosed is a memorandum concerning Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum, a copy of which is being sent to each member of the Judiciary Committee. This submission has been prompted by two recent developments: (1) the release of information indicating that Mr. Rehnquist transmitted a memorandum to the Attorney General in March 1969 dealing with the Army's role in collection of intelligence data on civilians; and (2) Justice Rehnquist's responses to questions from Senator Mathias indicating that he had no recollection of the March 1969 memorandum and could not recall any participation in the formulaton of policy concerning military surveillance of civilian activities.

Under the agreement between the Judiciary Committee and the Justice Department following the close of the hearings last month, the contents of Mr. Rehnquist's March 1969 memo were to be treated as confidential. However, that memorandum and other relevant documents are included in the record of public hearings before Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in 1974.

A detailed review of these and other publicly available records raises serious questions about the accuracy and candor of Justice Rehnquist's public statements and about the legality and propriety of his participation in the case. This review, based on public records and in large part on information not publicly available at the time of Laird v. Tatum, indicates the following:

1. Mr. Rehnquist was involved in issues relating to military surveillance of domestic political groups throughout his career in the Justice Department. Although acknowledged neither in his 1972 recusal memorandum nor his 1986 confirmation hearing testimony, his office played a critical role in drafting the 1969 Presidential order that established the basic division of responsibility between the military and the Justice Department for the gathering of intelligence concerning civil disturbances.

2. Both Attorney General Mitchell and Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst, the person most responsible for bringing Mr. Rehnquist into the Justice Department, attached critical importance to development of the 1969 Presidential order, as demonstrated by comments to the Department of Defense at the time. Given this importance, the small number of attorneys under Mr. Rehnquist's supervision in the Office of Legal Counsel and the knowledge that the draft plan was to be submitted to the President by the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense, it seems difficult to believe that Mr. Rehnquist would not have personally become deeply involved in development of the plan.

3. Justice Rehnquist's testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee in response to a question from Senator Leahy that he had no knowledge about the military's domestic surveillance policy prior to the spring of 1971 is directly contradicted by documents in the public record, including his own 1971 testimony to the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights and his March 25, 1969, memorandum to Attorney General Mitchell.

4. In his March 1971 testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, and on other occasions while the Tatum case was pending in the United States Court of Appeals, Mr. Rehnquist made statements about the disputed evidentiary facts and the legal theories involved in the case. Although Mr. Rehnquist was not formally designated as counsel of record in the court proceedings in Laird v. Tatum, his statements about the case were made in his role as head of the Office of Legal Counsel and as a public spokeman for the Government's position.

5. Justice Rehnquist's vote prevented the Tatum case from being sent back to the United States District Court with an extremely broad mandate from the United States Court of Appeals to determine the nature and extent of military surveillance of civilian groups. Pretrial discovery under this broad mandate would likely have uncovered Justice Rehnquist's involvement in the issue of military surveillance. Justice Rehnquist's vote thus prevented pre-trial discovery of both his own prior role and that of his Justice Department colleagues in the development of military surveillance policy.

6. Pre-trial discovery, if the Court of Appeals decision had been upheld, would have begun in the summer of 1972 and might have uncovered—months before the Watergate investigations—other controversial matters relating to domestic intelligence such as the then-secret Huston plan for relaxing restraints on the use of covert mail coverage, surreptitous entry and electronic surveillance. This plan had been temporarily approved by President Nixon in June 1970 and was known in the Justice Department at least to Attorney General Mitchell.

7. Upon remand of the Tatum case, Mr. Rehnquist would very likely have been a material witness for two reasons: (a) he had arranged for the transfer of custody of important evidence (an Army computer printout containing data on the political activities of civilians); and (b) he had been directly involved in development of the plan approved by the President that provided for continued use of Army personnel to collect data on civilian activities.

8. Under the terms of the disqualification statute (28 U.S.C. Sec. 455), as it read in 1972, we believe that Justice Rehnquist was subject to mandatory disqualification on at least two grounds: because it was likely that he would have been a material witness had the case been remanded to the District Court and because he had a substantial interest in the outcome of the case. There is also a strong argument that his role in formulating the challenged policy and publicly expressing his views on the factual contentions and legal merits of the Tatum case, while serving as head of the Office of Legal Counsel and spokesman for the Justice Department, constituted acting as counsel within the meaning of the disqualification statute.

9. Whether he was technically required as a legal matter to disqualify himself or not, it seems apparent that there are serious questions about the basic fairness of Justice Rehnquist's participation in the case and his sensitivity to the need to appear to be fair as well as to be fair. Do his actions meet the standards of propriety that the Senate requires for the highest judicial office in the land?

We recognize the seriousness of the matters discussed and do not lightly raise these issues. We are also aware that the public record from which we have worked is incomplete on many points. It is possible that the concerns about Justice Rehnquist's candor and judicial fairness could be resolved in his favor through a more searching scrutiny of the facts than has thus far been made. We believe that in fairness to him and to the nation that such a scrutiny should be undertaken.

Respectfully yours,

FLOYD TEENEY,
Professor of Law,

AN ANALYSIS OF THE PUBLIC RECORDS CONCERNING JUSTICE REHNQUIST'S PARTICIPATION IN LAIRD V. TATUM

I. INTRODUCTION: OVERVIEW AND CENTRAL QUESTIONS

In 1972, as a new member of the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist cast the crucial fifth vote in Laird v. Tatum, a 5–4 Supreme Court decision holding that a group of civil rights activists and anti-war protesters had failed to show that Army surveillance of civilian political activities created an immediate danger of direct injury to their First Amendment rights.[1] The effect of Justice Rehnquist's participation was to reverse a U.S. Court of Appeals decision in favor of the plaintiffs, and thereby preclude pretrial discovery concerning the Nixon Administration's domestic surveillance policies and practices during the summer of 1972.

A detailed review of Justice Rehnquist's participation in this case, in light of records that have become publicly available since the decision, raises serious questions about Justice Rehnquist's candor and integrity—issues which are central to the question of whether he should be confirmed as Chief Justice of the United States.

The questions involved turn on Justice Rehnquist's conduct over a consdierable period of time, beginning in 1969 when he became head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, and continuing through August 1986. They relate particularly to Justice Rehnquist's testimony at the July-August 1986 hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on his nomination as Chief Justice and his subsequent correspondence with Senator Mathias:

At the Senate confirmation hearings, Justice Rehnquist testified that he had no personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in Larid v. Tatum and no knowledge about the military's domestic surveillance policy until the spring of 1971.

Following the close of the nomination hearings, Justice Rehnquist, in response to questions from Senator Mathias, stated in writing that he had "no recollection" of his personal role in the preparation of a March 1969 draft memo from the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General to the President on a plan for response to civil disturbances and no recollection of "any participation" in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities."

This memorandum begins with a detailed statement of the publicly available facts about these issues and Justice Rehnquist's participation in Larid v. Tatum. It then discusses the legal and ethical issues involved, focusing on five central questions:

1. Did Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist participate significantly in the drafting and development of a Presidential order concerning military surveillance of civilian military activities?

2. What role, if any, did Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist have in the formulation of Nixon Administration policy concerning military surveillance of civilian political activities?

3. Was Justice Rehnquist legally required to disqualify himself from participation in the Supreme Court's consideration of Larid v. Tatum?

4. Did fairness require Justice Rehnquist to disqualify himself from participation in Larid v. Tatum?

5. Has Justice Rehnquist been honest and candid with the Senate and the American people?

II. THE PUBLIC RECORD

A. 1969: Development of plans concerning domestic intelligence

William H. Rehnquist was nominated by President Nixon to be Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel on January 21, 1969, and confirmed on February 1. On March 17, Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst, the person most responsible for Mr. Rehnquist's appointment,[2] met with the General Counsel of the Army, Mr. Robert E. Jordan III, to discuss the handling of intelligence in connection with civil disturbances. At that meeting Mr. Kleindienst urged the need for "a comprehensive memorandum of understanding between the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense," and it was agreed that the Army's General Counsel and Mr. Rehnquist's Office of Legal Counsel would prepare such a document.[3]

The Army developed the first draft, transmitting it to the Office of Legal Counsel around March 22.[4] The Office of Legal Counsel redrafted the plan and on March 25 Mr. Rehnquist sent a copy of the redrafted plan to the Attorney General.[5] He indicated that it "had been formulated in conferences between my staff and the staff of the General Counsel of the Army" and that "as soon as we have your comments and those of the Pentagon, we shall prepare a definitive revision for signature and transmission to the White House."[6] Around this time also the Secretary of the Army was informed by his General Counsel that "there is apparently considerable pressure from the Attorney General to accelerate submission of the paper to the President."[7]

During the next several days the Army gave the Office of Legal Counsel further comments by telephone and in writing.[8] On March 31 the Secretary of the Army informed the Secretary of Defense that the Office of Legal Counsel had accepted the Army's suggested revisions with two exceptions, one of which concerned "civil disturbance intelligence collection and analysis."[9]

A day later the Secretary of the Army transmitted the final Justice Department document to the Secretary of Defense indicating that "we have yielded to the strong views of the Attorney General" and accepted "a quite general statement of intelligence responsibilities."[10] The more general statement was "in lieu of" Army-developed language that would have reduced the military involvement and made it clearer that the FBI was "the primary intelligence collection agency."[11] The urgency of the need to finalize the document was indicated by a statement that the Attorney General had already signed the memorandum and "expressed his strong wish to put this paper in the hands of the President" by the next day.[12]

On May 19 President Nixon signed the Interdepartmental Action Plan for Civil Disturbances, noting that it involved "good planning."[13] In its final form the action plan took up six pages of print and involved drafts of two Presidential proclamations and two Executive Orders. The plan was not made a public document.[14]

B. 1970-71: Controversy in the courts and Congress about the legality of military surveillance

In January 1970, the Washington Monthly published an article by Christopher Pyle, a former Army intelligence officer, indicating that the Army had been conducting widespread surveillance of civilian political activities.[15] The following month, Arlo Tatum, one of the persons named in the article as a target, and twelve other individuals and groups sued Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird and other departmental officers, seeking to halt the Army's surveillance of their activities. The complaint, filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, alleged that the Army's domestic monitoring activities were unauthorized and overbroad, that they deterred political expression and dissent, and that they inhibited other persons from associating with the plaintiffs. They asked the court for a declaration that the surveillance was unconstitutional and illegal, for an injunction forbidding such activity in the future, and for an order requiring destruction of all information acquired as a result of the monitoring.

The complaint specifically alleged that the plaintiffs had been the subjects of Army intelligence reports. One such report was attached to the complaint as an exhibit; it described the political activities of some of the plaintiffs as well as a number of other individuals and organizations.[16] Captain Pyle's Washington Monthly article, which was also attached to the complaint as an exhibit, described the Army's system for monitoring and keeping files on "virtually every activist political group in the country."[17]

While much of the information in the Army's data files had come from newspaper articles and other published sources, some of it was obtained through covert means. At the District Court level, the plaintiffs offered to introduce testimony about one such incident where a military intelligence agent was instucted to infiltrate a coalition of youth groups in Colorado.[18] The District Judge declined to hear the testimony, however, and in April 1970, he dismissed the case on the merits without holding an evidentiary hearing.

The plaintiffs appealed the dismissal order and ten months later, in January 1971, the case was argued before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Secretary Laird was represented on the appeal (as in the District Court) by attorneys from the Justice Department, not including Mr. Rehnquist.

In February and March of 1971, while the Tatum case was still pending in the Court of Appeals, the Senate Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, chaired by Senator Sam Ervin, held eleven days of hearings on federal data banks and information programs, focusing on the operation of these systems and their impact on citizens' privacy and other constitutional rights.[19] One of the areas addressed at the hearings was the Army's monitoring of civilian political activities.

Testimony at the 1971 Ervin Subcommittee hearings indicated that the breadth of the Army's domestic surveillance during the 1968-70 period was considerably greater than had been publicly known at the time the complaint in Tatum was first filed. It became clear that a great number of widely disparate groups, covering the full range of the political spectrum, had been subject to monitoring by the Army. These included the American Civil Liberties Union, the John Birch Society, Americans for Democratic Action, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the NAACP, and the League of Women Voters.[20] Files were also maintained on thousands of individuals not connected with the armed forces. Although much of the data consisted of matters of public record, information was also obtained through a variety of covert means. Robert Froehlke, then an Assistant Secretary of Defense, testified before the Subcommittee that it was "highly improbable" that many of the requirements for information contained in the Army's 1968 civil disturbance information collection plan could have been met in any way other than through covert collection means.[21]

Former members of Army intelligence testified at the Ervin Subcommittee hearings that the Army's domestic intelligence activities had included covert actions such as:

Infiltration of undercover agents into Resurrection City during the Poor People's Campaign in 1968.[22]

Having agents pose as newspaper reporters, press photographers, and TV newsmen (sometimes with fake press credentials) during the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago.[23]

Sending agents, enrolled as students, to monitor classes in a Black Studies program at New York University.[24]

Infiltrating a coalition of church youth groups in Colorado Springs, Colorado.[25]

Keeping card files and dossiers on a wide range of public figures who had expressed opposition to the war in Vietnam, including then Senator Adlai Stevenson III, Rep. Abner V. Mikva (now a Federal Court of Appeals Judge), and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, as well as a number of faculty members and students at universities.[26]

The files that were kept on public officials and private citizens often included data on their private and personal affairs as well as on their political activities. Computer printouts and other publications generated by the Army during the 1968-70 period contained comments about the financial affairs, sex lives, and psychiatric histories of many individuals wholly unaffiliated with the armed foces.[27] Much of the information appears to have been unverified rumor or gossip.[28]

Following publication of the Pyle article and the filing of the Tatum lawsuit early in 1970, there had been a cutback in scope of the Army's monitoring activities. At the 1971 Ervin Subcommittee hearings, senior officials from the Defense Department testified about the development of the intelligence gathering effort and the subsequent scaling-back. However, the extent to which the monitoring activities had been "stopped" and the files destroyed remained unclear.[29]

In advance of the hearings, Senator Ervin had written to Attorney General Mitchell, asking him to testify concerning the Executive Branch's authority to conduct surveillance "on lawful political activities, personal beliefs and private lives."[30] Senator Ervin indicated a specific concern about the Army's "collection, analysis and maintenance of information on civilians" in connection with civil disturbances and asked for information concering "the degree to which the Justice Department has indeed assumed responsibility for this program." Senator Ervin also asked for "a description of the interdepartmental Delimitations Agreements governing the respective roles of the Armed Services and the Justice Department in investigation of civilians and in retention of dossiers in non-criminal cases . . . the basis for these agreements and the reason for them."

Mr. Rehnquist appeared for the Justice Department at the Ervin Subcommittee hearings on March 9 instead of the Attorney General. In a prepared statement he acknowledged that there could be "isolated examples of abuse of [the Government's] investigative function."[31] He maintained, however, that "I think it quite likely that self-discipline on the part of the executive branch will provide an answer to virtually all of the legitimate complaints against excesses of information-gathering."[32] In the same statement he made a number of assertions about the status of the Army's monitoring system that was the subject of the complaint in Laird v. Tatum:

"The function of gathering intelligence relating to civil disturbances, which was previously performed by the Army as well as the Department of Justice, has since been transferred to the Internal Security Division of the Justice Department. No information contained in the data base of the Department of the Army's now defunct computer system has been transferred to the Internal Security Division's data base. However, in connection with the case of Tatum v. Laird, now pending in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, one printout from the Army computer has been retained for the inspection of the court. It will thereafter be destroyed."[33]

In a later colloquy with Senator Ervin, Mr. Rehnquist commented further on the allegations in Laird v. Tatum. He indicated that he felt the plaintiffs had sustained no injury and that their claims of First Amendment violations were without merit:

"Senator ERVIN. Do you feel that there are any serious constitutional problems with respect to collecting data on or keeping under surveillance persons who are merely exercising their right to peaceful assembly or petition to redress a grievance?

Mr. REHNQUIST. My answer to your question is no, Mr. Chairman. And by saying 'no,' I do not think it involves constitutional violations. I would not want to be thought as disparaging the importance of it or the undesirability of it. But I do not believe it raises a constitutional question. . . .

Senator ERVIN. Don't you think most people are sort of afraid of governmental surveillance, Aren't they?

Mr. REHNQUIST. I do not doubt a number are, Mr. Chairman. I have noticed that certainly there have always been people willing to come forward and sue the government, as was done in the northern district of Illinois, and was done here in the District of Columbia, claiming that others were intimidated but really admitting that they were not intimidated at all."[34]

The question of the existence of a possible chilling effect on the exercise of First Amendment rights was subsequently pursued further, in another colloquy between Senator Ervin and Mr. Rehnquist. Mr. Rehnquist again took the position, with reference to specific surveillance activities of the Army, that no First Amendment violations were involved:

"Senator ERVIN. Do you not concede that government could very effectively stifle the exercise of first amendment freedoms by placing people who exercise those freedoms under surveillance?

Mr. REHNQUIST. No, I don't think so, Senator. It may have a collateral effect such as that but certainly during the time when the Army was doing things of this nature, and apparently it was fairly well known that it was doing things of this nature, those activities didn't deter 200,000 or 250,000 people from coming to Washington on at least one or two occasions to exercise their first amendment rights by protesting the war policies of the President.

Senator ERVIN. Well, we have evidence here that on one occasion in Colorado, there were 119 people present at a rally to protest the war in Vietnam, and that of those 119 persons 52 of them were military intelligence agents. Not only that but a militray intelligence agent was sent there with orders to tape the speeches that were made at the rally and he couldn't tape them because the military forces had five helicopters flying right over the heads of the rally and making so much noise that the speeches that were made could not be taped. Do you think that was a legitimate exercise of governmental power in view of the fact that the testimony shows that the speeches were not inflammatory in nature, that they consisted of rather mild protests against the policies of the government and no violence occurred?

Mr. REHNQUIST. No, I do not and, as I have said before, I think that is an illegitimate use of government power. I do not think it amounts to a constitutional violation of the first amendment.

Senator ERVIN. Well there is also evidence here of photographers having been present at many rallies. Army intelligence agents, pretending to be photographers, were present at many rallies, took pictures of people, and then made inquiries to identify these people and made dossiers of them. Do you not think that is an interference of constitutional rights?

Mr. REHNQUIST. I do not, Senator.[35] In response to questions, Mr. Rehnquist indicated that the Justice Department's guidelines for its Internal Security computer were more restrictive than those which the Army had been using. When asked about the "civil disturbance file," Mr. Rehnquist indicated that he "did not have personal knowledge" in every field but that he understood that file to be "limited to situations involving either a violation of law or a potential violation of the law, not simply peaceful demonstrations or cataloguing people who go to meetings." Mr. Rehnquist agreed to make available to the Subcommittee the Army computer printout being held for the Tatum case.

Mr. Rehnquist discussed the 1949 Delimitation Agreement allocating responsibilty between the FBI and the Department of Defense for investigating espionage, counterespionage, subversion and sabotage. In discussing this allocation, however, he did not mention the 1969 Presidential order dealing with responsibility for collection of raw intelligence data that had been drafted by his Office of Legal Counsel.

At the March 17 hearings, the Subcommittee questioned both Mr. Rehnquist and Assistant Attorney General Mardian extensively as to whether the Justice Department had guidelines for conducting investigations of civilian political activities. Ultimately Mr. Mardian mentioned the 1969 memorandum drafted by Mr. Rehnquist's office, characterizing this as "the delimitations agreement." Mr. Rehnquist corrected Mr. Mardian, indicating that the delimitations agreement was an older agreement. Mr. Mardian was then asked whether this new agreement was issued by President Nixon in 1969. Mr. Mardian said that it was not, that it was "a memorandum of understanding between the two Departments." Mr. Rehnquist did not correct this misstatement.[36]

Two days later, while the Tatum case was still pending in the U.S. Court of Appeals, Mr. Rehnquist delivered an address to the National Conference of Law Reviews, in which he presented a wide-ranging defense of the Government's surveillance activities. In the course of his remarks, he stated:

"I believe that no legitimate interest of any segment of our population would be served by permitting individuals or groups of individuals to prevent by judicial action, the government's gathering information . . . ."[37]

On April 27, 1971, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia handed down its decision in the Tatum v. Laird case, holding 2-1 that the plaintiffs had standing to sue and that their allegations presented a justiciable case under established law regarding the exercise of First Amendment rights.[38] Judge Wilkey's opinion for the majority in the Court of Appeals noted particularly the combination of factors alleged in the complaint to have a chilling effect on First Amendment rights, including the conduct of activities beyond the Army's statutory authority, the intrusive and inhibiting effect of the activities, and the fact that the Army—an immensely powerful institution—was the governmental agency involved in the activities.

In remanding the case to the District Court, the Court of Appeals ordered that a thorough inquiry be made into the plaintiffs' allegations. It directed the District Court to determine "the nature of the Army domestic intelligence system made the subject of appellants' complaint, specifically the extent of the system, the methods of gathering the information, its content and substance, the methods of retention and distribution, and the recipients of the information."[39] The Government filed a petition for certiorari with the Supreme Court on September 20.

While the certiorari petition was pending, Mr. Rehnquist sent the Subcommittee a memorandum in response to questions posed by Senator Hruska at the March 9 hearings. The memorandum discussed several Supreme Court cases dealing with the Government's power to collect information, and also commented on the ending of the Army's data-gathering functions. It stated: "If anything, the now-terminated data-gathering functions of the Army seem to have stimulated rather than curtailed debate."[40]

C. 1972: Laird v. Tatum in the Supreme Court

During the months following the Ervin Subcommittee hearings and the Court of Appeals decision, Mr. Rehnquist was nominated and confirmed as a justice of the Supreme Court. In October 1971, prior to his confirmation, the Supreme Court granted the Government's petition for certiorari to review the Court of Appeals' decision in Laird v. Tatum.

The case was argued in March and decided by a 5-4 vote on June 26, 1972. The majority was made up of Chief Justice Burger and Justices White, Powell, Blackmun, and Rehnquist. Chief Justice Burger's opinion for the majority accepted the Government's contention that the plaintiffs' claims of First Amendment violations did not present a justiciable controversy because they had failed to allege specific present objective injury or threat of specific future injury to themselves.[41] The opinion did not review the allegations of the complaint in any detail, nor did it address the plaintiffs' contention that they would prove the injuries they alleged—including invasion of their right of privacy, damage to their reputations and employment prospects, and infringement of their rights of free speech and association—if given an opportunity to do so at an evidentiary hearing. The majority opinion noted (as had then Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist at the Ervin Subcommittee hearings) that the plaintiffs themselves were apparently not chilled in the exercise of their First Amendment rights by the challenged system.[42] The opinion of Chief Justice Burger apparently accepted at face value the Government's contention that the Army's domestic intelligence activities had been significantly reduced,[43] although the extent of the cutback had never been established at an evidentiary hearing and was strenuously disputed by the plaintiffs.

Justice Douglas, joined by Justice Marshall, filed a vigorous dissent. Drawing on the public record developed in the Ervin Subcommittee hearings as well as the allegations in the complaint, Justice Douglas stressed the sweep and intrusiveness of the Army's monitoring activities, and noted the covert nature of the surveillance activities. Acknowledging that the Army might have cut back its surveillance activities since the start of the litigation, he emphasized that whether there had been an actual cutback could only be determined after a hearing in the District Court.[44]

Justices Brennan and Stewart also dissented, basically adopting the position taken by Judge Wilkey in his opinion for the Court of Appeals. That opinion stressed the plaintiffs' contention that the present existence of the Army's system of gathering and distributing information on civilian political activity—information not reasonable relevant to the Army's mission to surpress civil disorder when called upon—had an inhibiting effect on their exercise of First Amendment rights. In their view, the case was justiciable. Although the plaintiffs might not be able to prove their allegations of injury, they were entitled to try and should have an opportunity to do so in the District Court.[45]

D. 1986: Testimony at nomination hearings and subsequent developments

On June 17, 1986, President Reagan nominated William Rehnquist to succeed Warren Burger as Chief Justice of the United States. At his nomination hearings (July 29-August 1), Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum was a focus of inquiry by several senators.

Senator Leahy asked Justice Rehnquist:

"Senator LEAHY. Did you have personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in Laird?

Justice REHNQUIST. No.

Senator LEAHY. When you were in the Justice Department, did you have knowledge about the military's domestic surveillance policy?

Justice REHNQUIST. I had—if you would consider information obtained in the course of preparing for the May Day demonstrations, which did involve some activity, I suppose you would say yes.

Senator LEAHY. But you deny, you were not aware of the evidentiary, or the disputed evidentiary facts?

Justice REHNQUIST. No.[46]

Subsequent to his confirmation hearings Mr. Rehnquist was asked a series of written questions by Senator Mathias.[47] Mr. Rehnquist indicated that he had "no recollection" of "my personal role in the preparation" of the April 1969 draft memo to the President, but that he assumed "from the text of the transmittal memo that the plan was primarily drafted by staff members in my office and in the Office of the General Counsel of the Army, and was reviewed by me." Mr. Rehnquist also indicated that he had "no recollection" as to his personal role in the preparation of the portion of the document concerning intelligence operations, "no recollection" of his personal role in arriving at the recommendations contained in the plan concerning the role of the FBI and the Army and "no recollection" as to how the language in the draft authorizing a domestic role for military intelligence first appeared.

In response to a question asking what consideration, if any, he had given to his role in preparing the Interdepartmental Action Plan in deciding whether to participate in Laird v. Tatum and as to why he had omitted any reference to the plan in his recusal memorandum, Mr. Rehnquist stated that his memorandum opinion "explaining my reasons for declining to recuse myself . . . describes my reasoning at that time regarding all considerations that in my judgment bore on the issue of recusal."

In response to a question concerning his knowledge of and participation in the formulation of policy on military surveillance of civilians. Mr. Rehnquist stated that:

I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct military surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities. I do not think I had any first hand knowledge as to the use of the military to conduct such surveillance or collect intelligence, though I may have been briefed with such information as was necessary to enable me to testify before congressional committees or to publicly discuss legal questions.

III. ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL REHNQUIST'S ROLE IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF DOMESTIC SURVEILLANCE POLICY

Mr. Rehnquist headed the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel in March and April 1969 when that Office was responsible, along with the Office of the General Counsel of the Army, for drafting a Presidential order concerning civil disturbances and providing for the continuation of the Army's domestic surveillance activities. According to Mr. Robert E. Jordan III, who was then the Army's General Counsel, these negotiations were initiated by the Army, after senior Pentagon officials had concluded that "military intelligence ought to get out of the civil disturbance intelligence business."[48]

Following an initial meeting between Mr. Jordan and Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst on March 17, the Office of Legal Counsel was designated to handle the negotiations on behalf of the Justice Department.[49] A draft memorandum setting forth proposed allocations of responsibility in this field was prepared by the Army's Office of General Counsel and sent to the Justice Department around March 22. The Army's draft memorandum, which was intended to be sent jointly to the President by the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, provided for the Attorney General to have coordinating authority in the civil disturbance field and for the FBI to have primary operational responsibility for collection of raw intelligence data.[50] With respect to intelligence gathering during what was characterized as "Phase One" (i.e., planning and preparation before any disturbances occurred), the Army's March 22nd draft contained the following language:

"Of particular importance is the intelligence effort, which while it presently does not permit us to monitor civil disturbances, nevertheless enables us to monitor emerging disorders, note civil disturbance trends and identify dissident elements which may foment violence and disorder.

"The previous Administration never clarified responsibilities for the important intelligence collection effort which is an essential part of federal activities in Phase One. Currently, the Federal Bureau of Investigation collects and makes available a large amount of information on actual disorders and on persons engaged in disturbance-related conduct which might constitute a federal crime. Information from the FBI and from other Justice Department sources, such as United States Attorneys, is available to the Inter-Divisional Information Unit (IDIU) in the Justice Department. At the same time, the Army has been utilizing the U.S. Army Intelligence Command, which is principally a counter-intelligence field organization, to relay civil disturbance information for use by Department of Defense officials. This information is also made available to the Justice Department.

"Intelligence operations involve the collection, analysis, and dissemination of information. Collection activities involve principally contacts with state and local law enforcement officials and other local leaders. As you know, the FBI has a large network of offices throughout the United States which is daily involved in liaison activities with the kinds of officials who are in a position to furnish information relating to civil disturbances. We believe that the Federal Bureau of Investigation should be formally assigned primary responsibility for collecting and furnishing on a timely basis to other concerned agencies, raw intelligence. Although the Army Intelligence Command could perform this function, the salutary tradition of avoiding military intelligence collection activities in predominantly civilian matters reinforces our view that this responsibility belongs with the FBI."[51]

Two aspects of the Army's March 22nd draft are especially relevant. First, it states flatly that the U.S. Army Intelligence Command, "principally a counter-intelligence field organization," had been providing information to Defense Department officials and to the Justice Department. Second, it sets forth the Army's view that because of "the salutary tradition of avoiding military intelligence collection activities in predominantly civilian matters,' the FBI should have the responsibility for collection of raw intelligence data. This language indicates that, as Mr. Jordan later testified, the Army had been involved in intelligence gathering, that the Justice Department was a "consumer" of this information, and that the Army wanted to get out of the business and turn it over to the FBI.

Within three days after receiving the Army's draft, the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel prepared a counter draft of the proposed interdepartmental memorandum. The Office of Legal Counsel's draft was sent to Attorney General John Mitchell, by Mr. Rehnquist, on March 25, 1969.[52] Mr. Rehnquist's memorandum to Attorney General Mitchell states that the draft "has been formulated in conferences between members of my staff and the staff of the General Counsel of the Army." [53] A copy of this draft, which adopted most of the language of the Army's March 22nd draft but made important changes in the language regarding responsibility for collecting raw intelligence, was also sent to Mr. Jordan.[54] With respect to the intelligence-gathering function, the draft prepared by the Office of Legal Counsel provided that the FBI should have primary responsibility but inserted language providing that the Army should be available to assist:

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation will be charged with the task of collecting raw intelligence data and transmitting it on a timely basis to the Department of Defense. At the request of the Attorney General, the Department of the Army, through the U.S. Army Intelligence Command, may assist in this effort. However, in order to preserve the salutary tradition of avoiding military intelligence activities in predominantly civilian matters, the U.S. Army Intelligence Command should not ordinarily be used to collect the intelligence of this sort." [55]

Following preparation of the March 25th draft by the Office of Legal Counsel, there was apparently a considerable amount of further discussion concerning the division of intelligence responsibilities between the Army and the Department of Justice. As part of the on-going negotiations during this period, at least one additional draft containing proposed revisions in the language concerning responsibility for intelligence collection was prepared by the Army and sent to the Justice Department on March 29th.[56] The final version of the "Interdepartmental Plan for Civil Disturbances," as submitted to President Nixon in April 1969 and approved by him in May, was ambiguous with respect to intelligence collection responsibilities. It provided simply that:

"Under the supervision of the Attorney General, raw intelligence data pertaining to civil disturbances will be acquired from such sources of the government as may be available. Such data will be transmitted to the Intelligence Unit of the Department of Justice, and it will be evaluated on a continuing basis by representatives from various departments of the government."[57]

The effect of the watering down of the language in the original draft was to leave the Army's domestic intelligence mission and activities essentially unchanged. They remained unchanged until the publication of the Pyle article and the initiation of the Tatum lawsuit in 1970. Mr. Jordan's view, expressed in two 1971 memoranda that reviewed the history of the Army's involvement in domestic surveillance and in his 1974 testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee, was that the Army had tried to shift responsibility for the collection activities to the Justice Department but had been unsuccessful in doing so.[58]

On the basis of these documents, it is not possible to know the extent of Mr. Rehnquist's involvement in the negotiations concerning the allocation of intelligence collection responsibilities between the Army and the Justice Department, or to assess the extent of his knowledge about the nature of the Army's monitoring activities. It is clear, however, from the phrasing of his March 25, 1969 memorandum to Attorney General John Mitchell, that he was at least aware of the negotiations on this subject and of the fact that the Army was engaged in some kinds of collection of raw intelligence data. Since Mr. Rehnquist's office was responsible for drafting a memorandum intended for review by the Attorney General and ultimately for approval by the President, it would be very surprising if he did not know a great deal more about details of the intelligence collection and distribution practices. The full extent of his knowledge and involvement cannot be gauged on the basis of the current public record.

IV. THE LEGALITY AND FAIRNESS OF JUSTICE REHNQUIST'S PARTICIPATION IN LAIRD V. TATUM

The lawyers for the plaintiffs had considered making a motion for recusal of Justice Rehnquist prior to the oral argument of Tatum v. Laird before the Supreme Court, because he had previously expressed views on the case in his testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee. According to Frank Askin, who argued the case for the plaintiffs, Senator Ervin (who was also a counsel in the case) advised against such a motion on the ground that it was unnecessary—he felt that Justice Rehnquist was "an honorable man" and would not participate in the case.[59]

After the decision was handed down, the plaintiffs—surprised that Justice Rehnquist had participated in it—filed a motion asking the Justice to disqualify himself. They argued that Justice Rehnquist should not have participated because "he had served as an expert witness" in the Senate hearings, had "intimate knowledge of the evidence underlying" the allegations and had made "public statements" about the issues. They also sought withdrawal of the opinion of the Court and filed a petition for rehearing. All of these applications were denied on October 10, 1972.[60]

Justice Rehnquist, in denying the motion for disqualification (which, in accordance with long-established practice, was referred to him for decision), wrote a 16-page memorandum opinion stating his reasons for not disqualifying himself.

The memorandum identifies the governing statute concerning disqualification as 28 U.S.C. Sec. 455, which as of 1972, provided as follows:

"Any justice or judge of the United States shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit on the trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein."

The statute has since been amended to provide for mandatory disqualification in a broader range of situations,[61] but for purposes of assessing Justice Rehnquist's actions in Laird v. Tatum the relevant statutory language is that set out above.

The disqualification statute has both mandatory and discretionary provisions. As it read is 1972, the statute required a justice to disqualify himself in three situations: (1) if he was a "material witness," (2) had a "substantial interest," or (3) had served "of counsel" in the case. Disqualification was discretionary when the ground asserted for it was the justice's relationship or connection with a party or the party's attorney.

A. The material witness issue

In his 1972 recusal memorandum Justice Rehnquist made two statements bearing on whether he was required to disqualify himself as a "material witness." [62] The clearest reference was his statement that since he had not "been a material witness in Laird v. Tatum," this disqualifying factor did not apply to him.

It is certainly true that Justice Rehnquist had not been called as a witness in the trial of Laird v. Tatum. The statute, however, requires disqualification not only for a person who "has been" a material witness but also for a person who "is" a material witness.

Justice Rehnquist did not refer to this part of the statute. It is particularly pertinent to the Tatum case, however, because the whole issue of the appeal was whether a trial was to be allowed. The District Court had dismissed the suit before witnesses could be called.

There is no definitive interpretation as to whether this part of the disqualification statute applied (as it was written in 1972) to the possibility that a judge might be a future witness. The relatively few appellate cases interpreting this section generally concerns judges who were challenged because of their prior involvement as a judge in an earlier phase of the proceeding.[63] The purpose of the statute seems clear, however. It is to disqualify judges who have personal knowledge about the facts involved in the lawsuit.

This purpose is made clearer by amendments to the disqualification statute adopted in 1974. These amendments were intended to bring the statute more into line with the American Bar Association's newly developed Code of Judicial Conduct adopted by the American Bar Association on August 16, 1972, while the disqualification motion in Laird v. Tatum was pending before the Court.[64] Justice Rehnquist referred to this newly adopted Code in his recusal memorandum indicating that he did not read the Code "provisions as being materially different from the standards enunciated in the statute" and that for this reason there was "no occasion for me to give them separate consideration."[65] Both the new statute and the ABA Code contain language indicating that a judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which he has "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding." [66] The new statute also makes it clear that the judge must disqualify himself if he is to his knowledge "likely to be a material witness." [67]

Did Justice Rehnquist have personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts? Justice Rehnquist did not specifically address this issue in his recusal memorandum in Laird v. Tatum. He did, however, respond to the plaintiff's claim that he had "intimate knowledge of the evidence underlying the respondent's allegations." This claim, he said, "seems to me to make a great deal of very little." He said that Government spokesmen in legislative hearings are frequently persons who do "not have personal knowledge in every field." [68] He went on to say that he had very little knowledge about Laird v. Tatum. He indicated that he had made one reference to the case in his prepared statement and another at his subsequent appearance before the Senate Subcommittee. He also indicated that he had prepared a memo, supervised the preparation of a memorandum of law which had been sent to the Senate Subcommittee on September 20, 1971, and that he "would expect such a memorandum to have commented on" the Tatum case.[69]

One reference was to a printout from the Army computer containing the names of civilians that the Army had collected information about and that were contained in the Army's computer. This printout was being held as evidence in Laird v. Tatum and was being held in custody of the Justice Department. Justice Rehnquist indicated that he "had then and have now no personal knowledge of the arrangement" and that "nor so far as I know have I ever seen or been apprised of the contents of this particular print-out." [70] He also stated, however, that he "later authorized its transmittal to the staff of the [Senate] Subcommittee at the request of the latter."

Justice Rehnquist's recusal memorandum thus deals primarily with his knowledge of the Tatum lawsuit itself. The subject of the lawsuit, however, was the existence of a system of military surveillance of civilian political activities. As Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Rehnquist had extensive knowledge of this subject. Although not mentioned in his recusal memorandum, his office had been responsible for drafting the Interdepartmental Act Plan on Civil Disturbances that had been adopted by the President and that served as the basic document for allocation of responsibility for domestic intelligence between the military and the Justice Department.

Had Justice Rehnquist not participated in the Tatum case, it would have gone back to the District Court with a mandate to determine, among other things, "the nature of the Army's domestic intelligence system made the subject of appellants' complaint, specifically the extent of the system, the methods of gathering the information, its content and substance, the methods of retention and distribution and the recipients of the information."

In attempting to make some assessment of what persons and what materials would be subject to discovery under this very broad mandate, it should be borne in mind that the relevance criterion used in measuring discoverability in a civil case is much broader than that used in determining admissibility at the subsequent trial of the case. Federal Rule 26(b) expresses this sweeping standard in the following words:

"Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action, whether it relates to the claim or defense of any other party, including the existence, description, nature, custody and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things and the identity and locations of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter. It is not ground for objection that the information sought will be inadmissible at the trial if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." (Emphasis supplied.)

Prior to the adoption of this liberal standard, discovery efforts frequently encountered the objection that the party seeking disclosure was simply embarked on a "fishing expedition." Under Rule 26, however, this is no longer a valid objection. As the Supreme Court expressed it in Hickman v. Taylor:

"No longer can the time-honored cry of "fishing expedition" serve to preclude a party from inquiring into the facts underlying his opponent's case. Mutual knowledge of all the relevant facts gathered by both parties is essential to proper litigation. To that end, either party may compel the other to disgorge whatever facts he has in his possession."[71]

Under the broad and liberal "relevance-to-the-subject matter" criterion, any Government official who had prepared, reviewed, or approved an interagency agreement sanctioning and delineating the scope of military surveillance activities with respect to civilian protest movements would be the natural and inevitable target of the discovery efforts that the plaintiffs were authorized to carry out under the Court of Appeals mandate. If that same Government official had been involved in the custody of a computer printout containing the fruits of that surveillance policy, it would be essential for the plaintiffs to depose this official in order to gain access to the printout and to verify its contents and completeness.

More importantly, Mr. Rehnquist made a number of statements, both in 1971 and in 1986, about disputed evidentiary facts. In his prepared statement at the 1971 Ervin Subcommittee hearings, he made at least four factual assertions—that the intelligence-gathering function was no longer being performed by the Army, that the Army's computer system was now "defunct",[72] that no information that had been contained in the Army's data base had been transferred to the Internal Security Division of the Justice Department, and that there was only one remaining computer printout. All of these factual contentions were disputed by the plaintiffs. Mr. Rehnquist's testimony clearly implies that he either had personal knowledge of these facts or could indicate the sources of information he obtained from others.

In his 1986 testimony before the Judiciary Committee, he stated that he had "obtained" information about the military domestic surveillance policy "in the course of preparing for the May Day demonstrations which did involve some activity." [73] As these demonstrations occurred in May 1971, this knowledge would presumably have been acquired after March 9, 1971. That is the date on which Mr. Rehnquist told the Ervin Subcommittee that "the function of gathering intelligence related to civil disburbances" had "been transferred to the Internal Security Division of the Justice Department." [74] Since one of the key issues in Laird v. Tatum was whether the military surveillance was continuing, such knowledge standing alone was sufficient to make Justice Rehnquist a material witness.

B. Substantial interest

The statute also requires that a justice disqualify himself if he has a "substantial interest" in the outcome of the case. Justice Rehnquist did not specifically address this provision in his recusal memorandum.

The major target of this part of the statute is the pecuniary interests of the justice.[75] The statute is written broadly, however, and clearly covers other kinds of interests as well.[76] The Constitution itself would appear to require no less. As the Supreme Court said in In Re Murchison, a case not involving a pecuniary interest: "[N]o man can be a judge in his own case and no man is permitted to try cases where he has an interest in the outcome." [77]

Had the Tatum case been remanded for trial in the District Court, as would have happened if Justice Rehnquist had not participated in the case, there would have been extensive pretrial discovery. This discovery would likely have uncovered Justice Rehnquist's involvement—and that of his Justice Department colleagues—in the development of the Interdepartmental Action Plan for Civil Disorders and in the development of military surveillance policy in connection with it. Justice Rehnquist thus had a "substantial interest" in the outcome of the case. His vote in effect prevented discovery of his own prior role shaping the surveillance policy under challenge.

Pretrial discovery might also have uncovered other controversial matters such as the Huston Plan for relaxing restraints on the use of covert mail coverage, surreptitious entry and electronic surveillance for domestic intelligence purposes by the Defense Intelligence Agency, the FBI, the CIA and the National Security Agency.[78] Attorney General Mitchell apparently became aware of this plan on July 27, 1970.[79] If Justice Rehnquist had knowledge of this plan either before or after the Attorney General learned of it or of similar matters, this knowledge could also constitute a substantial interest requiring disqualification.

C. Acting as "counsel"

The statute also requires disqualification when a justice has previously been "of counsel" in a case. As to this ground Justice Rehnquist in his recusal memorandum said that he had not been of counsel in the case. He also said that he had not "actively participated" in the case even in "an advisory role." [80] Justice Rehnquist acknowledged that he had spoken publicly about the legal issues in the case, but concluded that neither the statute nor the practice of prior justices required that he disqualify himself for this reason.

If "of counsel" is construed in a sufficiently narrow and technical way, Justice Rehnquist's position is undoubtedly correct. If, however, the term includes acting as a lawyer for the same client on the same issue, the statute would seem to apply. Mr. Rehnquist, as head of the Office of Legal Counsel, did more than simply speak out on the underlying issues. He served as the principal spokesperson for the Justice Department before the Ervin Subcommittee on both the legal and factual matters at issue in the Tatum case.

While he recognized that surveillance might be unwise or undesirable, Mr. Rehnquist told the Ervin Subcommittee that it was not unconstitutional—even when it involved such intrusive activities as spying on church meetings, posing as press photographers, taking pictures of people at political rallies, and making inquiries to identify the people in the photographs and preparing dossiers on them.[81] He stated that he did not personally advocate such activities, but disagreed with the contention, "as in the case of Tatum v. Laird," that an action by private citizens would lie to enjoin the gathering of information by the Executive Branch "where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the Government." [82]

This position was developed more fully in a March 1971 address to Law Review editors, where Mr. Rehnquist stated categorically that "I believe that no legitimate interest of any segment of our population would be served by permitting individuals or groups of individuals to prevent, by judicial action, the government's gathering information." [83] Several months later he filed a legal memorandum with the Subcommittee which argued that the Supreme Court had never held that unauthorized information gathering violated an individual's constitutional rights except where the information was used as a basis of a proceeding against the individual. In closing, that memorandum referred specifically to allegations about Army surveillance, arguing that:

"Recent experience seems to establish that even if the strongest allegations concerning Army data-gathering are assumed to be true, there has been no interruption in 'uninhibited, robust, and wide open debate on major controversial issues.' (New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964)). Both the Veterans' demonstration and the later May Day demonstrations seem to substantiate that. If anything, the now-terminated data gathering functions of the Army seem to have stimulated rather than curtailed debate." [84]

In essence, Mr. Rehnquist was acting as a lobbyist in the legal community, seeking acceptance of the legal position being taken by the Justice Department in Laird v. Tatum. His statements advocate legal positions formulated at least in part by the Office of Legal Counsel; they seek to defend the legality of practices provided for in the 1969 Interdepartmental Action Plan that the Office of Legal Counsel was instrumental in negotiating,[85] and they obviously address the critical issue in the Supreme Court's Tatum decision—the justiciability of the plaintiffs' allegations—very directly.

D. Discretionary disqualification

The "discretionary" portion of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 455, as it read in 1972, provided that a judge should disqualify himself where he "is so related to or connected with any party as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit on trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein." The words "in his opinion" are crucial—in essence, they make the exercise of discretion unreviewable as a matter of law.

In discussing the discretionary provision in his memorandum opinion denying the disqualification motion, Justice Rehnquist focused on two aspects of his work at the Justice Department: (1) the question of his possible connections with the defense of the case of Laird v. Tatum; and (2) his public expressions of his understanding of the law regarding the constitutionality of governmental surveillance. As to the first, he was emphatic that what he referred to as "my total lack of connection while in the Department of Justice with the defense of the case of Laird v. Tatum" meant that his previous relationship with the Justice Department should not suggest discretionary disqualification.[86] with respect to previous expressions of his views on law regarding particular issues, he reviewed at some length the practices of other justices and concluded that such expressions did not require disqualification.[87]

Justice Rehnquist's discussion of the discretionary disqualification provision, like his discussion of the provision regarding mandatory disqualification, made no mention whatsoever of many relevent aspects of his work at the Department of Justice. These actions and statements, while they did not constitute formally acting as counsel of record in the court proceedings in the Tatum case, went well beyond general expressions of opinion on points of law. Those directly related to the allegations and potential evidence in Laird v. Tatum included:

Development of the Interdepartmental Action Plan on Civil Disturbances.

Testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee that the Army had ceased its domestic intelligence gathering, that this function had been transferred to the Justice Department Internal Security Division, that the Army's computer system was now "defunct," and that no information contained in the Army's computer system had been transferred to the Internal Security Division [88]—the same factual contentions the Government later made to the Supreme Court.[89]

Testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee questioning the plaintiffs' allegations of harm, maintaining that those who sued the Government in the District of Columbia (i.e., the plaintiffs in the Tatum case) had been willing to come forward "really admitting that they were not intimidated at all." [90]

Testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee that there was no justiciable controversy where private citizens "as in the case of Tatum v. Laird," sought to enjoin executive branch information gathering but there had been no threat of compulsory process and was no pending action by the Government against them.[91]

Testimony before the Ervin Subcommittee that the specific types of military surveillance activities complained of by the plaintiffs in the Tatum case—e.g., surveillance of political rallies, taking of photographs of participants, development of dossiers on their political activities and beliefs—did not constitute violations of constitutional rights.[92]

Involvement in the custody of the Army computer printout—a key item of evidence containing information on the political activities of individuals and groups that would have been introduced at trial in the District of Columbia if the remand from the Court of Appeals to the District Court had been sustained in the Supreme Court.[93]

Any of these factors, taken separately, could be ground for discretionary qualification. Taken together, they present a picture of an extraordinarily close relationship between Justice Rehnquist and one of the parties to the case—i.e., the Government, represented by Justice Department lawyers who were arguing, in court and in their briefs, the same legal position that Mr. Rehnquist had developed and publicly articulated as head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel. Even assuming that recusal was not mandatory in these circumstances, and exercise of discretion that resulted in his participation in the Laird v. Tatum decision suggects a gross insensitivity to the appearance of fairness and justice.

V. THE ULTIMATE ISSUES: CANDOR, INTEGRITY, AND THE POSITION OF CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

In a 1973 speech to the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Justice Rehnquist discussed the subject of judicial disqualification as an aspect of judicial ethics.[94] Without specifically mentioning his own actions in Laird v. Tatum, he developed a set of arguments similar to that made in his memorandum justifying his decision not to disqualify himself in that case. The closing paragraph of his address contained the following observation:

"Far more important than unanimity as to particular standards of disqualification is the recognition that outside of the area of corruption or reasonable suspicion of improper motives, disqualification is an issue to be decided by rational application of the governing standards to the facts of the case in a lawyer-like way." [95]

Rational application of the governing standards to the facts of the case requires, of course, that relevant facts affecting the disqualification issue be set forth for analysis "in a lawyer-like way." In the case of Laird v. Tatum, only some of the facts were already in the public record and known to the plaintiffs at the time they made their motion for recusal. The facts that were probably most significant—those relating to Mr. Rehnquist's role, as head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, in negotiations with the Army and in development of Justice Department policy concerning allocation of responsibility for collection of raw intelligence data on civilian activities—were totally unknown to the plaintiffs when the case was pending in the Supreme Court and when they made their motion for recusal. Indeed, the fact that Mr. Rehnquist had been involved in the policy development process with respect to military surveillance activities did not become a matter of public record until 1974,[96] and has only come to public attention as a result of the hearings on his nomination to become Chief Justice.

In his 1972 memorandum denying the recusal motion, Justice Rehnquist made no mention of his role in the policy development process during 1969. His discussion in that memorandum of his public statements concerning the Tatum case before joining the Supreme Court did not set forth any of the specific references to the case he had made before the Ervin Subcommittee. When asked about his participation in the Tatum case at the 1986 Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, he explicitly denied having any knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts and indicated that he had no knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts and indicated that he had no knowledge about the military's domestic surveillance policies prior to the spring of 1971.[97]

What is to be made of the apparent contradictions between Justice Rehnquist's statements on these subjects and the facts as they appear in the public record? A number of different inferences can be drawn, but one thing seems clear: before a Senate vote is taken on his nomination to become Chief Justice, the serious questions raised by these inconsistencies need to be fully explored.

Among the many questions that should be addressed with respect to this issue are the following:

What was the nature and extent of Mr. Rehnquist's role in the Justice Department's negotiations with the Army's Office of General Counsel in March and April of 1969, concerning the allocation of domestic intelligence collection responsibilities between the departments?

How did the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel become involved in these negotiations? What were Mr. Rehnquist's instructions in this area from Attorney General Mitchell and Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst?

What instructions did Mr. Rehnquist give to members of his staff in the Office of Legal Counsel regarding issues in the negotiations? What (if any) discussions did he personally have with Mr. Jordan or others in the Army's Office of General Counsel?

What review, editing, or other functions did Mr. Rehnquist perform with respect to the March 25, 1969 draft memorandum prepared by members of his staff in the Office of Legal Counsel? What role, if any, did he have with respect to subsequent revisions of this draft before it was sent to the President for approval?

These questions are now relevant not because of what they may reveal about Mr. Rehnquist's past views about surveillance policy but, more importantly, because answering them will help reveal information about the full extent of his knowledge about and participation in the process of formulating (or continuing) Justice Department policy regarding Army involvement in domestic surveillance of civilian activities.

As matters now stand, it appears that Mr. Rehnquist has failed to disclose material facts about his involvement in that process, both in his 1972 memorandum on the disqualification issue and in his 1986 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The position of Chief Justice of the United States is both the highest judicial office in the land and a symbol of this nation's commitment to justice under law. Regardless of what a Chief Justice's legal views and ideological predilections may be, the American people—including members of the bar and the judiciary—have the right to expect that the Chief Justice is a person of candor and integrity. It is possible that the doubts on this score that are raised by the inconsistencies between Justice Rehnquist's statements and the public record can be resolved in his favor through a more searching examination of the facts than has thus far been made. Clearly, however, the Senate and the American public need to learn the full facts about his role in military surveillance policy and his participation in this Laird v. Tatum decision.

In May the Army discovered that the Justice Department in its final retyping had omitted a paragraph. The Army called this omission to the attention of the Office of Legal Counsel, which checked and determined that the omission was purely inadvertent. On June 2, the Army wrote to Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst suggesting that the Presidential order be treated as if it included the omitted paragraph. [27] Overall, the amount of information collected and stored during the 1968-70 period was enormous. The Army apparently had over 350 separate records centers containing files on civilian political activities. In one such center, at Fort Sam Houston, in Texas, there was the equivalent of over 120,000 file cards on "personalities of interest." While considerable duplication of files undoubtedly existed, the staff of the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights was probably conservative in estimating that in 1970 Army intelligence had reasonably current files on the political activities of at least 100,000 individuals not affiliated with the armed forces. At least two of the Army's data banks had the capacity for cross-reference among "organizational," "incident," and "personality" files, thus providing the technical capacity to produce correlations of persons, organizations, political activities, and addresses—virtually instantaneously, Subcommittee Staff Report, pp. 96-97, 196.

Senator Ervin argued the case on behalf of the Unitarian Universalist Association as amicus curiae. Senator Ervin's views on Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum are set forth in strong terms in the 1974 hearings: ". . . the only reason that you have the decision in that case is because the attorney who had represented the Department of Justice and defended the Army spying before this committee and who had voluntarily stated before this committee that the Tatum case had no merits, insisted on sitting on the case in violation of a canon of ethics which said no judge should sit on a case in which he has been a lawyer." (p. 114).

[61] Public Law 93-512 (1974); further amended by Public Law 95-598 (1978). As amended, the statute requires disqualification of a justice "in any proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned" and "where he has served in governmental employment and in such capacity participated as counsel, adviser or material witness concerning the proceedings or expressed an opinion concerning the merits of the particular case in controversy."

[62] 409 U.S. 824, 828. Justice Rehnquist acknowledged that plaintiffs were "substantially correct" in characterizing him as having been an "expert witness" but apparently did not regard this as relevant to whether he had been a material witness.

[63] See, e.g., United States v. Smith, 337 F.2d 49 (4th Cir. 1964). In this situation the lower federal courts have held that a judge is not a material witness within the meaning of the statute because of his or her prior judicial involvement at an earlier stage of the case. Ibid. Even here, however, the courts have indicated that disqualification is often "a rule of good practice." United States v. Hughes, 325 F.2d 789 (2d Cir.) cert. denied, 377 U.S. 907 (1964). The language in the Hughes case indicating that section 455 does not apply to situations in which the judge "might be" a witness but only to cases in which a judge "is a witness" may be relevant to prior involvement in the case as a judge but clearly would not be correct if applied to nonjudicial involvement. A judge who was one of 20 witnesses to a murder would clearly seem disqualified by the statute whether he was actually called as a witness or not.

I take it you will give the committee access to that document and allow us to copy the names of persons that were under surveillance by the Army." [A letter to the U.S. Senate From American Law Professors on the Confirmation of Justice Rehnquist]

We the undersigned members of the law teaching profession ask that the Senate of the United States weigh with especially solemn deliberation the nomination of Justice William Rehnquist as Chief Justice. We ask this for two reasons.

First, it will take a conscious effort to resist the tendency to accept as determinative the 13-5 vote of the Judiciary Committee. The unanimous vote of the same Committee in favor of Judge Scalia proves that the opposition to Justice Rehnquist was not, as has been asserted, based solely on politically or ideologically motivated grounds. Five votes against a sitting Justice is really reason for pause. The conscience-searching questions that Senator Leahy wrestled with are matters that every Senator must, in fidelity, decide upon alone in a quiet place and time, away from the political arena. We ask therefore that each of you resist the political push and decide this most important appointment of all as a matter of individual conscience.

The second reason that we ask for this extraordinary personal effort from every single Senator, even those who voted favorably in Committee, is related to the first. As teachers we are troubled by a growing cynicism among our students, particularly with respect to ethics in government. Paradoxically, in the post-Watergate period, proof of statutory crime is becoming the standard by which we measure the highest officials of the land. This perception must be changed. If history and tradition are guides, the Senate and the Judiciary are the institutions that can best signal that change. In many respects then this very significant confirmation hearing has become a testing ground for the ethical standards of this nation.

The questions that have been raised about Chief Justice designate William Rehnquist are varied. Nevertheless there is a common and disturbing thread that runs through all of the matters that have been raised at the hearings. That common thread pertains to the integrity and ethical standards of the nominee. And taking the character measure of judicial candidates is the primary duty of the Senate under the Advice and Consent clause.

The doubts that have been expressed about Justice Rehnquist's fitness arise not only from the particular charges of improper behavior but also from the responses in each instance the nominee has made to the charges. These charges and the responses are summarized below.

(1) First there is the response to the charges of voter harassment in the Arizona elections. In his testimony at the recent hearings and after the first confirmation hearing Mr. Rehnquist claimed that he had not personally challenged a voter on literacy grounds and that in any event literacy challenges were then legal under Arizona law. But the testimony against him and his own admissions establish that he at least knew what was going on and participated in some manner in the strategy of challenging voters at the polling places. Such strategy was bound to and indeed did involve intimidation and delay, as witnesses testified. Nevertheless, to this day Justice Rehnquist sees little wrong with what took place there because no technical violation of the law had been proven. There is a question of moral obtuseness in this response that we ask our Senators to reflect upon as they consider the other charges that have been raised.

(2) With respect to the restrictive convenants it is not a matter of what he did or failed to do, but likewise a question of his response to the existence of such obnoxious clauses. One response he made was that the clauses were unenforcible, again revealing a lack of appreciation for the ethical and symbolic dimensions of law. But he also said that he did not know of the existence of these clauses, an explanation that was only plausible if he had left the reading of his deeds to his lawyers. After the hearings however, he turned over a letter from one of his lawyers in which the restrictive covenant language was explicitly drawn to Justice Rehnquist's attention. This seemed to refute the Justice's testimony that he had no prior knowledge of the offensive language, or worse, it suggested that he felt compelled to correct his testimony because one of his lawyers was unwilling to accept the implied blame for failing to address the question of the restrictive convenants. We ask our Senators to consider what this initial willingness to implicitly shift blame to his lawyers for failing to do anything about such covenants in the deeds says about the integrity of the nominee.

(3) This same willingness to shift blame for an embarassment or a misdeed is also possibly revealed in the manner in which Justice Rehnquist responded to the questions about the memorandum opinion he drafted while clerking for Justice Robert Jackson. Notwithstanding the fact that there is no historic evidence that Justice Jackson ever supported the separate but equal doctrine, Mr. Rehnquist intimated that Jackson was considering a dissent in the Brown case. Holding the views expressed in that memorandum opinion in the fifties is not nearly as bad as disowning them and implied assigning them to someone of whose reputation the nominee, as a former clerk, should be solicitous. We ask once more that our Senators consult their collective experience about human behavior and apply this to the pattern of responses the candidate has made to the various charges brought against him.

(4) There have been charges by Justice Rehnquist's brother-in-law of a breach of ethics in connection with a trust fund. Such charges would be the basis of a bar committee investigation if lodged against an ordinary attorney. So far there has been no response from Justice Rehnquist and to the best of our knowledge no investigation by an official body.

(5) Lastly, in the light of the foregoing, we ask our Senators to review in close detail the explicit charge of the failure of judicial ethics arising from the refusal of Justice Rehnquist to disqualify himself in the case of Laird v. Tatum. Perhaps this is the most significant matter because in this instance the response to an ethical demand is largely set forth in the words of Justice Rehnquist for all to read and fairly judge.

In a memorandum submitted to the Judiciary Committee Professor Askin of Rutgers Law School has emphasized one basis for questioning the judicial ethics of the nominee. That basis was that testimony before the Ervin Committee by then Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist revealed that he had knowledge of or had formed an opinion about facts that were in dispute in Laird v. Tatum and were depositive of one of the questions before the Court. This point is clearly made by Professor Askin and we simply ask every Senator to study Professor Askin's submission with care. But there are two other points that require less careful study and these points raise serious questions of intellectual honesty.

When the subject of the Army surveillance of civilians came up at Mr. Rehnquist's first confirmation hearings he said that it would be improper for him to comment on issues involving the surveillance investigation because of his "lawyer-client relationship" with the President and Attorney General. Laird v. Tatum dealt specifically with the subject of the Army surveillance of civilians yet Justice Rehnquist stated his relationship to the subject under review very differently in his recusal opinion. There he said "that my total lack of connection with . . . the case of Laird v. Tatum does not suggest discretionary disqualification here because of my previous relationship with the Justice Department." Although Mr. Rehnquist declined to testify before the Senate Committee, once on the Court he had no difficulty deciding a case that dealt with the very subject for which he had claimed an attorney-client privilege.

The same issue of intellectual honesty appeared even more plainly perhaps in another portion of his recusal opinion. Justice Rehnquist dismissed the applicability of the Canons for "Standards of Judicial Conduct" by describing them as "not materially different from the standards enunciated in the [federal disqualification] statute." The statute, in pertinent part, required disqualification in any case where a justice "has a substantial interest, [or] has been of counsel or has been a material witness." The Canons, which were not set forth in the opinion, in pertinent part state: "A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned including but not limited to instances where: (a) he has . . . personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding; (b) he served as a lawyer in the matter in controversy . . . ." We ask the Senators whether under any interpretation of language these two standards honestly can be described as "not materially different."

The matters that appear on the face of the Laird v. Tatum disqualification case as well as the responses to all the other matters previously summarized are not political attacks nor are they trivial. Each of them relate directly to the central issues of integrity, honesty and character. Whatever the outcome of the confirmation vote, Mr. Justice Rehnquist will sit on the Supreme Court. The ultimate question that each Senator must answer is whether Justice William Rehnquist, in the words of Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct of the American Bar Association, has conducted "himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." If a Senator entertains the slightest doubt on that question with respect to the nominee for the highest judicial post in the land we humbly ask that consent be withheld and the President be advised to submit the name of a candidate who unequivocally meets the demanding standards the people have the right to expect.

REHNQUIST QUIET OVER TRUST, ILL BROTHER-IN-LAW CONTENDS

(By Marcia Chambers)

LOS ANGELES, August 14.—The disabled brother-in-law of William H. Rehnquist maintains the Supreme Court Justice acted unethically by failing for more than 20 years to tell him about a trust fund set up to help him through his illness.

The brother-in-law, Harold Dickerson (Dick) Cornell, who lives in San Diego and was a prosecutor there, said in an interview that Justice Rehnquist and other family members concealed the trust fund, from which they could benefit if Mr. Cornell did not collect. The fund was set up by Mr. Cornell's father.

The 73-year-old lawyer said he decided to tell his story because he wanted to prevent Justice Rehnquist from becoming Chief Justice of the United States. "I think he is too radically conservative, and from my experience in the trust case, I think he committed a serious breach of ethics," he said.

Some Cornell family members said Mr. Rehnquist and other family members followed their father's wishes when they concealed the trust from Dick Cornell because he spent money carelessly. After Mr. Rehnquist had left Pepperdine University in Malibu, where he had been teaching for two weeks, a spokesman there, Larry Bumgardner, vice president for university communications, said the Justice would have no comments until after the confirmation proceedings had finished.

Lawyers are bound by standards of professional conduct, that if violated, may result in disciplinary charges. Several legal scholars said Justice Rehnquist as a lawyer was obligated to disclose the existence of the trust, particularly if it was not being administered properly. Others were not so sure.

A DUTY TO ACT

Stephen Gillers, professor of legal ethics at New York University law school and the author of a book on legal ethics, said Mr. Rehnquist had a duty to act "because he had a surviving duty of loyalty to his client," his father-in-law, "and because fraud could have occurred given the length of time the trust went unreported," he said.

"His failure to act when he personally stands to gain by the failure is especially wrong," Professor Gillers said.

According to the trust, drawn up by Mr. Rehnquist in 1961, when he was a lawyer practicing in Phoenix, Mr. Cornell, who has multiple sclerosis, was to receive funds from the $25,000 trust whenever he "was unable to provide for himself in the manner to which he was accustomed."

Mr. Rehnquist, who is married to Mr. Cornell's youngest sister, Natalie, drew up the trust fund at the request of his dying father-in-law, Dr. Harold Davis Cornell, a San Diego physician. Dick Cornell said that a year later, when he was 49 years old and earning about $50,000 a year, he as forced to retire because of his debilitating illness.

FUNDS BASED ON LIVING STANDARD

The trust says funds were to be paid to Mr. Cornell whenever his standard of living fell below the level he maintained when the trust was written. His brother, George, was named trustee.

Dick Cornell said he was poverty stricken soon after retiring.

"I was in serious circumstances," he said. "It reached the point where I was making stew out of dog bones. At that time I was able to walk with crutches, and I didn't expect to live very long. I rented a small place. The rent was $68 a month and I used the remainder of my $96 in social security benefits to eat."

Mr. Cornell said he learned about the existence of the trust only in 1982, when his brother, George, died and one of his sisters was supposed to take his place as trustee. Her lawyer told her to inform him, he said.

Over its 21 years the $25,000 trust grew by $10,000, a fact that Mr. Cornell said astounded him. He said the documents he had received so far did not explain why the funds did not appreciate more. Professor Gillers said the trustee or his estate was answerable for that. "If Rehnquist was aware of this fact he had a duty to investigate and to blow the whistle if he found malfeasance," Professor Gillers said. "It is quite remarkable."

Mr. Cornell said at one point that his financial condition was so precarious that he asked his family at a yearly reunion if he could get funds from another family trust fund set up by his parents for emergency use and for education.

"Bill was at that meeting," Mr. Cornell said. "He certainly knew about my trust and he knew I was disabled and in serious financial straits. Bill and the others decided I didn't have the right to the emergency trust fund even though I was 100 percent disabled. And they never said, 'Hey, you have your own trust.'"

"How could I squander trust money?" Mr. Cornell asked, "It's ridiculous."

REHNQUIST RELATIVE SAYS JUSTICE KEPT TRUST FUND SECRET

(By Jim Schachter)

SAN DIEGO.—A disgruntled relative says that Supreme Court Justice William H. Rehnquist joined other family members in concealing from him for two decades the existence of a trust fund from which the justice stood to gain financially if the bedridden brother-in-law did not collect its proceeds.

Experts in legal ethics say that Rehnquist's role in the family financial matter placed him in a murky area of professional responsibility and constituted at least a technical conflict of interest, although they disagreed about the seriousness of the ethical dilemma. Some experts said that Rehnquist was obliged as a lawyer to have disclosed the existence of the trust.

The relative, Harold Dickerson (Dick) Cornell, 73, a former San Diego prosecutor who is disabled by multiple sclerosis, said he was telling his story about Rehnquist's involvement with the $25,000 trust because he does not want the conservative Rehnquist to become chief justice. Cornell says he is a liberal.

REFUSES TO COMMENT

Rehnquist refused to comment on the allegations. "It would be inappropriate for Justice Rehnquist to comment on the matter in the midst of his confirmation hearings," a spokesman said.

However, other family members said that they and Rehnquist simply were following the wishes of Cornell's late father in concealing the trust fund from Cornell, who they feared would not spend the money wisely. One of Cornell's sisters discounted his claims of ethical wrongdoing, saying that the disabled former lawyer nursed a long-standing grudge against Rehnquist and others in the family.

But the trust document itself, drawn up by Rehnquist in 1961 for his dying father-in-law, states explicitly that funds were to be paid to Cornell whenever his standard of living fell below the level he maintained when the trust was written—a time when Cornell had a successful private legal practice. The document says nothing about keeping the trust a secret from him.

In an interview at his small home in the Ocean Beach section of San Diego, Cornell said: "I'm not looking for sympathy or condolence at all. But I think Bill (Rehnquist) is a threat. He's a threat to our nation. I know how reactionary he is."

CRANSTON INVESTIGATING

The office of Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) is investigating the allegations, according to Harold Gross, an aide to the senator.

Rehnquist has been married for nearly 33 years to Cornell's sister Natalie. In 1961 when Rehnquist was in private practice in Phoenix, his father-in-law, Dr. Harold Davis Cornell, asked him to draw up a trust benefiting his disabled son, according to Cornell.

Probate documents filed in San Diego County Superior Court state that the income from the $25,000 trust was to be paid to Dick Cornell if he was "unable to provide for himself in the manner to which he (was) accustomed."

The trustee, Cornell's brother George, was authorized by the document to begin liquidating the $25,000 principal of the trust if the income alone was not enough to meet the disabled man's needs.

Cornell's debilitating illness forced him to retire in 1962. And though family members knew, he says, that he was living much of the time on a meager income from disability insurance and Social Security payments, he was not made aware of the existence of the trust until January, 1982, shortly after the death of his brother George. When his sister Ruth Sawday was to succeed her brother as trustee, her lawyer advised her to inform Cornell of the trust's existence, according to another of the sisters, Mary Cornell.

GIVES MOST MONEY AWAY

Cornell ultimately received $35,000, the amount that has accumulated in the trust, in March, 1982. He purchased a hospital bed and motorized scooter for use at home, Cornell said, and gave most of the money away to his children and other people.

His brother George, the longtime trustee, was responsible for distributing the money, Dick Cornell said, But Rehnquist discussed Dick Cornell's condition with other family members, according to Mary Cornell. He was the only attorney in the family who knew about the trust.

Dick Cornell contends that Rehnquist had a special ethical duty as a lawyer to alert him to the existence of the trust. He also contends that Rehnquist had a conflict of interest in connection with the trust.

If Cornell had died, the trust directed that the money be divided among his children, his brother and his five sisters, including Rehnquist's wife. Cornell therefore contends that Rehnquist and his wife had a financial interest in concealing the existence of the trust.

EXPERTS SEE DILEMMAS

Experts in legal ethics agreed that the circumstances pose ethical dilemmas, but they disagree about whether Rehnquist had breached any of the legal profession's standards of professional conduct. The experts were asked to react to the facts of the case initially without knowing that Rehnquist was involved in the transactions.

Geoffrey Hazard, a professor at Yale Law School, said precedents in California law have established a duty for attorneys to heed the interests of the intended beneficiary of a will.

Those rulings set up a standard for the handling of trusts such as the one drafted by Rehnquist for Cornell's benefit, according to Hazard, who compiled the current edition of the American Bar Assn.'s model rules of professional conduct.

"There would be a pretty good case in saying the lawyer in question had an obligation, if he knew the person was destitute . . . to do something other than just keep quiet," Hazard said. "There would be a real problem about his duty if he knew about this trust condition and knew about the state of that brother. It's not a very pleasant matter."

A legal ethics expert and professor at a California law school who asked not to be named said that an attorney in Rehnquist's position would be obligated either to tell Cornell about the existence of the trust or to tell his brother George, the trustee, that he might have been flouting the trust's intentions by withholding payments.

Other ethics experts said that the obligation to expose the existence of the trust falls to the trustee, not the lawyer who drew up the document. Frank Sander, a professor at Harvard Law School, said a lawyer who contradicts his client's wishes for secrecy by disclosing the existence of a trust could be held to have breached the attorney-client relationship. This would be the case even if the request was not included in the document.

The law professors all said that there is a clear conflict of interest for a lawyer in drawing up a trust from which he could benefit, indirectly, through his wife. But they disagreed about whether the conflict constituted any sort of ethical shortfall.

Stephen Gillers, a professor at New York University Law School, said there is always a conflict when an attorney has a self-interest in a document he is drafting. But the conflict could be overcome if the lawyer fully disclosed to his client—in this case Rehnquist's dying father-in-law—that there was a potential conflict and that it might be advisable to contact a disinterested attorney, said Gillers, co-author of a text on legal ethics.

Thomas D. Morgan, former dean of the Emory University Law School in Atlanta, noted that lawyers often draw up legal documents for family members and that the only way to avoid the attendant conflicts is not to draft family legal papers in the first place.

Other experts, though, dismissed the conflict for a lawyer in Rehnquist's position as a niggling concern. Charles Wolfram, a professor at Cornell University Law School, said: "Technically, it's a conflict of interest. Whether it's an impermissible one—I find that highly unlikely, because it's so obvious to everyone."

Other family members rejected Cornell's contentions of wrongdoing, saying he was emotionally unstable because of his long illness and motivated to lash out at Rehnquist by anger.

Mary Cornell, of San Diego, said Rehnquist and other family members were following her father's wishes by concealing the existence of the trust from her brother. "Dick has been unable to hold money all his life," she said Wednesday. "Father felt if Dick knew about it, he'd just spend it and it was intended for his terminal illness."

Rehnquist's contact with her brother had been minimal during the years the trust was hidden. "I don't imagine he thought much about it," she said.

But family members knew Dick Cornell "was in bad straits," she added. "I would go over to have dinner at his house," she recalled. "He'd tell me how thrifty he was, how he'd make a stew and it would last a whole week. I thought that was fine. I was recently divorced and I couldn't help him much."

TRANSCRIPT OF AUGUST 27, 1986

This is morning edition, I'm Bob Edwards. Four Senate Democrats are asking for a further FBI investigation of charges that Chief Justice designate William Rehnquist acted unethically while he was a lawyer in private practice. The charges concern the trust fund that had been set up to benefit Rehnquist's brother-in-law. NPR legal affairs correspondent Nina Totenberg reports.

TOTENBERG. Justice Rehnquist has been married for nearly 33 years to the former Natalie Cornell. When Rehnquist was a private lawyer in 1961 his father-in-law asked him to draw up a trust to benefit one of Natalie's brothers, Dick Cornell, who was disabled with multiple sclerosis. The trust was to be paid to Dick Cornell, "If he was unable to provide for himself in the manner to which he was accustomed." Shortly after the trust was drawn up the senior Mr. Cornell died, and some months later Dick Cornell was forced by his illness to retire from his practice as a trial lawyer. Now, Dick Cornell is charging that Rehnquist conspired with other family members to keep the trust a secret from him for 20 years while he, Cornell, lived at times in severe poverty.

Senators Howard Metzenbaum, Edward Kennedy, Alan Cranston, and Paul Simon, have asked for an FBI investigation of the matter. Dick Cornell is now 73 and bedridden. He says when he retired at age 49 he was earning about $50,000 a year, but a divorce and his illness soon wiped him out. And while he says he lived often with little to eat, he did not know that his father had set up a trust fund for him.

CORNELL. For a large stretch of that time I lived on $96 a month from Social Security. I wasn't eating regularly for at least a year. I was in financial straits and the whole family knew, that included Bill and Nan who were there. My sister and Rehnquist.

TOTENBERG. You had a family meeting over this?

CORNELL. We had a number of them, yeah. I told them what my circumstances were, and how I was living on stew and ate out of dog bowls and so forth and they thought that was funny.

TOTENBERG. How did you finally find out about the trust?

CORNELL. My brother who was the trustee, died in '81 and they had to get an appointment of a new trustee and since I was the main beneficiary I had to receive a notice of the motion of the court to reappoint a trustee. That's the only way I found out.

TOTENBERG. Cornell says he hired a lawyer, threatened to sue his family, and the money was turned over. The Los Angeles Times first reported the Cornell story and quoted another sister, Mary Cornell, as saying that Rehnquist and other family members were simply following their father's wishes in keeping the trust a secret. "Dick has been unable to hold onto money all his life," she is quoted as saying. "Father felt if Dick knew about it he would just spend it and it was intended for his terminal illness." Dick Cornell responds this way.

CORNELL. You can't be a spendthrift of the trust if the only money you get is what the trustee gives you. I've never been a spendthrift, but the story my sisters have brewed up—uh, uh—and the story of his wanting it to be a secret, is a story they brewed up to protect their position.

TOTENBERG. The trust was originally $25,000, by the time you finally got it some 20 or more years later it was $35,000.

CORNELL. Very interesting, don't you think? Depend(ing) on the bank it would have been $100,000.

TOTENBERG. That's what the accrued interest would have added up to?

CORNELL. Sure. Run in T bills it'd been—I'd figure—$115 thousand, something like that.

TOTENBERG. Now you know, everybody listening to us, as they eventually will hear part of this, anyway, will say to themselves, oh these family situations are just excruciating. You can just never know what the truth is. There's always somebody in the family who is just terribly difficult. How can we know what the truth really is? And should we really rest a case against a nominee for Chief Justice on a family feud?

CORNELL. Of course, that's the great—and I think that he is so conservative reactionary that it is a danger to the Supreme Court, but in addition to that the fact that, uh, that Bill knew that he drew the trust, he knew it, that he knew my circumstances, that he was in false relation with the family who were committing a serious breach of trust, now that is a serious violation to breach a trust. He knew it and he did nothing to, uh, break it, and of course the fact that he was a party at interest, it gives it an awful bad omen.

TOTENBERG. If Dick Cornell had not received the trust funds they would have gone upon his death to his siblings including Rehnquist's wife. For this reason a number of legal ethics experts have said Rehnquist had a conflict of interest. But the experts do not agree on whether the conflict is a major breach of ethical conduct. Some specialists in legal ethics also have said that in circumstances such as these with Dick Cornell proverty stricken and ill, Rehnquist had an obligation to reveal the existence of the trust. Other experts say the obligation belonged to the trustee. The FBI conducted a limited investigation of the Cornell charges before the Senate Judiciary Committee voted earlier this month to approve the Rehnquist nomination by a vote of 13 to 5. Now, with the full Senate preparing for a vote on the Rehnquist nomination next month, four Democratic Senators have asked for a more thorough investigation to resolve what they say are unanswered questions about whether Rehnquist actually knew about Dick Cornell's desperate economic condition and whether Rehnquist knew of the decision to keep the trust a secret from Cornell. Rehnquist has had no comment on the Cornell matter. I'm Nina Totenberg in Washington.

SCHOOL OF LAW,

Hon. HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM: Your office has requested my opinion regarding the ethical propriety of certain conduct of William Rehnquist, currently a Justice of the United States Supreme Court whom President Reagan has nominated to be Chief Justice of the United States.

I am a professor of law at New York University, where I have been teaching since 1978. Prior to that, I was in the private practice of law for nine years and a law clerk to a United States District judge for one year. I teach professional and judicial ethics. I have written scholarly articles on the subject and articles for the popular press as well. I am also co-author of a casebook in professional responsibility entitled Regulation of Lawyers: Problems of Law and Ethics. I have served as an expert witness in several tribunals on issues of professional legal ethics. From 1980–83, I was a member of the lawyer disciplinary committee in Manhattan. In 1979–82, I was a member of the Committee on Professional and Judicial Ethics of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

The incident about which you inquire concerns Justice Rehnquist's creation of a trust document for his father-in law, Howard Cornell, while Justice Rehnquist was a lawyer in private practice. The trust is dated November 28, 1961. Apparently, the trust was created in California, where Howard Cornell lived. I do not know if Justice Rehnquist was then a member of the California Bar or whether, for some other reason, he was authorized to prepare this document for a California citizen. If a lawyer practices law where he or she is not admitted to do so, the lawyer may violate state laws against unauthorized law practice and, as well, Canon 47 of the Canons of Professional Ethics, which was the American Bar Association document governing a lawyer's conduct in 1961.

Mr. Cornell wished to make the trust in order to provide for a disabled son, Harold Cornell. I have read the trust instrument. Essentially, it requires the trustee to pay Harold and his children from the income of the trust in the event that they are unable to support themselves in the manner to which they were accustomed as of the date of the trust instrument. The trustee of the trust is George Cornell, another son of Mr. Cornell.

The instrument also gives fairly broad authority to George to invade principal in the event of the same contingency and on behalf of the same beneficiaries.

The trust was funded with $25,000. Money not distributed to Harold or his children was to go to Mr. Cornell's seven children, including Justice Rehnquist's wife Natalie.

Mr. Cornell died September 7, 1962. George died in October 1981. Harold was not told of the existence of the trust for the twenty years between its creation and the death of George. After George's death, another daughter of Mr. Cornell, Ruth Sawday, petitioned to be substituted as trustee. Harold was served with the petition. Only then (in early 1982) did Harold learn of the trust.

Harold has asserted that the condition for the distribution of the income and principal—his inability to support himself in the manner to which he had been accustomed—had occurred. Indeed, he has alleged that his financial condition became desparate and that Justice Rehnquist was aware of it.

Assuming Harold is telling the truth, what if anything were Justice Rehnquist's responsibilities?

Justice Rehniquist had a potential conflict of interest when he drew the trust. The less money that went to Harold, or the less likely Harold was to get the money, the more that would be left for the other children, including Justice Rehnquist's wife Natalie. Justice Rehnquist had a duty to inform his father-in-law, who was his client, about this conflict and to explore with him the possibility of retaining disinterested counsel. If Justice Rehnquist fulfilled this responsibility and his father-in-law nevertheless wished Justice Rehnquist to prepare the document, then assuming it was not the unauthorized practice of law, Justice Rehnquist could ethically have done so. In other words, Justice Rehnquist's conflict is one Mr. Cornell, if fully informed, could have waived.

If after the death of Mr. Cornell, Justice Rehnquist became aware that the trust's condition for distribution of income or principal had occurred and that, nevertheless, George (the trustee) had distributed no money to Harold, Justice Rehnquist had a duty at least to investigate and, if he discovered that George was violating his fiduciary duty under the document Justice Rehnquist drew, to take steps to rectify the situation.

Justice Rehnquist owed this duty to his father-in-law and to Harold, the object of his client's concern. Justice Rehnquist could not ethically remain silent once he had reason to know that his client's fiduciary was ignoring his obligations to the detriment of his client's beneficiary.

Although two successive documents have governed the conduct of lawyers between 1961, when the trust was drawn, and 1982, when it was revealed to Harold, and although these documents vary in their exact language from state to state, both share the principle that a lawyer must not fail to seek the lawful objectives of his client or fail to carry out a contract of employment entered into with a client. See, e.g., Code of Professional Responsibility DR 7-101(A)(1), (2). Both also forbid a lawyer to favor his own interests over those of his client. See, e.g., A.B.A. Code, Canon V.

California has long recognized that an attorney for the maker of a will owes certain duties to the beneficiary of the will as well. See, e.g., Lucas v. Hamm, 364 P.2d 685, 689 (Sup. Ct. 1961). (Mr. Cornell's trust, though inter vivos, had a testamentary purpose.) The California rule is one example of the general proposition that a lawyer for a client may owe duties to nonclients, despite the absence of a direct relationship between himself and the nonclients. This rule varies from state to state but courts often invoke it, including in California, when the lawyer's client retains the lawyer for the very purpose of benefiting the nonclient. Mr. Cornell intended to benefit his son Harold. Justice Rehnquist owed certain duties to Harold and among them, in my opinion, the duty to take action on learning that the trustee under Mr. Cornell's trust may have been violating his fiduciary duties to Harold's detriment.

This duty to Harold is simply a continuation of Justice Rehnquist's duty to his client, Mr. Cornell. If Mr. Cornell were still alive, and Justice Rehnquist became aware that the trustee was violating his trust, he could not remain silent. After Mr. Cornell's death, Justice Rehnquist had the same responsibility to his client's beneficiary, Harold. He either had to alert Harold to the possible breach of trust or to investigate and take steps to rectify the breach if it existed.

Inaction under these circumstances is further aggravated by the fact that Justice Rehnquist's wife stood to gain if the trust funds were not distributed to Harold or his children. Justice Rehnquist's wife would ultimately receive one-seventh of undistributed funds. Especially when a lawyer is in a conflict situation, as Justice Rehnquist was here, he must take special care to assure that the interests of his client (or his client's beneficiary), not his own or those of others, are protected.

I therefore conclude that if Justice Rehnquist was on notice that the trustee was violating his fiduciary duty, he was required to investigate and to take remedial measures if the investigation confirmed the violation.

Sincerely yours,

STEPHEN GILLERS,
Professor of Law.

REHNQUIST'S LAWYER URGED HIM TO NOTE DEED RESTRICTION

(By James Lyons)

Associate Justice William Rehnquist's lawyer in the 1974 purchase of a Vermont home said in an interview with Legal Times Friday that he had sent a letter to Rehnquist before the purchase advising him to read the property deed, including "the conditions set forth in the deed." One of those conditions was a covenant prohibiting sale or lease of the property "to any member of the Hebrew race."

According to the lawyer, David Willis of St. Johnsbury, Vt.'s three-lawyer Zuccaro, Willis & Bent, he sent Rehnquist a letter dated June 24, 1974, asking the associate justice to read the deed and its conditions. Willis, who said that Rehnquist gave him permission to discuss the matter publicly, read the letter to Legal Times.

The one-page letter, as read by Willis, includes the following language: "I would recommend that you examine closely the attached abstract copy of the deed of the main cottage property. . . . I would direct your attention particularly to the width of the right of way which would appear to be 20 feet and the conditions set forth in the deed."

Willis said a copy of the deed was attached to his letter, and added, "I wasn't calling particular attention to the covenant [restricting sale or lease of the property to members of the "Hebrew race"], but [the letter] was referring to all of the covenants—such as beach rights, mailboxes and so forth."

Willis said that he could not remember whether he discussed the restrictive covenant with Rehnquist. "I don't recall discussing [the covenant] with him," Willis said.

In confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on his nomination to become chief justice, Rehnquist said Wednesday that he was not aware of the restrictive covenant until it was brought to his attention by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and could not recall reading the deed on his Vermont home.

A spokeman in Rehnquist's Supreme Court office said Friday that the associate justice will not make any statements to the press until the confirmation process is completed.

Rehnquist purchased the Vermont property from John and Joan Castellvi. Counsel for the Castellvis was St. Johnsbury lawyer John Downs of Downs Rachlin & Martin. Downs said that both he and Willis were aware of the restrictive covenant at the time of the sale. Downs read to Legal Times an excerpt from a letter dated July 2, 1974, from Willis in which Rehnquist's lawyer said he had examined the deed.

According to Downs, the July 1974 letter states, "The property is also subject to restrictions relative to use, with the rights of way, construction on the various parcels, and ownership by members of the Hebrew race."

John Castellvi, one of the former owners of the Vermont property, is now living in Venezuela and was unavailable for comment at press time, according to Carlos Rabassa, executive vice president of New York's M. Castellvi, Inc., a company founded by John Castellvi's father.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC., August 4, 1986.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: After the conclusion of my testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee last week, review of my file on the purchase of my Vermont property disclosed the attached letter of July 2, 1974. As you can see, the letter is from my attorney, Mr. David Willis, to the seller's attorney, Mr. John Downs, and describes the condition of title, including a reference to the restrictive covenant about which I was asked at the hearing. While I do not doubt that I read the letter when I received it, I did not recall the letter or its contents before I testified last week.

By letter of July 31, 1986, I requested Mr. Willis to undertake the legal measures necessary to remove the restrictive covenant from the title of my Vermont property.

I would appreciate your providing a copy of this letter, with the attached correspondence, to all members of the Committee.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST,
Justice.

WITTERS, ZUCCARO, WILLIS & LIUM,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
St. Johnsbury, VT, July 2, 1974.

JOHN H. DOWNS, Esq.
Downs, Rachlin & Martin, St. Johnsbury, VT.

DEAR JOHN: I have examined the title to the Castellvi property in Greensboro.

I, of course, found that the property was subject to the mortgage to the Hardwick Trust and the usual lien for taxes. The property is also subject to restrictions relative to use, width of rights-of-way, construction on the various parcels, and ownership by members of the Hebrew Race. There is an more or less ancient mortgage given by Frank J. and Mira D. Chase to George N. Soule which mortgage was dated January 7, 1893 and recorded in Book I, Page 447 of the Greensboro Land Records in the original amount of $350.00. The mortgage was assigned from George N. Soule to Carrie Soule by an assignment dated April 23, 1893 and recorded in Book J. Page 392 of the Greensboro Land Records. The mortgage subsequently was discharged by the Hardwick Savings Bank. There is no evidence of any assignment from Carrie Soule to Hardwick Savings Bank. Although, this lack of assignment creates a gap in the title, I have advised Justice Rehnquist in view of the age and size of the mortgage that the gap can most probably be safely disregarded.

There is, however, one mortgage of somewhat more substantial size which is not discharged on the record. Vermont Summer Estate, Inc. which was a predecessor in title to the Castellvi's and Highland Lodge, Inc. gave a mortgage to J. E. Appolt, Melvin G. Morse, Elmer J. Mathews, Archie Cuthbertson, and John H. Barrington Dated March 23, 1933 and recorded in Book Q, Pages 52-53 of the Greensboro Land Records. The mortgage in question was to provide security for the five individuals in exchange for their co-signing notes for the Corporation totaling $17,500.00. The mortgage was attempted to be discharged by the signing on the margin thereof of J. E. Appolt, J. H. Barrington, and A. B. Cuthberston. The discharge as signed on the margin does not follow the statutory form in that it is completely unwitnessed. Furhermore, two of the five original mortgagees apparently did not sign. This incomplete and technically defective discharge of such a substantial mortgage was somewhat disturbing to my client. The mortgage in question was recorded in the Bound Volume and therefore I was unable to photocopy the pages. I will hopefully by the time you receive this have secured a copy from the Town Clerk's Office however. If at all possible the Justice would either like this cleared up or some adjustment made so that the financial burden of clearing it up in the future would not be his.

I have the signed contract which I am enclosing herein. The Justice was in Greensboro on the 26th and apparently inspected the property and found the condition satisfactory. I have arranged for financing at the Merchants Bank and pending the resolution of this matter set forth above relative to the Vermont Summer Estate's mortgage, the closing papers could be prepared.

Cordially yours,

DAVID L. WILLIS.●

ARKANSAS GOVERNOR CLINTON NAMED CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, the Governor of Arkansas, Bill Clinton, recently accepted the chairmanship of the National Governors' Association during its meeting at Hilton Head, SC.

The people of my State are proud of Governor Clinton and the leadership he has given Arkansas during his tenure. And we are proud that he has taken on this national responsibility at a crucial time in the development of our State and region.

In his acceptance speech, Governor Clinton spelled out several areas of importance to him and to the Governors' Association in the months and years ahead. To deal with these issues, he named five task forces that range from welfare reform to education, alcohol and drug abuse, and adult illiteracy. He emphasized that what we need is not reports but action.

Mr. President, I think the Members of this body would profit from Governor Clinton's emphasis on action and his insistence that all of us do more in these and other areas of concentration. It is an eloquent call to arms, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. It is my hope that colleagues on both sides of the aisle will read Governor Clinton's speech.

The speech follows:

BILL CLINTON, GOVERNOR OF ARKANSAS, CHAIRMAN, NATIONAL GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION

I accept the chairmanship of the National Governors' Association with gratitude and enthusiasm. Of all the pleasures which have been mine since I first became a governor in 1979, few match the opportunity to get to know, learn from and become friends with you and your predecessors who have been my colleagues. This year at least 19 governors will leave our ranks, a great loss to the rest of us individually and as an Association. We will miss you and we wish you well.

I want to thank Governor Alexander for his outstanding work in education this year and for his more general commitment to giving us the chance to work together in ways that will help us do our jobs better.

I pledge to continue the emphasis on working together to do better for our people.

If you have seen my fellow Arkansans in their T-shirts proclaiming "Bill Clinton is 40," you know I just had a birthday. This is a milestone or millstone year for the first of the baby boomers, the generation which was born and reared in the economically charmed if socially turbulent years after World War II, the generation which grew up taking the American dream for granted.

Today we know better. Today I come as the first of the "over the hill" baby boomers to ask: Can we make America work again for all her people? I believe we can, but only if we can find ways for Americans to be able to work and to have work.

After World War II, for the first time in our history, America stood alone as the dominant economic power in the world. Our adversaries and our allies were largely in ruins. They could not compete. Other nations which are today our competitors had primitive economies then. Some, like Taiwan and South Korea, did not even exist as nations in 1945.

Thus, we enjoyed three decades of unparalled and virtually unbroken growth and prosperity. In 1964 in the middle of this period, when I graduated from high school, we had low unemployment, low inflation, and high growth. The nuclear family was alive and well. Poverty was under attack and receding. And I did not know a person old or young, rich or poor, black or white, with or without an education who wanted to work but was out of a job. My grandfather who raised me until I was 4 had barely more than a grade school education but he was never out of work. My stepfather did not have a high school diploma but he was never out of work.

In my part of the country, the South, which had always been America's poorest region, we were living proof of John F. Kennedy's adage: "A rising tide lifts all boats." Between 1945 and 1978, our per capita income rose from 65 percent to 85 percent of the national average.

But all that has changed now.

Over the last decade, we have been pulled into a world ecomomy which we no longer dominate and for which we are still largely unprepared. While the percentage of our GNP directly tied to trade has grown to 13 percent, the reconstructed economies of Japan and Europe have had higher productivity growth than ours. Newly emerging economies have captured many of our former markets by providing quality products at labor costs we can't hope to match.

The long term consequences are alarming. From 1981 to 1986, 40 percent of the American people actually suffered a decline in their incomes. Productivity growth rates are still too low. The trade deficits remain astronomical in spite of the dollar drop against the yen and some other major currencies. In May and June, for the first time, in 27 years we actually had an agricultural trade deficit. About twenty states are suffering from severe deflation in farm and other primary products.

Parelleling these economic disruptions have been deep and troubling changes in the fabric of American society: a dramatic rise in the number of single parent households; latch key children; huge numbers of young women and children in poverty; millions of adults so illiterate they are unemployable; high rates of welfare dependency; teen pregnancy; school dropouts; and alcohol and drug abuse.

Of course the news is not all bad. The bicoastal economy is doing well. The urban heartland is doing well. Some of our most prosperous states like Massachusetts are even worried about impending labor shortages. We seem to be more serious than ever before in dealing with the social ills that cripple so many of our people, undermining the quality of life for all of us.

But the hard fact remains that unless we can do more with these economic and social problems which limit the ability of our people to work, we cannot preserve the American dream as we know it.

For the past few years we have focused on education as the key with which governors could unlock a brighter economic future for our people. Under Governor Alexander's leadership we have produced the 1991 Report and with it a commitment to continued education reform. I am pleased that Governor Kean has agreed to serve again as the lead Governor on Education and to work with us through both NGA and the Education Commission of the States to keep the flame burning.

But this year the Governors must do more. We must face squarely our responsibility to make Americans more competitive from the ground up and to reverse the tide of lost human potential in those who have fallen through the cracks in America's "leaky bucket".

I have asked Governors Dukakis, Baliles and Branstad of the Committees on Economic Development, Trade, and Agriculture to co-chair an effort to develop solid strategies for local and regional economic reforms, to recognize the very real differences among our regions and to take special account of the terrible crises in the rural heartland. Let me be clear: we do not need further studies. We have a wealth of excellent material outlining the dimensions of the problem. What I want are action plans and programs, like the Jobs for the Future program which Connecticut pioneered and Arkansas has followed or the Buy American program in Arkansas which we are implementing with the cooperation of all employers—foreign and domestic—who put our people to work. Most governors spend lots of time on economic development. We are all more sophisticated than we used to be in our job generating efforts. But we still have much to do to develop local and regional strategies which are really adequate for the competitive challenge we face. Of course there must be debate about what national policies we need to make every state and region competitive, but we should emphasize policies that will help us to help ourselves.

Finally and perhaps most importantly we need to come up with action plans that involve all states in bringing down the barriers to productive lives. We all say we want to promote work, not welfare; independence not dependence. Most of us have done some things toward that end. Now is the time for all of us to do more.

I will set up five forces to deal with major barriers to work. The strategic plan for welfare prevention developed by the Welfare Prevention Task Force which Governor Castle and I co-chaired, outlines these barriers for the welfare population. Governor Castle will head the welfare reform effort which is off to a great start thanks to the work of the Task Force and the Human Resources Committee hearing yesterday featuring Ken Auletta and four fine women who worked their way off welfare.

I will also have four other task forces concentrating on barriers which were outlined in the welfare prevention plan, but which affect a larger population. Governor Ashcroft will lead the Adult Illiteracy Task Force with a special emphasis on getting all of us to vigorously participate in the PSB/ABC attack on adult illiteracy.

Governor Thompson will lead the Task Force on Teen Pregnancy, building on the fine work he has done in Illinois and the excellent guidance provided by the Children's Defense Fund documents published a few months ago.

Governor Earl will head the Task Force on School Dropouts. It is unconscionable that dropout rates in this Nation cover a range from around 5 percent to 35 percent. Governor Earl will work with our lead governor on education, Tom Kean, and ECS on this project.

Finally, Governor Collins, the Vice-Chair of the Human Resources Committee, will head the Task Force on Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention as the Governors formally take up the challenge issued by the President and the demand of citizens back home to move aggressively to reduce the demand for deadly drugs. I think she will be an especially effective national spokesperson for us as we all face up to the problem we have sidestepped for too long.

Again I want to be clear. We don't want studies, we want action. These Task Forces will be charged with outlining action plans for the states to follow. Next August we'll publish a report on what we've already done as well as what we still need to do.

I really believe the American people are coming together on the issues of welfare prevention and economic competitiveness as we did on education a few years ago. Like education, they are issues of human renewal as well as economic necessity. Like education, they are matters of common sense. Like education they bring us together as a community, not a swarm of isolated individuals. America won't work if Americans can't work. There can be no American dream without the dreamers.

The governors have always believed we could make America work. Once again it is up to us to do our part.●

FARM MORTGAGE MARKETING RESTORATION ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2725, introduced by my distinguished colleague from California, which would establish a secondary market to help make long-term financing more affordable to farmers. This bill would allow secondary market entities to purchase mortgage loans from qualified agricultural lenders, repackage them as securities, and sell them in the capital market to institutional investors. This financing mechanism would shift the emphasis from costly direct lending to the Farmers Home Administration to lending through the guaranteed loan process via commerical banks. Many more commerical banks would be interested in long-term agricultural lending if there was a viable secondary market for those loans.

One of the major benefits of a secondary market for farm loans is liquidity for commerical banks that may want to make local loans, but do not have adequate funding to hold onto the loans. A secondary market will benefit farmers by bringing new money into the agricultural land lending business, increasing competition, and driving down interest rates. By being able to sell farm loans immediately into the secondary market, an agricultural bank can improve its capital, roll its funds over for new farm lending, and increase the aggregate fees it earns from origination and servicing of the loans.

S. 2725 makes it possible for there to be in depth discussions on how to make this concept viable in the Farm Credit System. We have already seen how the the creation of a secondary market has been successful in expanding the flow of credit in the U.S. mortgage market. It is my hope that this idea can be duplicated successfully for farm mortgage loans.

I urge my Senate colleagues to study this legislation carefully and to give it their full support. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this worthy legislation.●

THE NATIONAL APPLIANCE ENERGY CONSERVATION ACT OF 1986

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join as a cosponsor of S. 2781, the National Appliance Energy Conservation Act of 1986. I commend my distinguished colleague from Washington for his leadership on this issue.

During these times of low energy prices, it is easy to forget the crisis situations which afflicted this Nation in the recent past—and which may, unfortunately, beset us again in the future. But it is now, when times are good, that conservation measures should be implemented so that future shortages may be averted.

For many years, attempts to regulate appliance efficiency standards have been effective as a result of sometimes contradictory and, at the very least, uncoordinated efforts by State governments, appliance manufacturers, and energy conservationists. This lack of coordination has led to a squandering of valuable resources—a situation acceptable to none: States enacting differing standards; manufacturers forced to produce multiple versions to account for these individual standards; and conservationists frustrated by the preventable waste of our limited resources. But in the end it is the average consumer, both in the home and at work, who loses the most by having to pay for these unnecessarily high energy bills.

Today we have the opportunity to change this wasteful consumption. The National Appliance Energy Conservation Act is a proposal which marks the beginning of a new era of cooperation between manufacturers, conservationists, and the States.

For the appliance manufacturer, the establishment of national standards provides adequate time to develop new energy efficient products and reduces disruption of interstate commerce, hence eliminating expensive production costs of multistandard appliances.

While the National Appliance Energy Conservation Act will set nationwide standards, much care has been taken to respect the right of the individual State to regulate its own energy resources. I feel that this bill will create an element of predictability of energy consumption for State agencies and utilities. Furthermore, the bill contains exemptions for States faced with unforeseen special circumstances. I know that some States who support the intent and purpose of the bill would like to see specific modifications or clarifications, and I look forward to working with the chairman on the specific issues of concern to New York and other States.

For the conservation-minded citizen, this proposal establishes timetables for the Department of Energy to regulate nationwide energy consumption and to constantly revise these standards. It is clear that the resulting energy savings will enable us to avoid some of the costs, pollution, and hazards posed by having to construct new powerplants.

Most importantly, it is the consumer who will benefit most from this agreement. Lower energy bills will result in billions of dollars in savings for households and businesses alike.

Mr. President, I support this legislation because it is reasonable and mutually advantageous to all—manufacturers, conservationists, States, consumers, and the national economy. It is one of those measures which has for so long been necessary and is finally on its way to becoming a reality. I commend the participants in this accord for their wisdom and ability to compromise. The National Appliance Energy Conservation Act of 1986 is a proposal which will enable the Nation to prevent the repetition of past energy crises while ensuring consumption of our valuable resources for the future.●

YESHIVA UNIVERSITY'S CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, it is with great pride that I rise today to call the attention of the Senate and, indeed, the Nation to America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices: Yeshiva University. This year Yeshiva University celebrates its centennial as a multifaceted center of learning respected throughout the world for educational excellence, innovative research, and community service.

Yeshiva University's founding on the lower east side of New York City took place during the great waves of immigration which brought so many outstanding Americans to our shores. These immigrants found the best our country has to offer—a safe haven from persecution and an environment where hard work and dedication could lead to the fulfillment of seemingly impossible dreams.

It was such a vision, harbored by a small group of Eastern European Jewish immigrants, which brought forth Yeshiva University. The university's 100-year-old dream—the ideal of holding on to a cultural identity while preparing to serve in a pluralistic society—lives on in the hearts of new students who are preparing, with the aid of the most modern technology, to face the challenges of the 21st century.

Yeshiva University has evolved from one small school for boys to a network of 15 undergraduate, graduate, and affiliated schools at six centers in New York City, Los Angeles, and Jerusalem. Against a backdrop of two world wars, economic upheavals at home and abroad, and the changing face of American society, Yeshiva University stands as a living testament to the durability of a heritage thousands of years old and its place in our contemporary world.

The undergraduate colleges and graduate and professional schools of Yeshiva University offer programs leading to bachelor's, master's, and professional and doctoral degrees. In addition to extensive teaching programs, the university maintains a network of affiliates and conducts widespread research and community outreach programs and issues publications. It is also the home of Yeshiva University Museum, which has become one of the Nation's major showcases of Jewish art, architecture, and history, and seven libraries housing more than 850,000 volumes.

Roughly 7,000 students—of which 41 percent are women—attend the university and are taught by a full-time faculty of some 1,300. Nearly 30,000 degrees and diplomas have been awarded in the 100-year history of the institution. Distinguished alumni have lent their talents to all fields of endeavor, reflecting honor on the university for its role in their educational and personal development.

The story of Yeshiva University's first 100 years is the story of America itself: the dedication and the vision of immigrants to our shores, leaving a legacy of achievement and excellence for generations to come. Yeshiva University stands as testimony to the fulfillment of the American dream, while serving as a paradigm of 100 years of American Jewish history.

Mr. President, we salute Yeshiva University on the occasion of its 100th anniversary, and we congratulate an institution which is an inspiration to all Americans.●

THE JAPANESE CIGARETTE MARKET

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on August 15, I discussed in remarks in the Senate an important trade issue—the continuing denial of free and fair access for United States cigarette manufacturers in the Japanese cigarette market.

Since that time, the United States and Japan have been conducting bilateral negotiations on market access for United States cigarettes pursuant to the pending section 301 investigation. Unfortunately, these negotiations have shown scant progress, primarily due to the failure of the Japanese Government to recognize the serious obstacles that continue to deny our cigarette manufacturers the opportunity to compete in the Japanese market. The Japanese simply refuse to make any effort to remove the barriers once and for all.

Mr. President, the Japanese are now in Washington for additional discussions, which I hope will bring the many issues closer to resolution. In order to do so, however, the Japanese will have to move well beyond the purely token proposals they have put on the table to date.

For example, the Government of Japan is considering a reduction in the tariff on imported cigarettes. Clearly, a mere reduction in the tariff instead of its elimination would be unacceptable. As long as Japanese law perpetuates a monopoly on the manufacturing of cigarettes, any level of tariff is unacceptable because, first, it cannot be avoided; and second, it is magnified by the ad valorem nature of the tobacco excise tax in Japan.

Mr. President, Japan is unique among highly industrialized countries in its protection of the tobacco sector. While it is true that tariffs, excise taxes, and even monopolies on manufacturing exist in one form or another in various countries, no country of comparable stature to Japan maintains all three concurrently.

I must stress that as important as it is to resolve the tariff and tax inequities, there is a wide range of other issues that must be addressed before we can successfully resolve the 301 case. Most importantly, the resolution of these issues must be genuine. We will accomplish nothing if the Japanese are allowed to negate any benefit to our industry by increasing other barriers to market access.

In the past year, Congress has taken steps through the stabilization program to lower the price and increase sales of U.S. tobacco leaf, thereby making U.S. leaf more competitive on the world market and benefiting our growers. However, at the same time, Japan continues to buy United States leaf, which it needs to produce its own cigarettes, and import it on a tariff-free basis while refusing to permit the higher-value United States-manufactured products from competing in its market. In this case both U.S. leaf growers as well as our cigarette manufacturers are losing out.

Mr. President, many of us are running out of patience, and I am beginning to wonder just what it will take to get the Japanese Government to respond substantively on this issue. I am about to conclude that retaliation may indeed be the only avenue left to compel the Japanese to respond.

It is time for the Japanese to put an end to this unfair and discriminatory treatment. They must understand that they are playing a risky game by refusing to address the issues raised in the section 301 action, and they are grossly underestimating the severe consequences that will result if the unfair trade practices are not eliminated.●

SOVIET JEWRY

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, Anatoly Shcharansky, the great humanitarian who recently emigrated to Israel after years of imprisonment in the Soviet Union, has written an outstanding piece on linking Israeli concessions to the Soviet Union with freedom of emigration for Soviet Jews.

It is an excellent article that provides a blueprint for the entire free world to follow—if concessions are made to the Soviets, human rights must be part of the equation. In addition, the article gives us a test to allow us to self-judge whether we, as a nation, are truly committed to human rights for all the world's people or if our professed support of human rights is nothing more than a public posture.

We will be watching the negotiations between Israel and the Soviet Union carefully, but in the meantime, we should review our own beliefs and recommit ourselves to work for basic human rights for all.

I urge all of my colleagues to read the article by Mr. Shcharansky which I submit for the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 15, 1986]

SOVIET JEWRY: THE WORLD MUST NOT BE FOOLED BY "MENU 9A"

(By Anatoly Shcharansky)

JERUSALEM.—Israel's reaction to the Soviet call for negotiations on establishing bilateral consular relations will determine the fate of the worldwide effort to free Soviet Jewry. The success of that struggle is dependent on an uncompromising public Israeli position linking any progress on other issues—indeed, any willingness to negotiate on other issues—to the release of the 400,000 Soviet Jews who have indicated their desire to emigrate to Israel.

The wide-scale aliya—immigration to Israel—of Soviet Jews began after 1967, during a period when no diplomatic relations existed between Israel and the Soviet Union. The severing of diplomatic relations between Jerusalem and Moscow did not set the process in motion; both mass emigration and the break in relations did result, however, from a single source; the expression of Jewish national identity embodied in Israel's victory in the Six-Day War.

Pressure was exerted on the Soviet Union by Western governments, especially by the government of the United States. This pressure was not limited to a single trade operation; it became a conerstone of American policy in negotiating with the Soviet leadership.

Repression of the individual is a fundamental principle of a political system that sees the value of man as nothing more than an insignificant cog in a huge machine. This principle is protected by Soviet law—a law that was designed to guard "the system" that decides what the individual must read, what he must do, what his national and political feelings should be.

This fundamental principle on which the political culture of the Soviet dictatorship is founded was seriously challenged by the demand of Soviet Jews, whom official Soviet policy does not even recognize as a separate nation, to decide for themselves whether to live in the Soviet Union or to leave.

The fact that for a short time the Soviet government was willing to allow Soviet Jewish emigration, in spite of the threat it posed to the principles on which the regime is based, was not the result of a decision of the Soviet leadership to improve its public image. The sacrifice on the part of the Soviets was too great to be perceived as part of a gesture of good will.

Today, as then, the Soviets will not tolerate free aliya unless forced to do so. The Soviet Union will move significantly on the question of aliya only if it perceives the status quo to be more dangerous than a mass release of Russian Jewry. The free world has the potential to bring the Soviet leadership to this realization.

The Russian economy is stagnating, and the current Russian leadership is more conscious of the dangers of economic stagnation than any of its predecessors. Mikhail Gorbachev's public warning that the Soviet Union will lose its economic and strategic race with the United States if progress is not made is unparalleled in Soviet history. We who were brought up in the Soviet Union were taught that the victory of socialism was inevitable.

The Soviet Union must reach out to the West to expand its technology and trade. The West has made it clear that it is willing to cooperate with the Soviet Union in this endeavor. The only question left outstanding is the price the Soviets will have to pay. In the West, two approaches compete with each other in regard to dealing with Soviet repression of Jews.

The first approach is to strengthen cultural and economic ties with the Soviet Union in the hope that such ties will lead to greater Soviet flexibility on human rights issues. This hope is based on a naiveté that ignores the real danger the Soviet system sees in freedom of emigration and the efforts it is willing to make to avoid the granting of such freedom.

The second approach demands that any concessions to the Soviet Union be linked to progress on human rights.

The Jackson Amendment led to the signing of the Helsinki Accords, which established the principle of linkage in an international agreement. Testimony to the importance of linkage as a weapon against Soviet repression is provided by the constant Soviet machinations to undermine that linkage.

Each of these two approaches—the approach of granting concessions unconditionally in the hope of engendering reciprocity and the approach of linkage, making concessions conditional on real changes in Soviet policy—has its champions in the West. In Bern, a few months ago, Western European countries proposed a resolution that would have excluded Soviet Jews wishing to reunite with their families in Israel from the human rights clause of the Helsinki Accords. Only American opposition defeated this proposal.

Many holders of high political office in the West remain convinced that the principle of linkage must be maintained. This feeling is reinforced by the conviction that trust must be based on the fulfilment of previous obligations, obligations that include Soviet undertakings to improve Soviet policy on human rights. This autumn, a new conference of the 35 signatories of the Helsinki Accords will be convened in Vienna. Later this year an American-Soviet summit will probably take place in Washington. Which approach will prevail?

To a large extent, the answer to that question lies with Israel. At this decisive moment in East-West relations, the leadership of the Soviet Union has suddenly recalled that it has church property in the Holy Land and has proposed an exchange of consular delegations. Preliminary talks on this subject are to begin Monday, in Helsinki.

What will be Israel's reaction? Will Israel link relations to free emigration of all Soviet Jews, or will it adopt the other approach—moving first toward normal relations in the naive hope that this will create conditions for a solution to the problem of Soviet Jewry?

Western governments, even the most friendly, look to Israel for guidance on policy vis-à-vis the issue of Russian Jewry. None will be more adamant than Israel is in defense of Jewish rights.

At the Helsinki meeting, Israel must insist on Russian recognition of the right to emigrate as a precondition to further negotiations on improved relations.

If the negotiations on other issues proceed despite Soviet refusal to agree to this right of free Jewish emigration, the U.S.S.R. will have succeeded (or, more correctly, Israel will have allowed it to succeed) in establishing itself as the party less interested in the renewed ties. It will have relegated Israel's talk of Jewish emigration to the status of mere lip-service. This is the tradition of Soviet diplomacy: Listen. Ignore. Proceed to issues of Soviet interest.

Israel's position on Soviet Jewish freedom must be unrelenting and public. No room can be left for the claim that Israeli representatives adopted a more compromising tone in private discussions than in public forums.

The prison camp is a simple, yet surprisingly apt model of the Soviet system. A prisoner who presents a moral example of defiance and self-respect that other prisoners may choose to emulate is a threat to the prison system. One method used to counter this threat is for the KGB to call him in for hours of private talks on trifling matters. Agents then spread rumors that in these private sessions the prisoner made concessions to the KGB in order to gain personal benefits. The rumors, of course, may have no basis in fact, but the credibility of the moral individual is broken.

Soviet prison "culture" provides another example of what Israel must avoid in its contacts with the Soviet Union. This is what may be called the "menu 9A syndrome."

The Soviet prison system uses the curtailment of calorie intake in the prisoner's diet as a punishment for disobedience, and supplements the prisoner's diet as a reward. There are 18 levels of diet in Soviet prisons, ranging from 1A to 9B. Even the "best" diet in Soviet prisons is far worse than what the prisoner has eaten before he was incarcerated. Yet, after weeks and months of grueling starvation, a disobedient prisoner is frequently tempted to cave in to the demands of his jailers on the promise that his menu will be improved from the lowest, near-starvation standard—9B—to a menu only slightly better—9A. Lowered expectations make it seem that a slight easing of pressure or a milder form of torture are a major Soviet concession.

Let us not allow prolonged Soviet intransigence and barbarity to convince us that release of a few prominent activists is a major concession. I am certain that my colleagues in the Soviet Union agree with me. "Menu 9A" is not a recipe for real dialogue and understanding. It is a tactic of torture. We must not be fooled.

In response to Moscow's "generous proposals," we are tempted to lower our demands and limit them to an insistence on "symmetry and mutuality." This demand is an affront to our moral sense, unless the symmetry begins at an equal and acceptable status and not from "menu 9B."

Israeli jails hold no Soviet prisoners of conscience who have been imprisoned for expressing Soviet ideology; Israel must therefore insist that the Soviets release all Prisoners of Zion, those who are detained in Soviet jails or in the U.S.S.R. itself, merely for wanting to go to Israel.

Israel has not prevented thousands of Soviet families from being united with their kinsmen in the Soviet Union; it must insist, therefore, that Soviet Jewish families, some of whom have been separated for more than 15 years, be reunited in Israel.

Israel does not hold even one person who wishes to emigrate to the U.S.S.R. hostage in discussions with the Russians; it must therefore insist that any of the 3 million Jews in the Soviet Union who wish to come to Israel be allowed to do so. This is the only symmetry that holds any meaning.

This symmetry must be a condition of any future talks. Insistence on it is a moral imperative.●

CONGRESSIONAL PROHIBITIONS HINDER, NOT HELP, ARMS CONTROL TALKS

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, peace in the world will not be ordained by congressional skirmishes with the President over the conduct of foreign policy. That this lesson is not evident from recent history, especially the aftermath of legislative restrictions written in the 1970's, reveals a failing of our democratic system.

For the same forces which contributed to the collapse of the peace agreement in South Vietnam and ushered in a period of Soviet offensives around the world are about to repeat themselves. Before the recent congressional recess, each House of Congress took steps toward imposing a formidable series of prohibitions on Executive authority which can only serve to defeat the national goals of obtaining international stability and a sound defense of our freedoms.

Three weeks ago the House of Representatives voted to impose a 1-year moratorium on nuclear testing of all but the smallest underground nuclear explosions. Also, the House took similar action to ban for 1 year space tests of antisatellite weapons. Moreover, the House passed a measure which would prohibit funding for the deployment of nuclear systems which exceed the expired SALT II limits, even though the Soviets have already breached these limits and the treaty itself was never ratified. Finally, both the Senate and House have agreed in differing versions to slash the administration's request of funds for the strategic defense initiative, a concept designed to protect the lives of free peoples against nuclear offensive ballistic missiles.

Mr. President, this web of constraints is being woven in Congress at the same time as U.S. officials are engaged in arms negotiations and preparing for a summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev this year. With the next round of Geneva strategic nuclear talks scheduled to resume on September 18, with presummit meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze set to commence this month, and with high level meetings among United States and Soviet delegations having just been completed in Washington, we witness the spectacle of congressional meddling in what should be a united governmental purpose behind at least some minimum negotiating position.

Congress is not helping the path to peace; it is hindering it. An effective diplomacy depends on another country's assessment of the incentives and penalties, not on eloquent expressions of our peaceful intentions burdened by congressional shackles on American defense capabilities and a negotiating position shorn of all room for flexibility.

The latest congressional assault on our national defense effort, coupled with legislative concessions to the Soviet while arms talks are proceeding, can only tempt a crisis, not prevent one.

By stalemating defense policy, Congress deprives the Commander in Chief and his diplomatic corps the means of managing even the foreseeable challenges to our freedom. By offering major concessions during ongoing negotiations, Congress will only whet the Kremlin's appetite for further gratuitous gifts.

From the Soviet standpoint what could be better than to see an imcomplete negotiating process in which the United States abandons its strategic programs unilaterally with no cost to them? The Russians must be sorely drawn to wait us out, to allow the domestic debate to continue and see what benefits they can reap without any need for reciprocity.

Unfortunately, Congress is once again attempting to control, if not prescribe, the day-to-day tactical decisions of foreign policy. But the legislative branch is not equipped to dictate or manage foreign policy because the Congress is subject to transitory emotions of the moment, while foreign policy requires a sense of continuity of purpose and design.

Congressional constraints on actions of our Government which are directly linked to the current negotiating process deny the administration the opportunity of pursuing a coherent strategy balancing military preparedness with a search for positive agreements.

A successful foreign policy requires a degree of flexibility, room for constant adjustment to changing conditions. Reliance solely or primarily on unproven Soviet good will and American conciliations, as seen in recent congressional actions, is not a mark of responsible political conduct. It is the path to Soviet blackmail and pressures for unending American concessions.

Mr. President, I regret to say this, but it appears to me that some in Congress have made conciliation an end in itself. In fact, current legislative behavior is shifting the arms control process from a focus on how to make the negotiations succeed to an elaboration of restraints on American conduct exclusively.

Not only is Congress threatening to deprive our negotiators of any leverage with which to negotiate, but it is sending the Soviets exactly the wrong message. As Henry Kissinger wrote in Years of Upheaval:

> [P]eace may well depend on the ability of the Politburo to form a correct judgment of the likely reaction of our leaders when challenged.

If the Soviets conclude that the American Government is irresolute or seriously weakened by domestic division, this misconception may cause or tempt confrontation, exactly the opposite of the restraint which the advocates of self-imposed restrictions desire. The Soviets may again, as they have in the past, move aggressively to exploit our domestic differences, when they are presented with a favorable opportunity for strategic gain, an opportunity which congressionally mandated arms concessions may offer.

The Soviet arrest and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff may have thrown an obstacle across the negotiations and jeopardize hope for a summit meeting, but this incident is not self-imposed by our own actions. What the Daniloff outrage indicates is that our negotiators have enough difficulty with Soviet behavior and intransigence without being confronted with major hindrances erected by a branch of our own Government.

Mr. President, I hope that my colleagues in the legislative branch will recognize, before it is too late, that the dangers of war can be repelled not by unilateral concessions, but by a country's strength, the will of its leaders and a determined diplomacy. We must always be prepared for real cooperation should the opportunity appear. But we must also possess the capability and will of resisting Soviet adventurism where it threatens our vital interests. Whether or not we are ready to meet this test may determine the outcome of our experiment in a self-governing free Republic.●

OUR NATION'S DRUG POLICY

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, numerous efforts to prevent drug abuse in our society have been undertaken in one form or another since the first antiopium law was enacted in 1887. Public interest in "doing something" about the drug problem has escalated in recent months with the growing recognition that this country has a drug problem that involves all segments of our population—from elementary school children to white-collar workers—and supports a multi-billion dollar industry.

The drug industry in this country no longer caters to only poor junkies and teenage experimenters. During the past decade, drug use has become increasingly fashionable among the "yuppie generation." the "drug crisis" now includes affluent lawyers, doctors, and investment bankers who do not regard their new pastime as anything more or less than trendy and fashionable.

In the past few weeks, numerous bills to combat drug abuse have been introduced. The President has made it clear that he regards drug abuse to be a top priority on both the domestic and international fronts. Legislation will probably be enacted that is directed at both the demand and supply aspects of the drug problem by expanding prevention, treatment, and education programs and by toughening law enforcement and our foreign and military policies against drug-producing nations.

I have little hope, however, that all these programs and additional moneys will really assist in solving our drug problem until a fundamental change in our society's attitude toward drug use takes place. In our society, criminal behavior is not tolerated, much less considered socially acceptable; drug use is the major exception to this rule. This Nation has a drug problem because our society tolerates the behavior of the many people who violate the law to sustain their drug habits and to support the drug industry. As a commentary in Newsweek recently stated, "We have met the enemy, and he is us."

As a member of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, I recommend that, instead of simply enhancing current programs, we try a new approach—that we engage in a comprehensive effort to change society's code of conduct on drug use. In my view, nothing will wean this country from its drug habit until this happens.

Such an effort should include the following elements and should be implemented by those institutions most able to influence such a change in our social mores. I would suggest the following:

First. That leaders in the media, entertainment, sports, public relations, and advertising communities convene together to map out a campaign against the acceptability of drugs. This would go beyond current efforts to provide public education on the dangers of drug abuse and would involve a decision not to depict drug use in either an acceptable or a favorable light.

While drug education efforts are certainly important, they are clearly not the whole solution. Much of our society knows about the harmful effects of drugs and has seen its devastating effects firsthand. It seems evident that peer pressure and the deplorable social tolerance of drug use is more important than any lack of drug education in determining whether an individual uses drugs.

Second. A challenge to leaders in industry and in the professions to develop antidrug codes of conduct, coupled with programs of assistance for employees who need help dealing with drug problems. While a number of companies have taken the lead in this area, a firm and forceful antidrug policy is not evident throughout our country's businesses and professions. I think that a survey of the vast majority of banks, law firms, trade associations, brokerage houses, and businesses in this city would demonstrate that virtually no emphasis has been placed on having such an explicit policy and, in many cases, that such a policy does not exist.

Third. Establish a policy conditioning Federal support to colleges and universities on significant progress in implementing an antidrug policy on our Nation's campuses by both students and faculty. Students, faculties, and colleges and universities receive billions of dollars a year in Federal Government support, ranging from the Guaranteed Student Loan Program to biomedical and behavioral research grants supported by the National Institutes of Health. The Federal Government refuses to provide support for those educational institutions that discriminate on the basis of age, sex, and religion. Isn't eliminating drug abuse, which destroys thousands of lives every year, an equally worthy goal? Should taxpayer dollars be used to support academic institutions that are not willing to go beyond paying lip-service to the need to eliminate drug use on American campuses? I think not.

Fourth. The publication by both Government and industry of a listing of those positions which must be filled by drug-free employees by virtue of public safety and national security considerations. After such a list is compiled, labor and management should join together to reach agreement on how best to ensure that these posts are indeed held by individuals who do not use drugs.

Once such a list is developed, I believe it will surprise many people to see how many jobs can affect our public safety and national security. A good example was cited by the former medical director of Rockwell's space shuttle division, Dr. Howard Frankel, who estimated that 20 to 25 percent of the workers at the plant, which was the final assembly point for the four space shuttles, were using drugs, alcohol, or both. Dr. Frankel stated: "In this kind of ultra-high-tech work, the guy who makes the little adjustments, the screwer-on of parts, the bolter of nuts, is just as important as the project's chief engineer." I think that we may find that Dr. Frankel's logic holds true for a large number of jobs in our society.

Societal tolerance of the drug culture is the hurdle we must overcome if we are going to do anything meaningful about our drug problem. As long as the demand for drugs exists on a large scale and from an apparently reputable segment of the population, it is hard to have much confidence that education, treatment, and enforcement programs will make a significant difference. This is one problem that the Federal Government cannot solve alone. While the Federal Government is a powerful force in our society, it is a force that is controlled by a consensus of the public. While the Federal Government can contribute to the solution of the drug problem, it cannot solve a problem that society itself is unwilling to address.●

HONORING HISPANIC AMERICANS

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on September 16, Mexico will celebrate the 176th anniversary of its independence. That date will also mark the beginning of National Hispanic Heritage Week.

As the Senator from the State of Michigan which has a strong Hispanic community, I rise to pay tribute to the people of Mexico on the anniversary of their independence, as well as to the Hispanic Americans in this country. The spirit of freedom and the pursuit of human rights, equality, and justice which are identified with the Mexican independence movement continue to inspire the Hispanic community today.

For the past 18 years, National Hispanic Heritage Week has provided an important opportunity for Americans of all ethnic backgrounds to focus attention on the special contributions which Hispanic Americans have made to the growth of our Nation, on their special strengths, and on the ways in which we can help Hispanic Americans overcome the difficulties which they continue to face in our society.

As the most decorated group of ethnic Americans in World War II, Hispanic Americans can be proud of their record of service to this country. In addition to their bravery in battle, Hispanic Americans have added diversity and creativity to our Nation in the fields of music, the arts, architecture, literature, business, and politics.

Through their steadily increasing participation in the political arena, Hispanic Americans are playing a critical role in shaping the future of our country. Today, Hispanic Americans have been elected as mayors, Governors, Members of Congress, and council members.

In acknowledging the important contributions and achievements of Hispanic Americans, we must not ignore the many problems which threaten to prevent Hispanic Americans from participating fully in our society. Hispanics continue to suffer from inadequate opportunities in employment, housing, and education. As the fastest growing minority group in our country today, we must pay particular attention to the challenges they face.

All Americans recognize that the vitality of our Nation is dependent upon the strength of each individual and community. In honoring National Hispanic Heritage Week this year, we must work with a renewed commitment to building a Nation which can offer greater opportunity to all of our citizens.●

JUDGE CHARLES E. WYZANSKI, JR.

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I would like to pay tribute to the memory of one of this Nation's great jurists, Judge Charles E. Wyzanski, Jr. Judge Wyzanski passed away on Sunday in Boston, at the age of 80. My sincere condolences go to his wife, Gisela, and to his children and grandchildren.

Judge Wyzanski had a remarkable legal career, serving for 45 years as a U.S. district judge for the District of Massachusetts. He served in the Roosevelt administration from 1933 to 1937, winning several important cases before the Supreme Court, and aiding in the drafting of the Social Security Act, the Railway Retirement Act, and numerous taxation laws. He became known as the infant prodigy of the New Deal brain trust.

Judge Wyzanski was appointed a Federal district judge in Boston by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1941, at the age of 35. He was chief judge from 1965 to 1971, and then served as a senior judge from 1971 until his death. He remained active as a senior judge, and sat regularly on U.S. courts of appeal in Chicago, New York, Richmond, and Washington, as well as the U.S. district courts in San Francisco and Boston.

Judge Wyzanski was esteemed for his extensive knowledge of the law, and for his courageous rulings in controversial cases. In 1969, Judge Wyzanski, in his famous Sisson decision, recognized the right of nonreligious conscientious objection to the Selective Service. He stated in his opinion that the 1967 Selective Service Act was unconstitutional because it discriminated against those with "profound moral beliefs." Judge Wyzanski wrote: "When the law treats a reasonable, conscientious act as a crime it subverts its own power. It invites civil disobedience."

Judge Wyzanski also stated in Washington early in 1973 that the Vietnam war was being conducted illegally, after repeal of the Gulf of Tonkin resolution on January 12, 1971. This action caused the Massachusetts House to vote 111-65 in favor of a resolution which would have had him step down from the bench, although the House had no authority to act. But with his characteristic independence, Judge Wyzanski refused to do so.

Judge Wyzanski also wrote major decisions banning corporal punishment in the Boston public schools, and creating fairer procedures for jury selection in Massachusetts. Throughout his career, he was a champion of civil liberties and individual rights.

Judge Wyzanski's many admirers knew him as a fighter for causes he believed in, and as a true intellectual with a brilliant capacity for and love of the law, tempered by a deep sense of justice. Although not everyone agreed with Judge Wyzanski, all who knew him had great respect for him. He will be greatly missed by all of us in Massachusetts.●

CALIFORNIA NEVADA INTERSTATE COMPACT

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, when the Senate takes up the fiscal year 1987 appropriation bill for Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary, Senators will address the important issue of whether to ratify the California Nevada interstate compact.

As a Senator from one of the two States involved, I want to advise my colleagues that the California Nevada interstate compact should not be ratified by the U.S. Congress in the form in which it will be presented. More specifically and most emphatically, the U.S. Congress should not agree to bind the United States and the affected Indian tribes to the terms and conditions dictated by the two States. Those terms and conditions are not limited to matters of legitimate State concern. Rather they directly impair and encroach upon Federal and Indian interests. Ratifying this compact would constitute an unprecedented departure from our constitutional tradition and Federal system, fundamentally at odds with basic Federal Indian policy and undercutting our environmental laws.

Fifteen years ago, California and Nevada's Governors negotiated a deal between themselves, contingent on ratification by the United States for itself and affected Indian tribes. The Federal Government and the tribes rejected their deal for good reason. Now the proponents of the compact are asking Congress for ratification, making the Federal Government and tribes involuntary parties to an agreement reached by State governments with adverse interests, raising serious questions of fundamental justice.

The compact is long and confusing. It is 50 pages of water rights legalese, all but impossible for anyone to understand who is not thoroughly familiar with the river systems involved, how they currently operate, and the extraordinary complex legal rights, claims and interests of the Federal Government, the States, the Indian tribes, the municipalities, the private parties, the environmentalists and others.

So let me summarize. There is a major dispute involving multiple parties over a limited supply of water. Some of the parties got together and divided the water among themselves in a manner that met their needs at the expense of the absent parties. Now those who crafted the agreement seek to impose it on the others. It's just like two litigants in a multiparty lawsuit agreeing between themselves that a third, unrepresented party is liable, then getting the judge to impose their deal on the absent third party. That's not the way our system is supposed to function.

The California Nevada compact has been opposed by the Interior and Justice Departments of every administration from President Johnson to and including President Reagan. It is unlike every other interstate Western water compact.

Every other interstate water compact has included a provision specifically stating that it will not adversely affect Indian rights and interests. Some interstate compacts state that they will not adversely affect the rights and interests of the United States. No other compact purports to be binding on the United States or affected Indian tribes. That is proper and appropriate, because Indian and Federal water rights are derived from and protected by Federal, not State, law. They are not subject to State jurisdiction and almost always conflict with rights claimed by States and other parties asserting State water rights.

The California Nevada compact is not self-executing. Article XXII spells out that it shall not be effective between the two States unless and until Congress makes its principle provisions binding on both the United States and the affected tribes. But by ratifying the compact, Congress would abrogate Indian rights, subject the United States to a very substantial monetary claim for just compensation for the water rights taken from the Indians and given to the States, make the affected tribes in Nevada involuntary parties to an agreement negotiated by adversaries, and allow the States to dictate to the United States on matters of national interest traditionally reserved to the Federal Government such as relations with Indian tribes and protection of endangered species.

The proponents of the compact argue it should be ratified out of deference to States rights. But that is very misleading. The States don't need congressional approval to contract between themselves. This is definitely not an instance in which the Federal Government is interfering with the sovereignty of two States. Rather it is an effort to subordinate Federal sovereignty to the States. The effect of the compact would be to exempt these river systems from the laws that apply throughout our Nation.

Article V(D) of the compact allocates 23,000 acre feet of the waters of the Lake Tahoe Basin, which is part of the Truckee River system which runs through both States. Of that, approximately 6,500 acre feet have not been used or appropriated. The Pyramid Lake Tribe has a lawsuit pending in Federal court claiming that water for its fishery under Federal law. The tribe's claim has been upheld preliminarily by the Federal district court in Sacramento in two 1985 rulings.

If the Congress ratifies the compact, the tribe's claim to that 6,500 acre feet would be extinguished without justification. Pyramid Lake's endangered fish, already on the brink of extinction owing to inadequate inflows into Pyramid Lake, would have that much less water. The tribe would get no compensation in return. Its only recourse would be to sue the United States for an uncompensated taking. So there would be more litigation, the burden and expense of which would be borne solely by the United States and the tribe. One estimate of Federal liability for this taking is in excess of $30 million.

It is important to recognize that article V(D) operates specifically and exclusively against the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe. No one else is claiming that water. And that is precisely why the States and the compact's proponents insist that it be made binding on the United States and the Pyramid Lake Tribe.

Another example of the one-sidedness of the agreement is article VI(B)(3), which poses even greater dangers for Pyramid Lake's endangered fish. Article VI(B)(3) allocates 6,000 acre feet of water per year from the conservation yield of Stampede Reservoir, subject to the execution of contracts with the United States. Article VI(B)(3) would also be binding on the United States and Indian tribes if the compact is ratified.

Stampede Reservoir was completed in 1970. Since then, all of Stampede's usable storage has been devoted to saving Pyramid Lake's endangered and threatened species. The Interior Department's operation of Stampede Reservoir was challenged in a Federal court by the State of Nevada and others. Both the Federal district court and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that under the Endangered Species Act the use of Stampede water for Pyramid Lake takes precedence over all other competing uses. In 1985, the Supreme Court declined to review those decisions.

If this compact is ratified by the Congress and article VI(B)(3) is made binding on the United States and the Pyramid Lake Tribe, proponents of the compact could argue that Congress, having approved allocation of 6,000 acre feet of water from Stampede Reservior, has made it illegal to use all of Stampede's yield for the benefit of Pyramid Lake's endangered and threatened species. I'm not sure whether that argument would prevail. No one has yet addressed that issue.

That would create yet another lawsuit. The last suit over Stampede water lasted 9 years. Instead of resolving existing disputes, it is clear that ratifying the compact would create new ones.

The compact's proponents argue that 6,000 acre feet is not much water in the overall scheme of things. But they are wrong; 6,000 acre feet is a deceivingly small number. Providing 6,000 acre feet annually from the conservation yield would require the use of about 25 percent of Stampede's storage capacity, approximately 50,000 acre feet, to insure availability of that water during a severe drought cycle. The loss of that storage capacity would be devastating to Pyramid Lake's endangered cui-ui fish.

By far the worst provision of the compact is article VI(B)(4). It allocates an additional 10,000 acre feet of Truckee River water annually, but expressly states that this allocation shall not impair any present or future beneficial uses of water in Nevada—"as determined by Nevada Law"—for domestic, municipal, industrial, and agricultural purposes. Deliberately excluded from the list of protected beneficial uses are fish, wildlife, and recreation—the very purposes for which the waters of the Truckee River are used at Pyramid Lake.

These uses are excluded even though they are recognized as "beneficial" and "an inseparable part of the public interest" in article XIII. In other words, article XII pays lip service to protecting fish, wildlife, and recreation uses of water, but those uses are subordinated and sacrificed to all other uses. There is no justification for subordination of the interests of the Pyramid Lake Paiute Indian Tribe and Pyramid Lake's endangered and threatened species.

Two other aspects of article VI(B)(4) should be noted. Nevada is granted the right to share in the allocation to the extent that it contributes toward financing the cost of developing the water. Hence, the agreement does more than merely allocate water between the two States. It also reallocates intrastate Truckee River water within Nevada. Water is taken away from one existing use, the Pyramid Lake fishery, and given to the State to reallocate to future uses for other purposes in Nevada.

This is unique. I know of no other interstate compact that takes water away from existing beneficial uses within one State for the benefit of future uses in that same State. Simply put, proponents are asking Congress to sanctify an intrastate reallocation that takes the Indians' water and gives it to other Nevada users. It also gives rise to a claim against the United States for a taking and for just compensation. As I said before, the value of the claim against the United States for this unjustified and uncompensated taking is approximately $30 million.

Another noteworthy aspect article VI(B)(4) concerns its quantitative impact on the Pyramid Lake fishery. The allocation is limited to no more than 10,000 acre feet annually. That is another misleading number. The water is not currently available. It must be developed by constructing a new reservoir. To provide 10,000 acre feet per year, the new reservoir would need a storage capacity of at least 100,000 acre feet. The water to fill that new reservoir could come from only one source: The spring runoff from the snow melt in the Sierra Nevada Mountains. That is the very water now being used and vitally needed for spawning by Pyramid Lake's endangered cui-ui. If it is seized and impounded in upstream storage facilities, the cui-ui are doomed. Article VI(B)(4) is the ultimate death sentence for Pyramid Lake's endangered cui-ui.

All three of these provisions, article V(D), VI(B)(3) and VI(B)(4) have one thing in common. They all operate specifically and exclusively to the detriment of the Pyramid Lake fishery. They are targeted precisely to take away currently used Truckee River water from Pyramid Lake for the benefit of future water uses in both States.

This compact has other problems and defects. The water rights of the Walker River Indian Tribe are infringed by article VIII; the Carson River water rights decree—which took 60 years to litigate—is undermined and undone by article VII; and as the Justice Department pointed out in 1985, the compact unconstitutionally delegates authority to a commission established by article IV over Federal rights and obligations in apparent violation of the appointments clause. Moreover, the United States and Indian tribes are excluded from any meaningful participation in the compact commission. They are not given a vote and the compact vests control of the Nevada Compact Commission in the Pyramid Lake Tribe's historic and current adversaries. Nearly every provision of the compact operates in the same way against the interests of both the Federal Government and the Indian tribes whose natural resources the Federal Government is charged with protecting.

Ratification of this compact would be an unprecedented departure from our constitutional heritage, because for the first time, States, with the approval of Congress, would dictate to the Federal Government with respect to Federal and Indian interests. Congress would approve abdication of Federal constitutional and fiduciary obligations to Indian tribes and to the environment in one of the most sensitive ecological areas of the country. It would provide a new method for an old practice of abrogating Indian treaties, and for creating exemptions from Indian and environmental laws supposed to be applied uniformly throughout our Nation.

Ratifying the compact would represent the single most anti-Indian legislation since the 1950's. Congress has enacted many laws promoting tribal sovereignty and economic self-sufficiency. The compact violates the letter or the spirit of all of these laws by taking Indian property without the tribes' consent, by subjecting Indian water rights to State jurisdiction and control, and by depriving tribes of the resources that are desperately needed to achieve economic self-sufficiency. It is hard to imagine a worse law from the Indians' perspective.

The compact is just as bad from the environmental standpoint. No analysis has been prepared under the National Environmental Policy Act. No consideration has been given to achieving the goals of the Clean Water Act or to addressing the pollution problems resulting from agricultural drainage at the Stillwater Wildlife Refuge which the Department of the Interior considers the second most serious in the country next to the Kesterson Wildlife Refuge in California. The compact ignores all the environmental lessons we have learned over the past two decades.

Worse yet, the compact stands the Endangered Species Act on its head. Following full national debate on several separate occasions, the Congress in its wisdom has accorded the highest priority to the protection and enhancement of endangered and threatened species. Congress has also established an Endangered Species Committee and enacted detailed standards and procedures to providing for case-by-case consideration of applications for exemptions from the Endangered Species Act in exceptional circumstances. The compact violates the Endangered Species Act by discriminating against the use of water for Pyramid Lake's endangered and threatened species. While endangered species have the highest priority under Federal law, they would be subordinated and sacrificed to everything else under the compact. The overall effect would be to grant an exemption for Pyramid Lake and the Truckee River from the Endangered Species Act without complying with any of the standards or procedures governing such exemptions.

For all the reasons I've mentioned, the Reagan administration does not support the compact unless it is amended. The administration's amendment would qualify Congress' consent to the compact by protecting the rights and obligations of the United States and the Indian tribes against any impairment or interference by the terms of the compact. The effect of the administration's amendment would be to subject the California Nevada compact to the same standard condition included in all other Western water compacts. But proponents of this compact argue against that amendment, because the very purpose of the agreement they made is to impair the tribe's rights and take away the tribe's water.

The compact is not and should not become a partisan issue. It is simply bad public policy and constitutional policy. It has been consistently opposed by every administration since it was first proposed in 1968. It was ratified by the two States in 1970 and 1971, but has never before been considered seriously by Congress. Numerous former high-ranking officials of the Interior and Justice Departments, Republicans and Democrats, testified against the compact, stating that its ratification would be a great disservice and manifest injustice to the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe. Most recently, James C. Miller III, Director of the Office of Management and Budget, commented in his August 14, 1986, letter to the Senate majority leader:

> The administration cannot accept general provisions 609 of the Senate version of H.R. 5161 that would ratify the California Nevada compact for the apportionment of the Carson, Truckee, Walker Rivers and provide that the Federal Government agrees to be bound by its terms. The compact unilaterally abrogates Federal rights and responsibilities to Indian tribes and other entities. Ratification is acceptable only if it includes language proposed by the administration specifically protecting the Federal obligations and responsibilities.

When Senator LAXALT introduced the compact, he stated that the compact was based on the principle that existing water rights and beneficial uses are protected and that only waters not needed to satisfy those existing rights and uses are allocated between the two States. I agree with that principle. If the compact recognized and protected the water rights and beneficial uses of the United States and the Indian tribes, I would enthusiastically support it. Unfortunately, the compact applies that principle to the water rights and beneficial uses of everyone except the United States and affected tribes.

I find myself in full agreement with the administration's position. I urge my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to join me in supporting the administration's amendment to the California Nevada compact to protect the Federal and Indian interests.●

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE to the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON], for Mr. MCCLURE, proposes an amendment numbered 2793.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

1. On page 16, line 8, strike "Natural elements" and insert in lieu therof "Landscape features of commemorative works".

2. On page 17, line 6, strike "paid" and insert in lieu thereof "donated".

3. On page 18, line 3, strike "such moneys shall not be subject to deferral or rescission under the Budget Impoundment and Control Act of 1974, and".

4. On page 18, line 6, strike "Further, the funds shall not be subject to sequestration under the requirements of Public Law 99-177."

Mr. MCCLURE. Madam President, the amendments I am offering to H.R. 4378, as reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, are clarifying in nature. The first amendment substitutes "Landscape features of commemorative works" for the term "Natural elements" in order to clarify the act's guidance to those persons charged with approving site and design proposals for commemorative works. The other amendments are intended to clarify that the funds contributed into the commemorative work maintenance fund established by this legislation shall be used solely for the purpose for which they were donated.

Madam President, section 255(g)(1) of Public Law 99-177 states that "activities resulting from private donations, bequests, or voluntary contributions to the Government" are exempt from sequestration under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. The amendments I am offering today clarify that the funds contributed for maintenance of commemorative works under H.R. 4378 are to be considered donated funds and therefore ineligible for sequestration. I understand that this assessment has been cleared with the Budget Committee. This is only proper since these funds will be raised privately to provide resources for the care and maintenance of memorials and monuments in the Nation's Capital and its environs. We must provide assurance to those who will be raising these funds that the moneys will be used only for the purpose for which they were donated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2793) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I move adoption of the committee substitute as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended, in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment, as amended, and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 4378) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An Act to provide standards for placement of commemorative works on certain Federal lands in the District of Columbia, and its environs, and for other purposes".

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar item No. 877, S. 2083, the asbestos bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2083) to amend the Toxic Substances Control Act to require the Environmental Protection Agency to set standards for identification and abatement of hazardous asbestos in the Nation's schools, to mandate abatement of hazardous asbestos in the Nation's schools in accordance with those standards, to require local educational agencies to prepare asbestos management plans, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENT TO TOXIC SUBSTANCES CONTROL ACT.

The Toxic Substances Control Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"TITLE II—ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE

"SEC. 201. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

"(1) The Environmental Protection Agency's rule on inspection and notification of asbestos hazards has neither standards for the proper identification of asbestos and abatement of friable asbestos-containing material, nor a requirement that friable asbestos-containing material be abated in a safe and complete manner once it is discovered.

"(2) There is no uniform program for accrediting persons involved in asbestos identification and abatement, nor are local education agencies required to use accredited contractors for asbestos work.

"(3) As a result, some schools have taken no action at all to abate hazardous asbestos while others have undertaken expensive abatement projects with no regulatory guidance from the Environmental Protection Agency as to whether the actions are necessary, adequate, or safe. Thus, the danger of exposure to asbestos continues to exist in many schools, and some exposure actually may have increased due to the lack of Federal standards for asbestos abatement and the lack of requirements that competent contractors be used to perform asbestos abatement.

"(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are—

"(1) to provide for the establishment of Federal regulations which require inspection for asbestos and the abatement of hazardous asbestos-containing material in the Nation's schools in a safe and complete manner;

"(2) to establish standards for the development of operation and maintenance plans to prevent exposure to asbestos remaining in a school building after abatement; and

"(3) to mandate safe and complete periodic reinspection of school buildings following abatement.

"SEC. 202. DEFINITION OF ASBESTOS; ABATEMENT; AND GUIDANCE DOCUMENT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term—

"(1) 'asbestos' means asbestiform varieties of—

"(A) chrysotile (serpentine),

"(B) crocidolite (riebeckite),

"(C) amosite (cummingtonite-grunerite),

"(D) anthophyllite,

"(E) tremolite, or

"(F) actinolite;

"(2) 'asbestos-containing material' means any material which contains more than 1 percent asbestos by weight;

"(3) 'friable asbestos-containing material' means any asbestos-containing material applied on ceilings, walls, structural members, piping, duct work, or any other part of a building which when dry may be crumbled, pulverized, or reduced to powder by hand pressure;

"(4) 'abatement' means enclosure, encapsulation, repair or removal of asbestos-containing material; and

"(5) 'accredited asbestos contractor' means a person, accredited pursuant to the provisions of section 203, who inspects for asbestos-containing material, develops asbestos management plans, or performs asbestos abatement activities.

"(b) EPA REGULATIONS ON IDENTIFICATION AND ABATEMENT OF ASBESTOS.—Within 12 calendar months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Administrator shall promulgate the following:

"(1) Regulations which prescribe procedures, including the use of trained personnel, for determining whether asbestos-containing materials are present in a school building.

"(2) Regulations which prescribe standards for the circumstances under which the presence of asbestos-containing material in a school building shall be considered hazardous, describing different types of abatement, and defining the circumstances under which different types of abatement are required, including the extent of abatement necessary. In any standard under this paragraph, asbestos-containing material shall be considered hazardous if, at a minimum, it is friable and is—

"(A) damaged, deteriorated or delaminated; or

"(B) readily accessible to building occupants including service and maintenance personnel, in the course of their normal activities; in circumstances that present a reasonable likelihood of exposure to asbestos fibers.

"(3) Regulations which mandate abatement, in accordance with standards prescribed under paragraph (4), of hazardous asbestos-containing material found in any school building, as determined in accordance with standards prescribed under paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(4) Regulations which prescribe standards for performance of asbestos abatement activities in school buildings and for determination of when the hazard has been abated. Such regulations shall include standards for protection for both workers and building occupants, for the following phases of abatement activity:

"(A) Inspection.

"(B) Abatement.

"(C) Post-abatement, including any long term operation and maintenance activity.

"(5) Regulations which prescribe standards for the development and execution of an operation and maintenance plan with respect to asbestos-containing material which is not removed from a school building. Such plan shall include—

"(A) an identification of the location of asbestos-containing material in the school building;

"(B) provisions for surveillance and periodic reinspection of such asbestos-containing material;

"(C) provisions for education of school employees, including school service and maintenance personnel, about the location of and safety procedures with respect to such asbestos-containing material; and

"(D) provisions for identifying with a warning label any friable asbestos-containing material that is located in areas not normally frequented by students and which might be damaged by the activities of persons in such areas. The warning label shall read, in print which is readily visible because of large size or bright color, as follows: 'CAUTION: ASBESTOS-CONTAINING MATERIAL. BREATHING ASBESTOS DUST MAY CAUSE CANCER. DO NOT DISTURB WITHOUT PROPER TRAINING AND EQUIPMENT' (or words to that effect).

"(6) Regulations which prescribe such standards for transportation and disposal of waste asbestos-containing material as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such regulations shall include such provisions related to the manner in which transportation vehicles are loaded and unloaded as will assure the physical integrity of containers of asbestos-containing waste materials.

"(c) HAZARDOUS ASBESTOS STANDARD IF EPA FAILS TO PROMULGATE REGULATIONS.—If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under subsections (b) (1) and (2) within the prescribed period, any asbestos-containing material which exists in the school building shall be considered hazardous if the asbestos-containing material is visibly damaged, with portions of the material dislodged, missing, cracked, deteriorated, showing evidence of water damage, or flaking, in any area in the school building where there is a potential for human exposure, including an air plenum. Such standards shall be effective until such time as the Administrator promulgates different standards under regulations under subsections (b) (1) and (2).

"(d) ABATEMENT IF EPA FAILS TO PROMULGATE REGULATIONS.—If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under subsections (b) (3) and (4) within the prescribed period, and asbestos-containing material which is hazardous under the standard described in subsection (c) exists in a school building, the local educational agency with jurisdiction over the school building shall abate such asbestos-containing material in accordance with the most recent version of the Environmental Protection Agency's 'Guidance for Controlling Asbestos-Containing Materials in Buildings' (or any successor to such document). The ambient interior concentration of asbestos fibers after the completion of abatement shall not exceed the ambient exterior concentration, discounting any contribution from any local stationary source. In the absence of reliable measurements, the exterior ambient concentration shall be deemed to be less than 0.003 fibers per cubic centimeter if a scanning electron microscope is used to determine whether the standard has been met, and less than .005 fibers per cubic centimeter if a transmission electron microscope is used to determine whether the standard has been met.

"(e) TRANSPORTATION AND DISPOSAL STANDARDS IF EPA FAILS TO PROMULGATE REGULATIONS.—If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under subsection (b)(6) within the prescribed period, any asbestos which is abated within a local educational agency shall be transported and disposed of in accordance with the most recent version of the Environmental Protection Agency's 'Asbestos Waste Management Guidance' (or any successor to such document).

"SEC. 203. MODEL CONTRACTOR ACCREDITATION PLAN.

"(a) MODEL PLAN.—

"(1) PERSONS TO BE ACCREDITED.—Within 12 calendar months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Administrator shall develop a model accreditation plan for States to give accreditation to persons in the following 3 categories:

"(A) Persons who inspect for asbestos in schools within a covered local educational agency.

"(B) Persons who prepare management plans for such schools.

"(C) Persons who carry out abatement of asbestos in such schools.

"(2) PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—The plan shall include a requirement that any person in the categories listed in the preceding sentence achieve a passing grade on an examination and participate in continuing education to stay informed about current asbestos inspection and abatement technology. The examination shall demonstrate the knowledge of the person in areas that the Administrator prescribes in regulations as necessary and appropriate in each of the categories. Such regulations may include requirements for knowledge in the following areas:

"(A) Recognition of asbestos and its physical characteristics.

"(B) Health hazards of asbestos and the relationship between asbestos exposure and disease.

"(C) Assessing the risk of asbestos exposure through a knowledge of percentage weight of asbestos, friability, age, deterioration, location and accessibility of materials, and advantages and disadvantages of dry and wet methods of abatement.

"(D) Respirators and their use, care, selection, degree of protection afforded, fitting, testing, and maintenance and cleaning procedures.

"(E) Appropriate work practices and control methods, including the use of high efficiency particle absolute vacuums, use of amended water and removal encapsulants, and principles of negative air pressure equipment use and procedures.

"(F) Preparing a work area for asbestos work, including isolating work areas to prevent bystander or public exposure, decontamination procedures, and procedures for dismantling work areas after completion of work.

"(G) Establishing emergency procedures to respond to sudden releases.

"(H) Air monitoring requirements and procedures.

"(I) Medical surveillance program requirements.

"(J) Proper job-specific work practices, including work area preparation, decontamination, emergency procedures, and waste disposal procedures.

"(K) Housekeeping and personal hygiene practices, including the necessity of showers, and procedures to prevent asbestos exposure to an employee's family.

"(b) STATE ADOPTION OF PLAN.—Following the development by the Administrator of a model contractor accreditation plan under subsection (a), each State shall adopt a contractor accreditation plan at least as stringent as that model. In the case of schools operated, pursuant to section 6 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) relating to impact aid for children of members of the Armed Forces, the Secretary of Defense shall adopt a contractor accreditation plan at least as stringent as that model.

"(c) CONTRACTOR IN STATE WHICH HAS NOT ADOPTED A PLAN.—Any person described in subsection (a)(1)—

"(1) who plans to carry out any activities described in subsection (a)(1),

"(2) more than 180 days after the Administrator has developed a model contractor accreditation plan under subsection (a),

"(3) in a State which has not adopted a plan under subsection (b), must be accredited by another State which has adopted such a plan under subsection (b) before carrying out any of the activities described in subsection (a)(1).

"(d) TRAINING COURSES.—The Administrator may designate training courses in asbestos inspection and abatement and the development of asbestos management plans that the Administrator determines are equivalent to the contractor accreditation program under subsection (a). A person who has completed and achieved a passing grade from one of such training courses shall be considered accredited for the purposes of this title until a date that is one year after the date on which the State in which such person is employed establishes an accreditation program pursuant to subsection (b).

"(e) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE CONTINGENT ON USE OF ACCREDITED PERSONS.—A school which is an applicant for financial assistance under section 505 of the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act of 1984 is not eligible for such assistance if the school uses any person described in subsection (a)(1) who has not been accredited under a plan based on the model plan developed under subsection (a). This subsection shall apply to any financial assistance provided under the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act of 1984 more than 12 calendar months after the date of the enactment of this title.

"SEC. 204. STATE GOVERNOR ASBESTOS REVIEW.

"Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title, the Governor of each State shall establish administrative procedures for carrying out certain provisions described in sections 205 and 206. In establishing such procedures, the Governor shall designate, to carry out the provisions, those State officials who are responsible for implementing environmental protection or other public health programs in the State.

"SEC. 205. CERTIFICATION OF SCHOOL INSPECTION AND ABATEMENT.

"(a) CERTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—Within 12 calendar months after the date of the enactment of this title, each local educational agency shall conduct a certification to determine the status of asbestos inspection and abatement carried out prior to the date of the enactment of this title in each school under its authority. A certification shall consist of submitting to the State Governor a written statement, signed by the highest ranking responsible official of the local educational agency, which contains each of the following items:

"(1) For each school building, a statement on whether an inspection was conducted to ascertain the presence of any asbestos-containing material in the building, including a specific reference to whether an inspection was conducted in the boiler room of the building. If such an inspection was conducted, the following items of information shall be included in the statement:

"(A) The dates of inspection.

"(B) The name, address, and qualifications of each inspector.

"(C) A description of the specific areas inspected.

"(D) The name, address, and qualifications of each laboratory used for analyzing bulk samples or air samples of asbestos.

"(E) The results of the inspection.

"(2) For each school building, a statement on whether any actions to abate any hazardous asbestos-containing material found to be present were taken, including a specific reference to whether any actions were taken in the boiler room of the building. If any such abatement action was taken, the following items of information shall be included in the statement:

"(A) The location or locations at which the abatement action was taken.

"(B) Whether the method of abatement was repair, removal, enclosure, or encapsulation.

"(C) The name, address, and qualifications of the persons who conducted the abatement action.

"(b) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF CERTIFICATION.—A copy of the certification required under subsection (a) shall be available in the administrative offices of the local educational agency for inspection by the public, including teachers, other school personnel, and parents.

"SEC. 206. INSPECTION; ASBESTOS MANAGEMENT PLANS.

"(a) INSPECTION.—Within 180 days after the Administrator promulgates regulations under section 202, or, if the Administrator fails to promulgate the regulations within the prescribed period under section 202, within 180 days after the end of such prescribed period, each covered local educational agency shall conduct an inspection for asbestos-containing material in all areas of each school under its authority that were not certified under section 205 to have been inspected previously and found to contain no asbestos-containing material. Each inspection shall comply with the regulations promulgated under section 202(b)(1).

"(b) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—

"(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—Within 12 calendar months after the Administrator promulgates regulations under section 202, or, if the Administrator fails to promulgate the regulations within the prescribed period under section 202, within 12 calendar months after the end of such prescribed period, each covered local educational agency shall prepare and submit to the State Governor a management plan for abating hazardous asbestos-containing material in school buildings under its authority. Each plan shall provide for timely notification to the appropriate parents of children and employees affected by such plan of the existence of such plan, and of their right to comment to the Governor with respect to such plan. Such plan shall further provide for compliance with the regulations prescribed by the Administrator under sections 202(b) (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) (or if there are no regulations, the standards in subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 202) and shall include the following:

"(A) A description of the results of the inspection conducted under subsection (a), including the dates of inspection; the names, addresses, and qualifications of inspectors; and a description of the specific areas inspected.

"(B) A detailed description of measures to be taken to abate any hazardous asbestos-containing material, including the location or locations at which an abatement action will be taken and the method or methods of abatement to be used.

"(C) An evaluation of resources needed to successfully complete abatement and carry out operation and maintenance.

"(D)(i) A detailed description of criteria and procedures which were followed in selecting the persons who inspected for asbestos-containing material and who analyzed the asbestos-containing material in laboratories, and which will be followed in selecting persons to abate the hazardous asbestos-containing material, or

"(ii) if the State has adopted a contractor accreditation plan similar to the model contractor accreditation plan developed under section 203, a statement that the local educational agency followed (or will follow) its plan in selecting such persons.

"(E) The names of the consultants who contributed to the plan, along with a description of their credentials.

"(F) A detailed description of any asbestos-containing material found in the school building which was found not to be hazardous under the regulations prescribed under subsection 202(b) (or the standard in subsection 202(c)).

"(G) An operation and maintenance plan developed in accordance with standards prescribed under section 202(b)(5).

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SCHOOLS.—If a covered local educational agency determines that a school under its authority—

"(A) conducted an inspection for asbestos which complied with the regulations promulgated under section 202(b)(1),

"(B) found asbestos-containing material, and

"(C) removed all the asbestos-containing material existing in that school, the local educational agency may omit that school from the management plan but must include a statement in the plan explaining how that school identified the asbestos-containing material and removed all the asbestos-containing material from the school.

"(3) PLAN MAY BE SUBMITTED IN STAGES.—A covered local educational agency may submit a management plan in stages, with each submission of the agency covering only a portion of the school buildings under the agency's authority, if the agency determines that such action would expedite the identification and abatement of hazardous asbestos-containing material in the school buildings under the authority of the agency.

"(4) MANAGEMENT PLAN ACCREDITATION.—Each such management plan shall contain a statement signed by an accredited asbestos contractor that such contractor has prepared or assisted in the preparation of such plan, or has reviewed such plan, and that such plan is in compliance with the applicable regulations and standards promulgated or adopted pursuant to section 202(b) of this title, and other applicable provisions of law.

"(c) STATE ACTION.—The State Governor may disapprove a management plan submitted under this section within 60 days after the date of receipt of the plan. Disapproval shall be based on—

"(1) a determination that the plan is not suited to the problem identified;

"(2) its failure to assure that contractors accredited pursuant to this title will be used to carry out such plan;

"(3) its failure to conform to regulations under section 202(a) on asbestos inspection and abatement (or with the standards in sections 202 (b) and (c) if there are no regulations); and

"(4) the unreasonableness and untimeliness of the abatement schedule, taking into account circumstances relevant to the speed at which the hazardous asbestos-containing material should be abated, including public exposure to the hazard while the asbestos-containing material remains unabated.

If the State Governor disapproves a plan, the State Governor shall explain in writing to the covered local educational agency the reasons why the plan was rejected and the changes that need to be made in the plan. Within 30 days after the date on which notice is received of rejection of its plan, a covered local educational agency shall revise the plan to conform with the State Governor's required changes.

"(d) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY IMPLEMENTATION OF MANAGEMENT PLANS; CERTIFICATION.—If a management plan submitted under this section is not disapproved by the State Governor within such 60-day period, a covered local educational agency shall implement the plan. Within 12 calendar months after submission of its plan, each covered local educational agency—

"(1) shall implement the plan, and

"(2) shall certify to the State Governor that the plan has been implemented, by submitting a statement in writing detailing the implementation.

"(e) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF MANAGEMENT PLAN.—A copy of the management plan required under subsection (b) shall be available in the administrative offices of the local educational agency for inspection by the public, including teachers, other school personnel, and parents.

"(f) The Administrator, upon request by a Governor and after notice and comment and opportunity for a public hearing in the affected State, may waive some or all of the requirements of this section and section 204 with respect to such State if it has established and is implementing a program of asbestos inspection and management that contains requirements that are substantially equivalent to the requirements of this section and section 204.

"SEC. 207. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY RESPONSE AUTHORITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Whenever—

"(1) the presence of asbestos-containing material in a school building may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to human health, and

"(2) the local educational agency is not taking sufficient action consistent with standards prescribed under this title (as determined by the Administrator or Governor) to abate or arrange for the abatement of the asbestos, the Administrator or the Governor of a State is authorized to act, consistent with standards prescribed under this title, to abate or arrange for the abatement of the hazard, or to take any other response measure which the Administrator or the Governor deems necessary to protect human health.

"(b) COST RECOVERY.—The Administrator may seek reimbursement from a local educational agency or any other potentially responsible party in a court of the United States for all costs of abatement action under this section incurred by the United States Government. Nothing in this section creates a cause of action or in any other way increases or diminishes the liability of any person under any other law.

"(c) VENUE.—In any case in which the Administrator seeks reimbursement from a local educational agency pursuant to subsection (b), such action shall be filed in the judicial district in which the abatement action occurred.

"SEC. 208. ABATEMENT ACTION.

"When the Administrator or the Governor of a State determines that there may be an imminent and substantial endangerment to the public health or welfare or the environment because of the presence of asbestos in a school building, the Administrator may request the Attorney General of the United States, or the Governor may act, to secure such relief as may be necessary to abate such danger. The district court of the United States in the district in which the threat occurs shall have jurisdiction to grant such relief, including injunctive relief, as the public interest and the equities of the case may require.

"SEC. 209. PUBLIC PROTECTION.

"(a) PUBLIC PROTECTION.—No State or local educational agency may discriminate against a person in any way, including firing a person who is an employee, because the person provided information relating to a potential violation of this title to any other person, including a State or to the Federal Government.

"(b) LABOR DEPARTMENT REVIEW.—Any public or private employee or representative of employees who believes he or she has been fired or otherwise discriminated against in violation of subsection (a) may within 90 days after the alleged violation occurs apply to the Secretary of Labor for a review of the firing or alleged discrimination. (f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1987.

SEC. 6. RESERVATION OF LOAN FUNDS.

Section 512 of the Asbestos School Hazardous Abatement Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(c) Of the sums appropriated for the implementation of this title ten (10) percent or $10,000,000, whichever is less, shall be reserved during each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1987 and 1988 for grants to States or local educational agencies to carry out the provisions of sections 205 and 206 of the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986. Appropriated funds used to carry out this subsection shall be taken from funds that would otherwise be used to provide loans under this Act.".

Mr. STAFFORD. Madam President, S. 2083 is designed to deal with a very serious problem, the contamination of our schools by deadly asbestos fibers. Asbestos has been used in the construction of some 31,000 schools. As a result, an estimated 15 million students and 1.4 million teachers and other employees are potentially exposed to its fibers. When inhaled, asbestos can cause lung cancer and several other deadly diseases. Fortunately, the asbestos in most school buildings is not yet in a hazardous condition. However, through damage or normal wear and tear the danger exists that fibers will be released. And in some schools serious contamination already has occurred.

The Federal Environmental Protection Agency has been concerned with this problem for several years and has begun to take steps to solve it. Unfortunately, the present program is not adequate. Although EPA requires schools to inspect for asbestos many of the inspections have been slipshod. The Administrator has informed the committee of noncompliance rates that exceed 60 percent at the present time. Even worse, when hazardous asbestos is found the present program does not require that the hazard be abated or provide enforceable regulations governing how to abate different kinds of asbestos problems.

This bill contains three key elements designed to remedy deficiencies in the present element program.

The first is a requirement that the Environmental Protection Agency establish standards for inspection for hazardous asbestos and for making decisions about how to abate hazardous asbestos when it is found. When asbestos is located in a building but the condition of the material is such that it is not yet hazardous, the bill would require an operation and maintenance plan in order to monitor the condition of the asbestos and to avoid unnecessary disturbance of it.

The second key element is a requirement that these standards actually be followed. Schools that have not previously inspected for asbestos—or who did so incompletely—will be required to inspect these areas of school buildings that were missed or inspected incorrectly. And schools that do find hazardous asbestos will be required to take appropriate abatement action, as defined by the EPA standards.

The third key component of the bill is a contractor accreditation program to assure that person who inspect for asbestos, develop management plans or perform abatement activities are properly qualified to do so.

This bill enjoys the strong support of the Parent Teachers Association, the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, The Service Employees International Union of the AFL-CIO, the American Cancer Society, the National Governors Association, the National Association of Counties and many other organizations and individuals who have written to me about it or who have submitted testimony for the RECORD.

In that regard I want to mention especially one letter that I received not long ago. A mother in Florida wrote that her 31 year old son, a medical doctor who recently finished his residency in internal medicine, has developed a rare form of cancer that appears to be caused only by asbestos. This young man never worked around asbestos. His only exposure was to damaged asbestos ceiling material in his elementary school 20 years ago. She concluded her letter by saying:

I urge you for the sake of all children that you pass measures to have all schools reinspected with the EPA. I understand that many schools have not complied or have done so in a sloppy manner. Also, when asbestos has been removed, those who were exposed should be warned so that they can look for early signs of cancer 10 or 15 years down the road.

Richard has no warning. In 1983 he went through chemotherapy, surgery and radiation. He then had a year and a half of remission but new tumors have formed so that once more he is receiving chemotherapy. There is no cure—PLEASE TAKE ACTION.

Since a similar bill already has passed the House of Representatives, it is my expectation that we will be able to resolve differences between the bills and enact this important legislation this year.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a summary description of this bill.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY

Section 1 provides a short title for the Act.

Section 2 amends the Toxic Substances Control Act to establish a new Title II, as follows:

Sec. 201 contains Congressional Findings and Purpose.

Sec. 202 contains definitions and requires EPA to publish regulations defining standards for asbestos inspection, identification and abatement of asbestos-containing material which is determined under the standards to be hazardous, as well as for development of an operation and maintenance plan with respect to asbestos that remains in a building.

This section also contains a hazardous asbestos standard which would be in effect should EPA fail to publish the required standards, and requires that decisions regarding abatement or other response conform with already published EPA technical guidance if EPA fails to publish the required regulations.

Sec. 203 requires EPA to develop a model contractor accreditation program and requires States to develop a consistent accreditation program. Contractors trained under EPA-approved asbestos courses are considered accredited until State accreditation programs are in place. This section also requires that local education agencies receiving funds under the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act use accredited contractors.

Sec. 204 requires Governor of a State to establish procedures for reviewing asbestos management plans developed by local education agencies.

Sec. 205 requires local agencies that have performed asbestos inspection and abatement projects before enactment to certify that these projects were performed. The certification is publicly available.

Sec. 206 requires local education agencies that have not already removed all asbestos to inspect for asbestos and to develop an asbestos management plan that is consistent with the EPA standards if asbestos is found. The plan must be submitted to the Governor, who may disapprove it and require changes. A plan must be implemented within a year.

This section also authorizes the Administrator of EPA to waive the requirements of section 204 and section 206 if the State is implementing a program that contains requirements that are substantially equivalent to those of sections 204 and 206. This amendment does not authorize the Administrator to waive the substantive standards of section 202.

Sec. 207 authorizes the Administrator of EPA or the Governor of a State to act, consistent with the EPA standards, to abate an imminent and substantial endangerment created by hazardous asbestos in a school when the local education agency is not taking sufficient action. The Administrator may seek reimbursement of the costs of the abatement action from the local agency or any other potentially responsible party.

Sec. 208 authorizes the Administrator to request the Attorney General of the United States to seek in district court injunctive or other appropriate relief to abate an imminent and substantial endangerment arising from hazardous asbestos in a school. The Governor of a State is similarly authorized.

Sec. 209 prohibits discrimination against any person for providing information related to a potential violation of this title.

Sec. 210 authorizes the formation of insurance pools to insure against injuries arising from the release of asbestos. This provision is identical to the provision in the conference approved Superfund bill regarding hazardous wastes.

Sec. 211 requires the Administrator to consider a number of factors related to the specific circumstances of local education agencies when determining the appropriate amount of an administrative civil penalty under TSCA for violations of this title.

Sec. 212 states that this title does not preempt any State from imposing additional liability or requirements with respect to asbestos in school buildings.

Sec. 213 contains definitions applicable to this title.

Sec. 214 states that the various duties assigned to Governors of States shall be construed as having been imposed on the Secretary of Defense with respect to impact aid schools.

Sec. 215 applies to buildings used by the Department of Defense as overseas schools for dependents of employees of the Department of Defense. It requires the Secretary of Defense, to the extent feasible and consistent with the national security, to perform the various inspection and abatement functions required by this title in a manner comparable to that required of local education agencies. The Secretary of Defense and the Administrator shall issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Sec. 3 contains technical and conforming amendments to the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act and the Toxic Substances Control Act.

Sec. 4 amends the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act to refer to the Asbestos Trust Fund created by Sec. 5.

Sec. 5 establishes an Asbestos Trust Fund into which repaid loans from the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act will be deposited. Authorizes borrowing $25 million per year for Fiscal Years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 from the general fund of the Treasury, to be repaid with interest as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 6 of the bill amends The Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act (ASHAA) to provide that, for fiscal years 1987 and 1988, ten percent of funds appropriated under ASHAA of $10 million, whichever is less, will be reserved for financial assistance grants to States or local education agencies. These grants, which are available to both public and private school districts, are to defray the expenses associated with carrying out the provisions of sections 205 and 206 of this title. The funds are to be reserved from funds otherwise used to provide loans under ASHAA. EPA distributes 50 percent of the ASHAA funds for loans to local education agencies and 50 percent for grants. The amendment ensures that the set aside will not reduce the amount of funds available for ASHAA grants to financially needy school districts.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I am very pleased that we have before us today legislation to encourage the identification and abatement of asbestos containing materials in our Nation's schools.

I would like to commend Senator STAFFORD, Senator DURENBERGER, and Senator BAUCUS for their dedication to the development of this important legislation.

It is difficult to overestimate the seriousness of the health threat exposure to asbestos poses to schoolchildren around the country. The EPA estimates that 31,000 schools contain friable asbestos. Some 15 million students and 1.4 million school employees occupy these buildings.

Exposure to even small amounts of asbestos can result in serious, life threatening diseases, including lung cancer, asbestosis, and mesothelioma. Other forms of cancer are also correlated with asbestos exposures.

While anyone exposed to asbestos runs a substantial health risk, children are at an even greater risk. Children are generally more sensitive to asbestos exposures because of higher respiration rates and a longer remaining lifetime in which disease may develop.

I am confident that the bill before us today will improve substantially the level and quality of asbestos abatement actions in schools around the country.

Much of the discussion of the bill has involved the new roles and responsibilities of the EPA. While EPA clearly will play a lead role in implementation of the legislation, success in abatement of asbestos hazards in our schools will require the full commitment of a number of other parties.

We will be relying on a large number of private contractors who inspect for asbestos and conduct the actual repair and removal of asbestos containing materials. The bill provides for development of contractor accreditation programs in the States to assure that contractors are fully qualified to conduct these tasks. While these accreditation programs are important, the quality of asbestos removal work will depend largely on the professionalism and dedication of these private contractors.

We will be relying on States to develop several key aspects of the overall program, including certification of school inspections and accreditation of contractors.

And, we are relying on individual schools to successfully come to grips with a task that is technically and financially challenging. School officials will also have to resolve these questions to the satisfaction of interested citizens.

I believe we have provided school officials, States, private contractors, and the EPA with a sound legislative framework for the abatement of asbestos in our schools. I am confident that each of these parties will do their part to make the process work.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I am pleased to be here today to speak out again in favor of S. 2083, the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986.

I want to thank the chairman, Mr. STAFFORD for his leadership on this issue. I am an original cosponsor of the bill, and I have worked with the chairman to insure serious consideration of this legislation by the Senate.

In the Environment and Public Works Committee, we made several changes to the bill based on recommendations of labor unions, school organizations and officials, health officials, and the EPA. These changes have gained widespread support for S. 2083 from organizations like the American Cancer Society, the National Education Association, the National PTA, the National School Boards Association, the Service Employees International Union, and others.

Asbestos is a known cause of cancer and serious lung disease. Unfortunately prior to 1970, asbestos was used extensively in thousands of schools across the United States.

It is well documented that when released into the air, asbestos fibers can cause lung cancer, asbestosis, pleural mesothelioma, and other debilitating lung diseases.

Children are particularly vulnerable to developing these diseases due to greater sensitivity, higher respiration rates, and a longer remaining lifetime during which the diseases may develop.

Scientists have not demonstrated a threshold level below which exposure to asbestos can be considered safe. Many scientists believe there is no safe level of exposure to asbestos. The increase in the number of cancers linked to long-term asbestos exposure is the result of inadequate control of asbestos in previous decades. Enactment of this legislation will insure that additional avoidable deaths do not occur.

Those who oppose these bills have expressed concern that the cost would be too great. I too am concerned about the cost. But I refuse to accept the argument that the United States cannot afford to provide its most valuable asset, schoolchildren, with a safe environment for learning.

These bills would save money by putting a stop to the unnecessary asbestos removal projects that have taken place. These projects have cost millions of dollars and created life threatening conditions for millions of schoolchildren, Federal employees, and building occupants.

In addition the cost to society of litigation from asbestos-related disease cases is immense and likely to grow. Arguably, avoiding future litigation by appropriate abatement today "saves" society by preventing or discontinuing public exposure to hazards that may result in disease in 15 to 40 years' time.

Dr. John Moore, EPA's Assistant Administrator of Pesticides and Toxic Substances testified in the House Subcommittee on HUD and Independent Agencies that in some cases the quality of asbestos abatement work being conducted created a problem bigger than the one school officials were trying to solve.

Up to now, the EPA has required schools to inspect for asbestos and publicize the results. However, EPA has not required schools to remove or cover the asbestos. EPA has also been very reluctant to provide schools with financial assistance to get the cleanup job done.

As a result, we still have a lot of schools with asbestos and we have the health of a lot of children at risk.

These bills will turn EPA from a passive to an active player in the effort to solve the Nation's asbestos problem.

I urge my colleagues to support this critical legislation.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Madam President, I rise to support final passage of S. 2083, the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986. As an original cosponsor of this legislation, I am pleased that it has received such strong support in the Environment and Public Works Committee and from education and labor groups, and that it is likely to become law before the end of this Congress. This progress would not have been possible without the valuable leadership of the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee. I compliment the chairman and his staff for their good work.

Asbestos is a health hazard. It is a potent carcinogen when damaged and releasing fibers into the air. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 15 million children and 1.4 million employees may be exposed to dangerous asbestos in the 31,000 schools which contain asbestos in their building materials.

The bill before the Senate today will put EPA firmly on the path to ensuring that schools seek out and clean up hazardous asbestos. It will require EPA to set standards for the identification and abatement of hazardous asbestos and for the safe conduct of that abatement. These new requirements will greatly strengthen EPA's asbestos in schools program and will enhance the ability of school districts to provide a safe and healthy environment for their students, teachers, and other employees.

Current EPA regulations require all schools to inspect and test building materials to determine the presence of friable, or crumbling and dangerous, asbestos. If the material is found, parents and school employees must be notified. EPA also provides some technical assistance to schools.

Although EPA does not require any action other than notification after asbestos is identified, many schools have decided on their own that they need to remove or otherwise abate this material. This action has not always been appropriate, but in the absence of EPA regulations, the schools have done the best they could.

The current program, while an important first step, needs strengthening. Discovering the problem is only half the battle. EPA will enter into a partnership with schools to see that hazards are dealt with appropriately. This bill will require EPA to promulgate regulations dealing with identification and abatement of asbestos. The regulations will deal with procedures for determining the presence of hazardous asbestos; standards for determining if asbestos is hazardous; mandatory abatement of hazardous asbestos; standards for performance of abatement activity; standards for operation and maintenance for non-hazardous asbestos; and standards for disposal. The bill includes provisions for setting standards if EPA fails to act in the time period set in the bill.

Another important feature of the bill is a requirement for EPA to develop a model contractor accreditation plan for the States to adopt. This plan will cover asbestos inspectors, people who develop asbestos management plans, abatement workers, and laboratory workers who analyze asbestos samples. This will help to assure that all work involving asbestos is done properly and in accordance with the best and highest standards.

All schools will be required to inspect for asbestos and maintain records on what was done. They will be required to prepare a management plan for abating hazardous asbestos and maintaining nonhazardous asbestos.

Pollution insurance and a revolving fund using the repayment of loans from ASHAA are also addressed in the bill.

Madam President, Congress and EPA have demonstrated in various ways that they recognize the dangers of loose asbestos fibers. This bill, S. 2083, will help to make certain that young schoolchildren and school workers are properly protected from this danger. No longer will cleanup activities be optional, nor will it be possible for untrained workers to conduct the cleanup. It is wrong to leave asbestos in the schools which the Nation's children must attend everyday, and which teachers and other workers must also attend. I urge passage of this legislation and look forward to its implementation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reported committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of calendar item No. 849, H.R. 5073, the House companion bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5073) to amend the Toxic Substance Control Act to require the Environmental Protection Agency to promulgate regulations requiring inspection for asbestos-containing material in the Nation's schools, development of asbestos management plans for such schools, response actions with respect to friable asbestos-containing material in such schools, and for other purposes.

S. 2083, THE ASBESTOS HAZARD EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT OF 1986

Mr. ABDNOR. Madam President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, Senator STAFFORD, as a cosponsor of S. 2083, the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986.

The bill before us today received the unanimous support of the committee members. It is a good bill, and a very necessary one. Enactment of this measure, together with continued funding for the asbestos loan and grant program authorized under the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act of 1984 [ASHAA], will serve to protect our Nation's schoolchildren and employees from asbestos hazards.

This initiative calls for the identification of asbestos problems which, heretofore, have not been identified or adequately addressed. The bill includes a 10-percent set-aside of the funds appropriated for ASHAA in 1987 and 1988 to assist LEA's—local educational agencies—both public and private—in complying with the bill's requirements for inspection and identification of asbestos-containing materials in their buildings and development of O&M—operations and maintenance—plans.

The mere mention of asbestos provokes panic among parents. Asbestos, after all, is a known cause of serious lung disease: including asbestosis and mesothelioma. Children are believed to be at greater risk of contracting asbestos-related diseases due, in part, to the earlier period of life at which they are exposed. Prior to enactment of ASHAA, EPA did little to assist schools in coping with the presence of potentially hazardous asbestos.

Since the enactment of the loan and grant program, the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] has made two rounds of asbestos abatement awards to school districts which have demonstrated financial need. The Agency has established within Dr. Moore's office the Asbestos Action Program. Drawing from the State of Maryland's asbestos abatement contractor specifications and Georgia Tech's contractor training program, the Agency has developed a model contractor training and certification program. Regional training centers have been established at Georgia Tech, Tufts University, Kansas University, University of California-Berkeley, and the University of Illinois. I am advised that more than 20 States now have in place contractor programs.

EPA has revised its asbestos abatement guidance document, the so-called blue book. Information detailing the extent and location of friable, or damaged, asbestos-containing materials—on a building-by-building basis—has been collected from school districts in all 50 States. States have become more involved perhaps, in part, because they play a role in determining which school districts have the most serious asbestos problems and are most deserving of financial assistance. And, EPA has been given the opportunity to provide real help to school districts in mitigating a potentially serious threat to the health of school children and school employees. I believe these efforts have proven far more helpful to school districts—and far more effective in protecting our children—than has the Agency's school inspection and notification rule.

The issue of further funding for the loan and grant program is a crucial one—particularly in light of the increased demand for asbestos abatement funds which will result under this new legislation. Today Senator STAFFORD and I had the opportunity to view firsthand the asbestos mobile training center from Kansas University—one of the fine efforts made possible through ASHAA. If we wish to make certain our schools have the assistance they need to deal with asbestos hazards safely and effectively we must continue to provide Federal financial support through ASHAA.

Thus, it is disturbing to note that the House Appropriations Committee has zeroed out funding for the asbestos loan and grant program in its fiscal year 1987 HUD-Independent Agencies appropriations bill. One must ask whether the House Committee on Appropriations is aware of what this new legislation requires. The answer must certainly be "No" as it is outrageous to think the House would pass this new mandate for our schools without at least maintaining the current Federal effort for assisting them in financing the cost of abatement—particularly when the House-passed bill—unlike the Senate Environment bill before us today—contains a section which pulls the rug out from under schools seeking compensation through the courts for the cost of abating asbestos hazards.

Section 209 of the House bill (H.R. 5073), which renders inadmissible in a court of law the language of the bill and any standards and regulations developed pursuant to it, is highly offensive to the National School Boards Association, the American Association of School Administrators, the Service Employees International Union [SEIU], and many of the other interest groups that speak on behalf of our Nation's school children and employees. If enacted, section 209 of the House bill would make it difficult, if not impossible, for schools to successfully seek compensation from the asbestos industry for the cost of abating asbestos hazards.

Madam President, I wish to congratulate my friend from Vermont on a job well done. He has done a masterful job in moving this bill through the Senate. Once again, Senator STAFFORD has demonstrated his strong commitment to protecting the children of this Nation. I am proud to serve on his committee and I thank both he and his fine staff for working so diligently to accommodate the concerns I expressed as we worked to develop the best possible asbestos-in-schools bill. I also wish to thank the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight, Senator DURENBERGER, for his assistance and that of his able staff. I look forward to working with them to expedite enactment of S. 2083.

Madam President, as the author of ASHAA, I also look forward to continuing to work to ensure adequate funds to assist our schools in mitigating asbestos hazards as we move forward with the consideration of appropriations for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the text of S. 2083, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was read a third time.

The bill having been read the third time, the question is, shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 5073), as amended, was passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2083 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, as in executive session I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from a tax convention with the United Kingdom on behalf of the Government of Bermuda, Treaty Document No. 99-30, which was transmitted to the Senate yesterday by the President of the United States.

I further ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time, that it be referred with accompanying papers to the Committee on Foreign Relations in order to be printed, and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (on behalf of the Government of Bermuda) Relating to the Taxation of Insurance Enterprises and Mutual Assistance in Tax Matters, together with a related exchange of notes, signed at Washington on July 11, 1986. I also transmit the report of the Department of State on the Convention.

The Convention is the first tax treaty applicable to Bermuda to be negotiated between the United States and the United Kingdom. It is not a comprehensive income tax treaty; rather it is limited to two issues: the taxation of insurance enterprises and mutual assistance in tax matters. Nevertheless, the Convention should have a beneficial impact on our overall relationship with Bermuda.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Convention, together with the related exchange of notes, and give its advice and consent to ratification.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 9, 1986.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—APPOINTMENT OF ESCORT COMMITTEE

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort President Jose Sarney of the Federative Republic of Brazil into the House Chamber for the joint meeting to be held at 10 a.m. on September 11, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I would like to inquire of the acting Democratic leader if he is in a position to pass any or all of the following calendar items: Calendar No. 508, Calendar No. 785, Calendar No. 814, Calendar No. 815, Calendar No. 816, Calendar No. 817, and Calendar No. 866.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Madam President, all of these measures have been cleared on the minority side, and we would be willing to have them passed en bloc.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I would then ask unanimous consent that the calendar items just identified be considered en bloc, and passed en bloc, and that all committee-reported amendments and preambles will be considered agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FRANKLIN EDDY CANAL

The bill (H.R. 3443) to designate the closed basin conveyance channel of the closed basin division, San Luis Valley project, Colorado, as the "Franklin Eddy Canal," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF JENS-PETER BERNDT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2271) for the relief of Jens-Peter Berndt.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2271, a bill which I introduced to assist Jens-Peter Berndt in becoming a citizen of the United States. I have been joined in sponsoring the bill by my distinguished colleagues, Senators HEFLIN, STEVENS, MURKOWSKI, KASSEBAUM, and NICKLES.

Jens-Peter Berndt, or Peter, is 22 years old and a native of the German Democratic Republic, better known as East Germany, a Communist-bloc state. On January 7, 1985, while in Oklahoma City as a member of the East German swim team, Peter requested and was granted political asylum in the United States. He made that courageous decision, at great personal risk, because he wanted to become an American and live in freedom.

Peter was fortunate to be legally adopted in September of 1985, by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Patterson of Birmingham, AL. The Pattersons have provided him with the love, family life and guidance that have been so immeasurably important in assisting Peter in making the transition to American life.

Peter is currently enrolled at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, where he is a member of the swim team and is a dean's list student. He is an amateur swimmer of Olympic caliber, and is a former world record holder in the 400 meter individual medley. Unfortunately, Peter was prevented from competing in the 1984 summer Olympic games in Los Angeles due to the Soviet-sponsored boycott of the games which was joined by East Germany.

It is Peter's desire, and that of the U.S. Olympic Swimming Team, that he compete for the United States in the 1988 Olympic games. However, in order to do so, the rules of the U.S. Olympic Committee require that he be a U.S. citizen. Furthermore, he must be a citizen in order to compete in a number of key international swimming meets which are important preliminary steps to qualifying for the 1988 Olympic team. Already, Peter has been prevented from participating this summer in the Goodwill games in Moscow and the World Championships in Spain because he is not a U.S. citizen.

Without private relief legislation, Peter would not satisfy the residency and physical presence requirements for naturalization under section 316 of the Immigration and Nationality Act until 1990. This would result in extreme hardship in Peter's case, because by 1990 he will be far beyond his prime as a competitive swimmer. Thus, 1988 is probably Peter's last chance to compete for the United States in the Olympics.

S. 2271 provides that Peter be deemed to have satisfied the residency and physical presence requirements so that he may be naturalized at the earliest possible date. This will permit Peter to represent the United States in upcoming international competition and the 1988 Olympics.

The bill also provides that Peter be admitted for permanent residence in the United States, as that is a prerequisite for naturalization. Although he is lawfully present in the United States by reason of his asylum status, he has not yet been granted permanent resident status.

Finally, the bill provides that Peter will not be ineligible for U.S. citizenship because of his former life in a Communist country. Peter was raised in a country in which, tragically, Communist repression permeates every segment of public and private life, and in which athletes, in particular, are exploited for the government's purposes. Peter did not choose to be born into such a system; but, when the time came to make a choice, he bravely chose to be free and to be an American.

I believe that Peter Berndt's situation presents a compelling and appropriate case for private relief legislation to expedite his naturalization as a U.S. citizen. Here is a young man who, at the age of 21, risked everything to defect from Communist East Germany to the United States.

It should be noted that if Peter's only interest was to compete in international competition and the 1988 Olympics, he could become a West German citizen automatically and swim for West Germany. But that is not his sole motivation. As Peter says, "I want to become an American, not a West German."

I am proud to sponsor legislation to assist this fine young man in his quest for American citizenship. His story is an inspiration to us all and an embodiment of the "American Dream" in its finest sense. He has demonstrated his devotion to American ideals and his desire and willingness to work hard to succeed in this country. I believe Peter will make an outstanding citizen, and I urge my colleagues to vote for passage of S. 2271.

Thank, you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2271) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2271

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding paragraphs (14) and (28) of section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, for purposes of such Act, Jens-Peter Berndt shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the number of refugee admissions available for adjustment of status of aliens under section 209(b) of such Act shall be reduced by one number.

(b)(1) Jens-Peter Berndt shall be held and considered to have satisfied the provisions of section 316 of the Immigration and Nationality Act which relate to required periods of residence and physical presence within the United States and shall not be held or considered to be within any of the classes of persons described in section 313 of such Act.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 310(d) of such Act, Jens-Peter Berndt may be naturalized at any time after the date of enactment of this Act if otherwise eligible for naturalization under this Act and the Immigration and Nationality Act.

REFERRAL OF S. 273 TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The resolution (S. Res. 48) to refer S. 273, entitled "A bill for the relief of Mildred C. Eide of Leavenworth, Kansas" to the chief judge of the United States Claims Court for a report thereon, was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 48

Resolved, That S. 273 entitled "A bill for the relief of Mildred C. Eide of Leavenworth, Kansas" now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, is referred to the chief judge of the United States Claims Court. The chief judge shall proceed according to the provisions of sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28, United States Code, and report back to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions that are sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand as a legal or equitable claim against the United States or a gratuity, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

RELIEF OF GERALD M. HENDLEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1529) for the relief of Gerald M. Hendley.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I want to commend the chairman and members of the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure, and the full Judiciary Committee, for reporting H.R. 1529, a bill for the relief of Gerald M. Hendley.

This legislation is identical to S. 299, a bill I introduced on behalf of Mr. Hendley. It would remove obstacles that have prevented Mr. Hendley from seeking legal redress for permanent, disabling injuries he suffered as a child. Mr. Hendley has been persistent in pursuing his rights for many years, and I commend him for his perseverance.

Mr. President, the relief provided by H.R. 1529 is clearly justified. I hope the Senate will approve this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 1529) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF MARY E. STOKES

The bill (H.R. 1783) for the relief of Mary E. Stokes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF PAULETTE MENDES-SILVA

The bill (H.R. 2316) for the relief of Paulette Mendes-Silva, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE HAWAII VOLCANOES NATIONAL PARK

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

S. 2320

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADDITION TO HAWAII VOLCANOES NATIONAL PARK

The Act entitled "An Act to add certain lands on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaii National Park, and for other purposes" (52 Stat. 781; 16 U.S.C. 391b) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized to acquire by [purchase with donated or appropriated funds, donation,] donation or exchange the land and interests therein comprising approximately 5,650 acres and identified as tract number 118/22 on the map entitled 'Recommended Land Acquisition', in the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park Land Protection Plan as recommended May 17, 1985, which plan shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Director, National Park Service, Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C. and the Office of the Superintendent, Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, Hawaii.

"(b) In exercising his authority to acquire the real property referred to in subsection (a) by exchange, the Secretary may accept title thereto and in exchange therefor he may convey to the grantor of such real property title to any United States Government real property under his administrative jurisdiction, other than real property within or administered as a part of the National Park System, in the State of Hawaii which he determines is suitable for such exchange. The values of the properties exchanged shall be approximately equal, or if they are not approximately equal, the values shall be equalized by the payment of money to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require. In no circumstance shall an equalization payment exceed one fourth (25 percent) the appraised value of the real property referred to in subsection (a). Any money paid on the Secretary shall be deposited as miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury of the United States.

"(c) Real property owned by the State of Hawaii or any political subdivision thereof may be acquired only by donation or exchange.

"(d)(1) In order to facilitate the acquisition of the real property referred to in subsection (a) by exchange, notwithstanding any other provision of law, upon request of the Secretary, the Administrator of General Services shall transfer to the Secretary, without reimbursement, administrative jurisdiction over any excess or surplus United States Government real property in the State of Hawaii for purposes of such an exchange.

"(2) For the purposes of a land exchange with the State of Hawaii, the Secretary shall consult with the State of Hawaii in the process of identifying suitable exchange lands belonging to the United States Government.

"(3) For the purposes of a land exchange with the State of Hawaii, real property owned by the United States Government and selected for use in a land exchange shall not be from among those lands ceded to the United States Government.

"(e) The real property acquired by the Secretary pursuant to this section shall be administered by the Secretary as part of Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, subject to the laws and regulations applicable to the Park

["(f) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the acquisition of real property under this section.".]

"(f) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated up to $700,000 to carry out the purpose of this section.".

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the various items were passed or agreed to.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Madam President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10:30 a.m. on Thursday, September 11, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes each: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, MURKOWSKI, LEVIN, TRIBLE, BINGAMAN, and HARKIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, following the execution of the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM REHNQUIST

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, at 11 a.m., it is the intention of the majority leader to go into executive session to begin consideration of the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Votes could occur during Thursday's session and the Senate could be asked to remain in session rather late into the evening.

I think it is important for all of us to know that the agenda is heavy. The adjournment date is October 3, and the majority leader and the minority leader are desirous of obtaining that goal.

The way we will do that is to have a little bit of distruption in our ordinary activities, with Monday activity and voting, Friday activity and voting, and undoubtedly we will see some Saturday activity.

Senators should be prepared for a session into the evening tomorrow.

VISIT BY THE PRESIDENT OF BRAZIL

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I remind all Senators that at 10 a.m. tomorrow there is a joint session to hear an address by the President of Brazil. Senators are asked to assemble in the Senate Chamber at 9:30 a.m. in order to proceed as a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear that address.

I will inquire of my friend from Wisconsin, the acting Democratic leader, if he has further business.

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank my good friend. No, I have no further observations, except that the acting majority leader is a fine fellow.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank my friend from Wisconsin.

□ 1930

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10:30 a.m. on Thursday, September 11, 1986.

The motion was agreed to and, at 7:26 p.m., the Senate recessed until Thursday, September 11, 1986, at 10:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 10, 1986

The House met at 10 a.m.

The SPEAKER. Today we have the great honor and pleasure of having as our visiting chaplain a person who is known to all Americans, a hero to all of us, the Reverend Lawrence Martin Jenco, a Servite priest from Joliet, IL.

Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, Joliet, IL, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Father, do not turn from us, and do not avoid us now that we are looking for words to pray to You.

If we call You God and speak Your name it is because You first pierced the silence and called us sons and daughters.

You have given us Your word that You will not be far from us whenever we turn to You in faith.

And so we cast aside our doubts and our fears and place our trust in Your promise to us.

Long ago You breathed upon the waters and stirred them to life.

We ask You now to breath Your spirit once more upon our world which so desperately seeks a new heart and a new spirit which only Your touch can bring.

But You have promised us that good will be triumphant, that all will be restored to You, that death and pain will be no more.

God of love, I stand and pray with and for these men and women who govern this Nation of ours.

Lead us from death to life, from falsehood to truth.

Lead us from despair to hope, from fear to trust.

Lead us from hate to love, from war to peace.

Let peace fill our hearts, our world, our universe.

I thank You for the precious gift of my freedom. Please, dear God, grant freedom to all of Your sons and daughters our brothers and sisters who are held captive, by whatever means around the world. We ask especially that You grant freedom to Tom Sutherland, David Jacobsen, Terry Anderson, and Frank Herbert Reed.

Father, keep in Your eternal love and embrace George O'Brien. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4021. An act to extend and improve the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

THE REVEREND LAWRENCE MARTIN JENCO

(Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, shortly after Father Lawrence Martin Jenco was released after being held hostage for more than a year and a half, we learned from newspaper reports that for the first 6 months he had been kept in solitary confinement with his ankle chained to a wall.

It was also reported that whenever his captors asked Father Jenco if he wanted anything, he always had the same reply—a taxicab.

I don't know what his captors thought about that remark, but to me it was awe inspiring. Anybody who can keep a sense of humor under those circumstances is a remarkable person. The way Father Jenco and other hostages have withstood their ordeal says a lot about the potential of the human spirit to not only survive, but to maintain their dignity as human beings.

When Father Jenco was released, one of his sisters, Mrs. Mae Mihelich, told a reporter that "We waited, we prayed, and we never gave up hope."

She, and other family members and friends of the hostages, also did something else—they worked very hard and very effectively for the release of these Americans, who, after all, were being held because of their nationality. Her daughter, Ms. Kay Mihelich, who resides in my hometown of Dublin, GA, is among those who have been very active in these efforts and she inspired me to become more involved in keeping the issue before the public.

Our dear colleague, Representative George O'Brien, who passed away earlier this year, represented the district in which Father Jenco lives. He was deeply involved and his leadership in this effort is certainly missed.

Every time Father Jenco has been publicly welcomed home, he has emphasized that we should not forget those Americans who are still held captive. His presence here today will inspire us once more to continue praying, to keep our hopes alive, and to work as hard as we can to bring our fellow countrymen back home to freedom.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to welcome Father Lawrence Martin Jenco to the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia kindly stay at the microphone. There are some Members who are going to ask to be yielded to.

Does the gentleman from California desire the gentleman from Georgia to yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the gentleman for those kind words about Father Jenco and ask to put in the RECORD at this point a capsule of the circumstances of Frank Reed's kidnaping.

On Tuesday, four gunmen driving a blue Volvo abducted Frank Herbert Reed, 53, of Malden, Mass., director of the private Lebanese International School in Moslem west Beirut.

Islamic Jihad, a group of Shiite Moslem fundamentalists, claimed responsibility for the kidnapping. The group has said it holds at least three other Americans.

Police said today they had no indication where Reed was being held.

His kidnapping was the first of an American in Lebanon in 15 months. It also was the first abduction of a foreigner since July 4, when Syrian troops moved into west Beirut to take control from warring militia factions.

A spate of politically motivated abductions in 1985 prompted most Americans and other Westerners to leave the city.

The U.S. State Department has refused to divulge the number of Americans still in Lebanon, but a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Christian east Beirut said 454 remained in the capital.

The spokesman, Christopher P. English, said most of those remaining held dual Lebanese and American passports.

An anonymous caller claiming to speak for Islamic Jihad charged in a call to a Western news agency that Reed was a spy for the CIA and that "documents convicting him" were found on him.

"We found out that his educational mission was a mere disguise for his espionage efforts," the caller said Tuesday. "The real Moslems have uncovered the game and they will punish whoever is involved in it."

An editor at the news agency said the caller spoke Lebanese-accented Arabic and hung up after reading a statement. The Christian-run Voice of Lebanon radio said the man promised to distribute Reed's photograph soon.

Islamic Jihad, which espouses the teachings of Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, has cautioned repeatedly that any statement purporting to come from it without a hostage photograph would be false.

Police said the assailants, toting silencer-equipped pistols and driving in dark blue Volvo, rammed Reed's chauffer-driven car onto the sidewalk near the ruins of a supermarket in west Beirut's Bir Hassan district.

Reed was driving from his home in west Beirut's Manara neighborhood to play golf at the war-scarred course on the city's southern edge. Two men climbed out of the Volvo, forced Reed and his Lebanese driver at gunpoint to get into the kidnapper's car and sped off, police said.

The driver was freed minutes later a few hundred yards from the headquarters of Syrian intelligence officers in charge of enforcing a security plan to restore law and order in west Beirut.

The driver, whose name was not given, went to Reed's home and informed Reed's Syrian wife, Fahima Dalati, of the abduction, police said.

A school associate said Reed has lived in Lebanon about eight years and converted to Islam before his marriage. The associate, who insisted on anonymity, said the couple have a 5-year-old son, Tareq.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We call on those who may be holding Mr. Reed, as well as the other foreign hostages in Lebanon, to release their captives immediately."

Other American hostages held by Islamic Jihad are Terry A. Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David Jacobsen, 55, of Huntington Beach, Calif., director of the American University Hospital; and Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., acting dean of the university's agriculture faculty.

Sutherland, kidnapped on June 10, 1985, was the last American reported abducted in west Beirut before Tuesday.

Islamic Jihad said last fall it had killed another American hostage, U.S. Embassy political officer William Buckley, 58, but no body was ever found. Buckley was kidnapped March 16, 1984.

The group also claims it holds three French hostages.

In all, 17 foreigners are now missing in Lebanon, including Reed. They include five Americans, seven Frenchmen, two Britons, one Italian, one Irishman and one South Korean.

I want to tell Father Jenco what an inspiration he is to all of us. It is just stunning with all the times we have mentioned your name in this Chamber over the last 2 years to have you finally here speaking to us.

I have this letter, Mr. Speaker, to President Assad of Syria. There are currently 30 signatures on it, added to the 251 I delivered on June 30, and I would ask that the Speaker and all the leadership, as I have and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], sign this letter and get this over to Mr. Assad as soon as possible so that he continues to use his offices, which Father Jenco agrees with, to try to get these four remaining—five if Bill Buckley is still alive, Americans out.

The SPEAKER. Do any other Members desire the gentleman from Georgia to yield?

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our late friend and colleague George M. O'Brien, I wish to welcome our guest chaplain today, Father Lawrence Martin Jenco.

Father Jenco has an unusual claim on our attention today. He was held captive in Lebanon from January 8, 1985, until July 26 of this year. During that time, his family worked tirelessly for his release.

Also recently released by the captors in Lebanon was Rev. Benjamin Weir, a constituent of mine.

Father Jenco is a native of Joliet, IL. He was serving as head of the Beirut office of the Catholic Relief Services when he was kidnaped. He was held for just over a year and a half.

So our joy is in having Father Jenco with us today but it is tempered by the news that another American has been taken hostage in Beirut in the last few days.

We warmly welcome Father Jenco, but we must continue to work toward the release of the other five Americans now being held in captivity, and insure that no other Americans face this terrible ordeal in the future.

CONGRESS JOINS FORCES IN WAR ON ILLEGAL DRUGS

(Mr. LEWIS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today Congress is finally coming together to address a problem of great urgency, narcotics abuse, and trafficking.

I am pleased by the sudden national attention to the drug crisis.

It's high time the Federal Government took the lead in this crisis which touches Americans of all walks of life.

Although this legislation is a symbol of hope, I would like to offer one word of caution. An enthusiastic burst of reform energy can start a war, but it cannot win it.

Too often the celebrated cause of today is the forgotten cause of tomorrow.

We must not let the drug war be a passing fancy.

American citizens and public officials must make a true and lasting commitment to education, rehabilitation, and enforcement.

The ultimate triumph over the drug epidemic will require more than a declaration of intent. It must be accomplished through thoughtful persistence.

This legislation will pave the way for a more drug-free America, yet we must work to see that the reform path is traveled and not simply laid and forgotten.

SUPPORT RESOLUTION CONDEMNING SOVIET UNION FOR ARRESTING NICHOLAS DANILOFF

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that Father Jenco delivered our prayer this morning. Later today the House will consider a resolution which I have sponsored condemning the Soviet Union for arresting Nicholas Daniloff and demanding his immediate and unconditional release.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take part in the discussion of this issue. The Soviets must understand that there will be no business as usual with the United States until Nick Daniloff is a free man. They must understand that the American people and the American Congress, on a bipartisan basis, are outraged by Mr. Daniloff's arrest.

Yesterday, a Soviet spokesman made the incredible statement that the Daniloff case was not important and would not affect United States-Soviet relations.

I have news for the Russians. Nick Daniloff's case is damned important. No country arrests an innocent American, throws him in jail, and threatens to put him on trial for his life and then expects to conduct business as usual with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join with me so that we can impress upon the Soviet Union just how important Nick Daniloff's case is to the Congress and to the American people.

A SALUTE TO ST. RITA'S CATHOLIC SCHOOL OF DUNDALK, MD

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I salute St. Rita's Catholic School of Dundalk, MD, which is celebrating its 60th anniversary this month.

St. Rita's was built by the parishioners of a church bearing the same name. These people selflessly contributed their time and effort in a fantastic example of mutual cooperation and dedication. They worked from the early mornings to the late evenings to achieve this task.

Three of the original five nuns who charted the course in 1926 attended the 60th anniversary celebration last Sunday.

Today, St. Rita's is one of the finest parochial schools in Maryland. It consists of over 200 students, the majority of which perform at or above grade level. In fact, the Dundalk school was among 270 public and private elementary schools in the Nation cited for excellence by Secretary of Education William Bennett last June and was described as the outstanding school in the entire State of Maryland.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the legacy of success established by St. Rita's School, and I wish it all the best for its next 60 years.

NATIONAL LEADERSHIP ON DRUG ABUSE

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider legislation to lay a foundation upon which a badly needed national policy on drug abuse can be built. The tragedy of the drug menace in America is well-documented. What is needed is national leadership, and while the bill will provide legal authority for action, we must understand the drug crisis is more than a legislative problem. It is a crisis of the American spirit.

□ 1015

It is a cancer that robs America of its human vitality and eats away at the human resources that have made our Nation great.

Mr. Speaker, this long-overdue legislation, which will pass with overwhelming support in this House, is a declaration of war against the enemy within. As we vote today, let our actions send a message to every American community that today we stand together, united against the single greatest threat to the American way of life—drug abuse.

TAX CONFERENCE REPORT UNFAIR TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to again bring to the attention of the House a provision which is in the tax reform bill which severely hurts Federal employees, teachers, policemen, and firemen.

There is a retroactive provision in the bill that says if they do not retire by July 1, they have to pay extra benefits to the Federal Government. I would ask that the Ways and Means Committee and the leadership of both the House and Senate and the conference committee come together in a spirit of bipartisanship and do what is right. A retroactive provision in this bill is unfair.

Mr. Speaker, we have an opportunity. The bill will come up next week, and I would hope that we can get together and do what is right to protect these people that have given so many valuable years of service to our Government.

THE PROBLEM

There is a serious and major flaw in the tax reform bill conference report which targets public servants who contribute to and pay taxes on their retirement plans. Under current tax law, a 3-year basis recovery rule allows persons who have made contributions to their retirement plans and paid taxes on those contributions up to a 3-year period to recoup those amounts.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE TAX REFORM BILL

The tax reform package would repeal the 3-year basis recovery rule and provide that immediately upon retirement, annuities would be subject to taxation. The contributed amounts, while exempt from taxation, would be spread out actuarially over the life of the pension.

While that provision itself is cause for alarm among public servants, what is even more onerous is that the tax conference report repeals the rule retroactively. The effective date is made retroactive to July 1, 1986.

WHO IS AFFECTED?

Twenty million police, firemen, teachers, local, State, and Federal Government workers and congressional staff who are trapped because they stayed past the July 1 deadline out of loyalty and commitment to the projects they were working on, to see to completion the term of their congressional Member, or because they never for a moment thought that the provision would be made retroactive.

WHAT THE CONSTITUENTS SAY

* * * Who would expect Congress to change the rule without any advance warning for thousands like me? If not unprecedented [this provision] is unfair, unforgivable and undeserved. Please, as a gesture of fairness to government employees, give us a chance to retire without a new retroactive penalty, alone among the U.S. taxpayers.

For us the approximate $15,000 that we will no longer have in a 1987 retirement year in real terms means our daughter's college tuition, which we cannot provide out of a reduced retirement salary * * *.

By that action, the Conference Committee clearly reduced my salary over the past 23 years by over $55,000. Many retirees will not live long enough to collect the money they paid taxes on and contributed to their retirement fund. Please tell me how that is fair.

Let's do what is just, equitable, and right. Let's work to change the retroactive and unfair provision in the tax bill.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT ON TODAY DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit today during the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, this matter has been cleared by the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). Is there objection to the request of the gentlman from Illinois?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no notification at the desk that it has been cleared with the minority.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it has been cleared with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER], the ranking minority member, and it relates to aviation bills.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

REHNQUIST MAKES THE DARK AGES LOOK GOOD

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, William Rehnquist might have been qualified to be Chief Justice somewhere, sometime, but certainly not of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1986.

His views are so dim they make the Dark Ages look like the Enlightment.

His ERA memorandum reveals a man on the wrong side of every principle, impulse, and idea that makes America the great country it is—a man opposed to equality, democracy, individualism, progress, and capitalism.

Opposed to capitalism? The free market is not gender specific. Indeed, clearly Mr. Rehnquist is qualified to run the Supreme Court in a rural, traditional, ecclesiastic country where the state is god and god is the state, a country where nothing changes because progress is prohibited.

Mr. Rehnquist's conclusion that the ERA would lead to "the eventual elimination of the [family] unit" is patently idiotic. Eight of the 10 States with the highest divorce rate have no equal rights amendment. The two States with the lowest divorce rate (Pennsylvania and Massachusetts) have strong State ERA's.

MASS MURDER IN A HOUSE OF GOD

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, last week's murder of 21 Turkish Jews in Istanbul's main synagogue was a totally barbaric act, similar to the Nazi atrocities of 50 years ago.

The Jewish community has lived peacefully in Turkey for many years, but with the importation of well-financed and heavily armed psychopathic killers, 21 innocent people were killed during their worship in a house of God.

Those who organize and finance these acts are the lowest form of vermin that crawl on this Earth. Like the Nazis who inspired their methods, the West should relentlessly hunt them down one by one to meet the justice they deserve.

In the 1930's we learned of the futility of negotiating with people who are capable of such crimes. Let us remember that lesson as we move to strike back against terrorism wherever it may hide.

REFERENDUM ON CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, four times during 1986 the Federal Reserve Board has lowered the discount rate, and four times this year the prime rate has been dropped. Despite the overall drop in interest rates, holders of the 700 million credit cards in this country have seen little if any drop in the interest rate they pay on their credit cards.

I have watched while credit cardholders have paid usurious interest rates of more than 18 percent on an average across this country, and I have been told not to worry, that the marketplace will set the interest rates. Well, I am worried, because the marketplace is not helping credit cardholders, it is gouging them.

The American people are sick and tired of being forced to pay these high rates. Tomorrow the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee, which I am privileged to chair, will hold a referendum on high interest rates. It will be the first of what I hope will be a series of votes in the subcommittee, the full committee, and on the floor of this House that will give Members a chance to tell their constituents whether they are for or against high interest rates.

Tomorrow's vote will come on a measure that will set a floating ceiling on credit card interest rates, and the credit card industry is working hard to defeat such a bill. Tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. the American people will have an opportunity to be heard through their elected representatives.

We do a lot of talking about the evils of high interest rates in this body; tomorrow we have a chance to vote against high interest rates. I hope I will be able to bring legislation to this floor shortly so that every Member of this body will have an opportunity to cast a record vote against high interest rates.

SUPPORT PASSAGE OF DRUG ABUSE LEGISLATION

(Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, over these past few weeks and past few years we have heard a lot about the drug abuse problem that we are facing in this country. It is unfortunate that it has taken the death of a few prominent athletes for the public attention finally to rise, but in these next 2 days we have the opportunity to vote for the omnibus drug bill, a provision that has been worked on for the past couple of weeks by those on the select committee and those on the task force.

What we have seen, Mr. Speaker, over the last 10 years has been a tremendous change in the drug abuse scene. Ten years ago the perception of drug abuse was of a heroin addict in the alleys of our urban areas. Then over the past 5 years we have seen more and more acceptance of marijuana use among our young people and others in other age groups, and unfortunately now what we have seen in the past 2 to 3 years has been an acceptance of cocaine use crisscrossing all age and social and economic barriers, and now in 1986 we see the faddist acceptance of the abuse of crack. The young people, old people, people involved in cocaine, and people involved in marijuana now feel that the use of crack is not going to have a bad impact on their health.

Mr. Speaker, we have a tremendous opportunity in the next 2 days to work together in a bipartisan fashion to come together to bring a strong drug abuse plan to the American people, and I hope that we can act in a bipartisan fashion to see passage of this legislation. I urge all of my colleagues to support its passage.

SOLUTION TO DRUG PROBLEM DEPENDS ON CHANGING BEHAVIOR

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I have worked hard on the problem of drugs as a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics for a decade and a half, and I am absolutely delighted and pleased that the House is now addressing the problem of drug addiction in a major way on a totally bipartisan, nonpolitical basis. Nothing could be healthier for the future of the American people, because this is truly a question of life or death.

I am pleased that we are putting in money for law enforcement, but law enforcement will never do the job. As long as the demand is as intense as it is now, the real challenge for us is not only to try to interdict the flow of drugs into our country and eradicate the drugs on the fields abroad where they are growing, the challenge to us is to change the behavior of our youth.

It is a tough job, but we know it can be done. We have changed behavior in America on diet. We have changed behavior in America on exercise. We have changed behavior on the ingestion of tobacco. We have changed behavior on the ingestion of alcohol, the reduction of drunk driving, for example.

We can change behavior with drugs, but it is going to take a massive effort through the entire spectrum of American society, through all of our institutions: the schools, the churches, parents, the media, the workplace, all working together to teach kids that life is a high, and that they do not have to retreat into the netherworld of drugs which spells death to their careers, to their education prospects, to their job prospects and their very lives themselves.

DANILOFF ARREST IS STATE-SPONSORED TERRORISM

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, the news is filled today with the taking of yet another American hostage, this time by a major world power, the Soviet Union. I speak of the arrest and incarceration of U.S. News & World Report correspondent, Nicholas Daniloff.

Mr. Speaker, some of us had intended to visit the Soviet Union during the month of August and discovered that our invitation was abruptly canceled just hours before our departure.

We found that distressing at the time, but now can see a correlation between the international diplomatic actions that the Soviet Union took during the period that we were to visit that country. Now we understand that Mr. Daniloff is being threatened with death and interrogated a minimum of 4 hours a day.

I call upon the international community to speak out in opposition to this act of state-sponsored terrorism.

CONSUMERS DESERVE CREDIT CARD RATE CAP

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, for 2 years now, I have been pushing for a national cap on credit card interest rates.

Why? Because the credit card industry is milking every last cent they can get out of the American consumer.

While the cost of money to banks and other credit card issuers has dropped 60 percent over the last 5 years, those same institutions have actually raised the interest on their credit cards.

Consider that it costs banks a mere 5.5 percent to borrow money from the Federal Reserve. Yet, the average interest rate on bank-issued credit cards is around 19 percent. That's nearly a 400 percent profit markup, and that's a national disgrace.

I'm not the only one concerned. More than 40 of my colleagues have joined as a cosponsor of my bill, H.R. 1197, to cap credit card rates.

Tomorrow, the Banking Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, chaired by our distinguished colleague, FRANK ANNUNZIO, will be marking up that bill.

There is other good news for the 100 million Americans who use credit cards, as well. Just last week, the Key Bank of Western New York issued a credit card at a 9.9-percent interest rate—with no gimmicks. They expect to do quite well and if they can do well by charging less, so can all the others.

BIPARTISAN DRUG PACKAGE

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, later today, we will be considering the bipartisan drug package that has been brought to the floor by the Republican and Democratic leadership. I want to congratulate both the people on my side of the aisle, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] and the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], who led our part of the bipartisan drug task force, on which I was privileged to serve, and the leaders on the other side; namely, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], who have helped produce this package.

It is, however, my understanding that there may be an attempt to fight the rule on the floor with regard to this drug package.

That rule was crafted in a way to make certain that the issues that need to be addressed in this bipartisan drug package get addressed on the floor.

Those who fight this rule today will be trying their best to kill off a process that has brought the bill. I would hope that the House is going to approve the rule and keep the process moving.

This drug bill is extremely important at this time. The American people will be very disappointed if it is killed off by a few Members who do not want to vote on key issues on the House floor.

THREE-YEAR TAX RULE

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the House's attention the outrage which State, local, and Federal employees are feeling. They are justifiably upset of the tax conferees' retroactive elimination of the 3-year recovery rule.

The 3-year recovery rule allows people who contribute to their retirement systems to recover those contributions tax free during the first 3 years after retirement. This is because those contributions have already been taxed when the money is withdrawn from their paychecks.

Mr. Speaker, these employees have planned their retirement on the premise that they would have low tax exposure during the early years of retirement. Now they are faced with the retroactive withdrawal of this provision. This will mean a substantial loss for thousands of our Nation's hardest-working citizens—the people who defend our country, who risk their lives enforcing our laws and extinguishing our fires, who teach our children and care for our sick and elderly.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the conferees and this House to reject this retroactive provision. At the very least, these people deserve warning, so that they can adjust their retirement plans accordingly. They have served us and the Nation well. Let's treat them with fairness and with the respect that they deserve as they begin their hard-earned retirement.

ENOUGH IS ENOUGH FOR RURAL AMERICA

(Mr. ANTHONY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, during the district work week, I went back and held a farm credit forum for 1987. I invited members from the Farm Credit System, Farmers' Home Administration, to come in.

Almost while we were doing that forum with the Farmers' Home Administration official from the State saying that there would be less direct loan money for 1987, only guaranteed loan money, with no indication as to how the scarcity of funds would be properly allocated out among our farmers, we saw that the national office, USDA, dropped for the full loan rate the money for soybeans. Then, if that was not enough, we find that USDA is so callous that they have gone out and hired a private collection agency from New Jersey to come to Arkansas to tell our farmers that enough is enough and we are going to jerk your loans and take your farms away from you; not sit down face to face and try to work out some agenda.

I say to the administration, enough is enough. You have got to sit down and work with our farmers. You are ruining rural America; you are runing our farmers out of their rural areas. There are no jobs in the cities. Enough is enough.

CONDEMNATION OF THE SOVIET UNION FOR ITS ARREST, IMPRISONMENT, AND INDICTMENT OF NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 542) concerning the arrest, imprisonment, and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff by the Soviet Union, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 542

Whereas the Government of the Soviet Union has without justification arrested, imprisoned, and indicted Nicholas Daniloff, a United States citizen and a correspondent for U.S. News & World Report; and

Whereas this mistreatment of Nicholas Daniloff is the most recent and outrageous violation by the Soviet Union of its international obligations, including its obligations under the Helsinki Final Act which states, with respect to the Improvement of Working Conditions for Journalists, that "the participating states reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will neither render journalists liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) condemns the Soviet Union for its unjustified and unprecedented arrest, imprisonment, and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff;

(2) demands that the Soviet authorities immediately and unconditionally release Nicholas Daniloff;

(3) urges the Soviet Union to abide by its international obligations to allow journalists to pursue their profession without harassment or coercion; and

(4) expresses its deep concern that the continued detention of Nicholas Daniloff can have only the most serious and adverse affect on negotiations and other relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, particularly at a time when preparations are underway for a second summit meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev.

Mr. FASCELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to afford the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], an opportunity to explain this resolution.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution.

The arrest and imprisonment of U.S. News & World Report Moscow correspondent Nicholas Daniloff on fabricated charges of espionage is an obvious provocation which can only have negative consequences for United States-Soviet relations. It is clear that Daniloff's arrest was part of a frame-up by the Soviet KGB which has historically and consistently monitored and harassed U.S. citizens, diplomats, journalists, and businessmen while in the Soviet Union.

The treatment of Western journalists by the Soviet authorities has fallen far short of the requirements established in the Helsinki Final Act for the treatment of foreign journalists. The case of Nicholas Daniloff is the most recent and outrageous of many Soviet violations of the Helsinki commitment to improve the working conditions for journalists in the legitimate pursuit of their activities.

In light of my discussions with General Secretary Gorbachev a few months ago and his expressed willingness and desire to improve United States-Soviet relations, I am shocked and disappointed by this latest example of Soviet disregard for international standards of conduct and decency. I am particularly disappointed in view of recent reports that the Gorbachev era would bring more openness and frankness into Soviet society.

During my recent visit to the Soviet Union, I was appalled to see and hear first hand the treatment accorded our journalists and diplomats stationed in that country. They are constantly watched, are required to live in compounds guarded by officers of the KGB, and are restricted in every way, particularly in the ability to deal directly with the Soviet people and with members of the party's Central Committee and the Central Government. This sorry state of affairs stands in stark contrast to the way Soviet diplomats and journalists are treated in the United States.

I am considering introducing legislation restricting the access of Soviet diplomats and journalists to the grounds and buildings of the U.S. Congress. Such an action would put the Soviet authorities on notice that they cannot continue this policy of harassment and interference with Western journalists and diplomats and simultaneously expect free and unhindered access by their representatives here.

I strongly urge support of this resolution.

□ 1035

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, at some appropriate time, if he would be kind enough to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] who is the original sponsor of this resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I certainly will, Mr. Speaker.

Under my reservation, Mr. Speaker, I offer my support for this resolution concerning the illegal arrest and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff by the Soviet Union.

I am angry and confused by the actions of Soviet authorities. The arrest of Mr. Daniloff is clearly an outrage that violates the standards of civilized behavior. Do the Soviets care about what impact their actions will have on a future summit meeting? Who's in charge there, anyway?

Shortly after a Soviet employee of the United Nations was arrested and accused of espionage, the Soviets brazenly arrested Mr. Daniloff. His detention is clearly an outrage. He was clearly framed by the KGB who had a friend of Mr. Daniloff pass him an envelope. The Soviets had cleverly put classified material in the envelope.

The Kremlin ignored a personal letter from President Reagan to General Secretary Gorbachev concerning the Daniloff case and the need to resolve it.

Mr. Gorbachev rejected the President's appeal. A few days later, Mr. Daniloff was formally charged with spying. The KGB has also fabricated new details about Mr. Daniloff's alleged activities. This unwise indictment of an innocent man raises the issue to a new and more serious level.

The Soviets then proceeded to link the arrest of the Soviet spy in New York with the detention of Mr. Daniloff. Our Government must not be manipulated into exchanging an accused spy for an innocent journalist. There must be no trade.

Who is calling the shots in the Soviet Union? Is it Mr. Gorbachev, the KGB, or the Soviet military? I clearly recall Mr. Gorbachev's promises to make the Soviet Union a more open society in which candid self-criticism would occur. Is that the country that complains that its peaceful purposes in this world often go unrecognized by the United States? Is the kidnaping of Mr. Daniloff the decision of Mr. Gorbachev, a media-conscious leader who prides himself in being a modern Soviet man? How will this intimidating action affect the image of Russia in the free world?

Do the Soviets really want a summit? The Kremlin has said much about the summit and the important issues that can be discussed there to include arms control and regional and bilateral issues. U.S. arms control talks have reached a sensitive stage. A productive summit could bring progress on a whole range of issues.

Soviet authorities should act responsibly so that our two countries can make progress on the many critical issues on our agenda. Let us work together to solve the existing problems. Let us avoid creating new problems.

The Soviets must be told that serious consequences will follow if Mr. Daniloff is not set free. Our Government will not have business as usual with a country that kidnaps innocent journalists from the streets of Moscow.

This Congress must take a strong stand against this illegal action against an innocent American citizen.

In the interest of justice and the improvement of relations between our two countries, I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to the principal sponsor of this resolution, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE].

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to thank very much the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and commend the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. FASCELL, for his expeditious consideration of this resolution.

I would also like to commend the leadership of the House for their expeditious consideration of this resolution, and to thank them as well.

I would also like to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] for his leadership on this issue. He yesterday indicated his willingness to sponsor a resolution on this subject as soon as Congress reconvened from the district work period, and has shown great leadership on this issue.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the importance of this resolution coming at this time, and in the fashion that it is coming, with the strong support of the ranking minority member of the committee, the chairman of the committee, the leadership, and Members across the philosophical spectrum, is to demonstrate as clearly and forcefully and directly as possible to the Soviet Union that on a strong bipartisan basis, this Congress and the American people are outraged by the actions of the Soviet Union.

These are actions that have no justification. These are actions that are absolutely reprehensible from the point of view of international law and morality; and yet these are actions which are not entirely out of character with regard to the traditional leadership of the Soviet Union.

Several years ago, a distinguished journalist from the newspaper from the city that I represent, the Los Angeles Times, was apprehended in a fashion similar to that of Mr. Daniloff. Fortunately, both for United States-Soviet relations and for that journalist, Mr. Robert Toth, one of the more distinguished journalists in this country, the Soviets decided that they would release Mr. Toth expeditiously. As a result of that, the potential damage to United States-Soviet relations in that context was minimized.

We have seen historically that when the United States appropriately apprehends a legitimate Soviet spy, the reaction of the Soviet Union is to turn around and grab an American citizen, an innocent American citizen, who has performed totally appropriately within his responsibilities as a journalist; and then to try to keep that American journalist hostage to our releasing the legitimate Soviet spy.

I share with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] his recollection of the new Soviet leader, Mr. Gorbachev, indicating that this would be a new era.

Is this the manner in which Mr. Gorbachev is going to demonstrate that new openness in the Soviet Union?

Mr. Speaker, it is very important that the Soviets unmistakably understand that on a strong bipartisan basis, the Congress of the United States of America, speaking for the people of the United States of America, joins with the administration of this country in demanding the immediate release of Mr. Daniloff and in condemning this outrageous action.

Mr. Speaker, today Americans are being held hostage in two regions of the world. In Lebanon they are being held by terrorists. In the Soviet Union an American reporter is being held hostage by the Russian Government.

Nicholas Daniloff has been the Moscow correspondent for U.S. News and World Report since April 1981. During that time he has become recognized as a top notch reporter and an expert on Soviet affairs.

On August 30, a Russian acquaintance of Mr. Daniloff met with him and handed him a sealed envelope. Eight KGB agents immediately descended on the reporter and arrested him, claiming he had been given photos and maps marked top secret.

The Soviet Government has since indicted Daniloff as a spy, and threatens to put him on trial for his life.

Nick Daniloff is no spy. Instead he has become caught up in a high powered poker game designed by the KGB to free one of their own agents who was arrested on espionage charges by the FBI.

The resolution I have introduced condemns this outrageous Soviet action, urges the immediate and unconditional release of Nick Daniloff, and expresses our concern that this incident may have a negative impact on relations between the United States and the Soviet Union and frustrate efforts to facilitate a second summit meeting between the President and Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious incident which will have significant ramifications if it is not quickly resolved. It would be wrong to allow relations between our two nations to remain unaffected by the Soviet's outrageous conduct.

The Soviets must understand that Congress and the administration take this matter very seriously. This is not a matter which will be resolved by hand wringing and speeches. Unless the Soviets release Nick Daniloff we will have no alternative but to take meaningful actions to demonstrate our commitment to winning his freedom.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution and add their voices to those around the world demanding that Nicholas Daniloff be freed.

Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the gentleman's yielding. I very much appreciate the leadership and the work of the chairman of the committee.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] for giving me the opportunity to explain initially my reasons for introducing this resolution, and for pursuing it at this particular time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], who is also a sponsor of a similar resolution on this subject.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] for alluding to the fact that I was intent on introducing a resolution that would have been the precursor of the instant resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the most important feature, in my judgment, of the wording of this resolution is the one that in effect gives notice to the American people that its expectations and its hopes for a continued bettering of the relationship between us and the Soviet Union is in jeopardy; that a summit conference between the two leaders is in jeopardy.

Why? Because of the cloud of the present hostage taking by the Soviet Union. How in the world can our President go to a summit meeting while there is still a 4-hour-per-day grueling going on of our American citizen, while death is being threatened to him, and then to have the spectacle of the hype that is going to accompany the convening of a summit meeting in the midst of all that?

Mr. Speaker, the resolution is excellent in its wording. It brings to the core of the matter our intentions in this very serious issue.

One other thing has to be said, and that is, implicit in this resolution is the willingness of the Congress of the United States to support the President of the United States in whatever efforts he may undertake to free our American citizen held hostage by the Soviet Union.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, I would like to yield to the gentleman from New York, TED WEISS, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and commend the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee for his quick dispatch in having this resolution considered by the House.

The distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] and I last week, in the immediate aftermath of the outrageous action by the Soviet Government and its agents in regard to Mr. Daniloff, sent a letter cosigned by 53 Members of this body to General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, urging him to take immediate action to effect the release of Nicholas Daniloff. I will submit a copy of that letter with the list of signatories and the covering letter to Soviet Ambassador Yuriy Dubinin at the close of my statement.

It is unthinkable that the Soviet Union could believe that it could frame an American citizen fulfilling his responsibilities as a journalist and get away with it. Those of us who have been the most intent on seeing the United States and the Soviet Union move forward in regard to arms control agreements can only advise the leadership of the Soviet Union that this kind of action makes progress toward that all-important goal almost impossible. It poisons the atmosphere and strengthens the hand of those who argue that the Soviet Union cannot be trusted to conduct itself in a fashion acceptable as decent and civilized behavior.

If in fact Mr. Gorbachev is serious, as he has indicated by his previous statements, proposals, and actions in his effort to move toward improved relations and improved agreements with regard to the nuclear arms race, he must for the good image of his own country and for the sake of humanity reverse the action of his overzealous agents and release Mr. Daniloff immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Following is the correspondence which I referred to earlier:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 4, 1986.

His Excellency YURIY VLADIMIROVICH DUBININ,
Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, 1125 16th Street NW, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Attached please find a letter from us and many of our colleagues in Congress to General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

We would appreciate it if you would arrange to have this letter forwarded to General Secretary Gorbachev with all possible dispatch.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

TED WEISS,
MEL LEVINE,
Members of Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 3, 1986.

His Excellency MIKHAIL GORBACHEV,
General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, The Kremlin, Moscow, U.S.S.R.

DEAR MR. GENERAL SECRETARY: We write to express our deep concern over the recent detention in Moscow of the journalist Nicholas Daniloff. Mr. Daniloff is one of the most respected American reporters writing from the Soviet Union. At the time of his arrest, Mr. Daniloff was preparing to return to the United States after years of distinguished work as Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report.

Contrary to suggestions that Mr. Daniloff was a knowing participant in an espionage plot, the reported circumstances strongly indicate that he was framed by agents of your government. If Mr. Daniloff is not swiftly released, this gross infringement of journalistic freedom could seriously affect relations between our two governments.

We therefore urge, in the strongest terms, that you secure the immediate and unconditional release of Mr. Daniloff and that you permit him to conclude his journalistic work in the Soviet Union in an orderly manner.

Sincerely yours,

Ted Weiss, Joe Moakley, David E. Bonior, Mel Levine, Bill Alexander, Claude Pepper, Charles E. Schumer, Barney Frank, Sam Gejdenson, Gary L. Ackerman, Ron Wyden, Barbara Boxer, Sidney R. Yates, Matthew F. McHugh, Sander M. Levin, Howard L. Berman, Howard Wolpe, Tom Lantos, Martin Frost, Ben Erdreich, Thomas J. Downey, Gus Yatron, Peter J. Kostmayer, Mark Siljander, Robert Torricelli, Robert J. Mrazek, Chris Smith, John Porter, Mike DeWine, Gerry Studds, Dan Burton, Robert Garcia, Jerry Lewis, Ed Zschau, Buddy MacKay, John McCain, Mervyn M. Dymally, Morris K. Udall, Robert J. Lagomarsino, William Lehman, James H. Scheuer, Silvio O. Conte, Ben Gilman, Stephen Solarz, John Miller, Henry J. Hyde, Edward F. Feighan, Ed Markey, Jack Kemp, Julian C. Dixon, Henry A. Waxman, Dan Lungren, John Conyers,

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], a member of the committee.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the distinguished chairman of our committee on Foreign Affairs the gentleman from Florida, Mr. FASCELL and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BROOMFIELD for bringing this measure to the floor, along with the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] for proposing this measure at this very timely point in our discussions with the Soviet Union regarding the Soviets detention of Nick Daniloff an event appalling to all Americans, and especially to those of us who have been concerned about human rights.

Human rights are an important component of our American foreign policy. For more than a decade this has been realized through our commitment to the Helsinki Final Act, a landmark document to which the Soviet Union is signatory. This particular act, in basket 3, stipulates the actions that signatory nations must abide by. The act also outlines the rights of all journalists, a group of individuals who, throughout the world, occupy an important and unique part of society.

Most of our efforts as Members of Congress center on promoting and protecting the human rights accorded private individuals, writers, and artists on a wide range of political, social, and religious issues. It is not often that the rights of journalists are violated to such an extent that they too become part and parcel of our fight for human rights. However, without the commitment of journalists to their job, the cry for freedom would be even more severely muffled than it is. Yet, to blatantly arrest a widely respected American journalist on such clearly false charges of espionage strikes me as surreal, at the very least.

It is apparent that the Daniloff incarceration is yet another cruel chapter in the long history of how the Soviets respond to all of our appeals for human rights and is yet another example of the true manner in which they conduct themselves. The manner in which Nick Daniloff is being held is indicative that the Soviet Union is determined to drive another nail into the coffin in which they are burying the Helsinki accords.

It smacks of the Shcharansky case of years ago, when Anatoly Shcharansky was imprisoned by the Soviets for the false allegation of being an agent of the United States and wrongly accused of being involved in espionage on our behalf. At that time, Shcharansky's only contacts were Western journalists.

President Reagan, in a very strong letter to the Soviet Union, has denied any connection between Mr. Daniloff and any of our intelligence agencies just as did President Carter in the Shcharansky case.

I would think that the Soviets who contend they are attempting to promote better relations between our two nations, would take a serious look at the abysmal environment that they are creating by these continued violations of the Helsinki Final Act. The Final Act and other international agreements to which the Soviet Union is signatory clearly state that freedom of the press is to be protected.

I would hope that any of those in the Soviet Union who hold policy positions on human rights—and it is very difficult to find out just who those policymakers are—would recognize the damage that they are inflicting not only on the Helsinki Final Act, not only on our general bilateral relationship, but on any discussions at the arms and summit meetings that are ongoing or anticipated during the next few months.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Soviet Union to take a very close look at the symbol that our adoption of this measure represents, and I hope that we will have a unanimous approval of this measure.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to strongly support this resolution. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, this whole episode of the taking of the newspaperman, Mr. Daniloff, as a hostage is utterly depressing in its implications. Fourteen years ago, I was taken into custody by the KGB in the Soviet Union on equally trumped-up charges. I was held for a matter of 4 or 5 hours. It was a totally trivial and insignificant episode compared to what we are seeing now.

The charge against me was that I was consorting with refuseniks, which I was, and of course it was entirely legal in those days. The charge against Mr. Daniloff is absurd, it is cooked up, it is hoked up, it is patent nonsense, it is a clear frameup. But its implications are appalling.

The Soviet Union and the United States are truly two scorpions in a bottle. We have to live with each other. The only way we can live with each other is if we establish some kind of moral, legal ethical norms to guide our contracts and our negotiations and our relationships.

Does the Soviet Union really want to portray to the world through this outrageous, immoral, illegal, transparently uncivilized act, do they want to portray the image of an outlaw state, the image of a rogue elephant crashing through the thickets of the jungle of international law, mutual respect, some kind of moral standards that guide nations?

Do they really want to act in defiance of world public opinion and world moral and ethical and legal norms as would a Khomeini and Assad? Do they want to repeat the awful conduct of the Idi Amin's, the Bokassa's who defy world opinion, who defy any moral standard in the conduct of their business? I have been to the Soviet Union twice, and I have met on many occasions with the Soviets. The Soviet people are a great people who have made exquisite and enormous contributions to world culture, literature, art, music.

Cannot the Soviet leadership look into their past, look into the affection and regard in which the world holds the Soviet people and somehow bring themselves to conform to internationally established norms of decent civilized conduct?

Without this these two scorpions are going to have a rough time surviving in that bottle.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and basically what I want to do was associate myself with his remarks. I think he hit the nail on the head with what he said in his remarks earlier in this discussion.

I do remember a few months back that the President was fairly roundly criticized for suggesting that the Soviet Union was in fact the evil empire.

Well, it seems to me with this resolution there is at last some recognition that we are dealing with an evil empire that cannot be trusted, even with the basic protection of fundamental human rights.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yieiding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 542.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 542 deplores the arrest and continuing detention of U.S. News & World Report correspondent Nicolas Daniloff and urges Soviet leader Gorbachev to correct this action immediately by freeing Daniloff "unconditionally and without further delay." Daniloff's arrest on fabricated espionage charges is utterly contrary to Soviet commitments under the Helsinki Final Act regarding working conditions for journalists.

In 1975, Helsinki signatories pledged that the legitimate pursuit by journalists of their professional activity will not penalize them. Despite Gorbachev's slick advertisements of a more open Soviet society, it is telling that a foreign correspondent widely respected for his extensive and objective reporting on Soviet life should be so cynically and cruelly targeted by the KGB. The Soviets, contrary to their Helsinki promises, continue to see the free flow of people, ideas and information as something to be controlled and manipulated rather than encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Helsinki Commission's research shows that Soviet progress in the information field has been very limited, both in general and as compared to other areas of the Helsinki accords. After some initial progress in 1975, when the Soviet Government reached a reciprocal agreement with the United States on the issuance to journalists of multiple entry and exit visas, the pattern has been one of the Soviet Union's efforts to impede or directly prevent, rather than to facilitate the flow of information and ideas across its borders.

Although the Soviet Union has utilized advances in satellite broadcasting as an important vehicle by which to improve its image and advance its peace campaign in the West, in the Soviet Union, the dissemination of information remains under strict state control. Imported printed, filmed and broadcast information is subject to censorship and foreign newspapers, books and periodicals are made inaccessible to the public. The U.S.S.R. continues to jam Western radio broadcasts, has passed laws designed to restrict foreigners' access to unofficial sources within the country, and continues to restrict, harass and penalize foreign journalists who are simply performing their jobs. Daniloff is only the last in a series of correspondents who have been targetted on politically motivated grounds.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to commend my colleague Mr. MEL LEVINE who is responsible for bringing up this resolution and Mr. DANTE FASCELL whose eloquence on the subject of human rights is only equalled by his life-long concern and commitment. I strongly support House Resolution 542.

Mr. GILMAN of New York and others have talked about the fact that this is an outrageous violation of the Helsinki Final Act provisions as it relates to journalists, as it relates to the coverage of one another's countries by journalists who report back, on the premise that more information and better information will lead to a better understanding between two nations which have to come to some resolution between one another in a peaceful way. This is an outrageous violation of the Helsinki Final Act. It is a total undermining of the objectives of the act.

I believe this resolution speaks strongly, as strongly as we ought in this instance.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the ongoing detention of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff has cast a huge pall over United States-Soviet relations and has demonstrated once again the Soviet Union's lack of respect for human rights.

It is clear that Mr. Daniloff is the unfortunate and innocent victim of a Soviet frameup. Three days after a Soviet KGB agent—ostensibly a U.N. employee—was arrested buying secrets in New York, the KGB contrived a case against Mr. Daniloff. He was jumped by eight KGB agents immediately after being handed a sealed envelope, the contents of which were unknown to him.

Moscow has sought to kill two birds with one stone in this affair. First, they have sought leverage in negotiations to win the release of the Soviet agent captured in New York, by taking an innocent American hostage. Second, they have sought to destroy the credibility and effectiveness of the American press by selecting one of its most outstanding and respected professionals to be the victim.

The Soviets must appreciate the seriousness with which all Americans view this sordid affair. The Soviet decision to formally indict Mr. Daniloff on the basis of this totally fabricated evidence represents an unprincipled violation of the international norms of behavior. The President has rightly condemned this utterly cynical and corrupt use of police power by the U.S.S.R. and has made it clear that such misdeeds cannot go unanswered. I know that all Members of this body, and all Americans, share in this outrage and in the view that the Soviets must move forthwith to release Nicholas Daniloff and resolve this matter favorably.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 542, having introduced a similar resolution with the ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee condemning the kidnaping of Nicholas Daniloff.

By arresting Mr. Daniloff on the very weakest of nonexistent charges, the Soviets are testing once again just how far they can push accepted international standards and sensibilities. The transparency of the charges against Mr. Daniloff has gone beyond the Kremlin's usual carelessness in preparation. However, given the Soviets' past success in taking advantage of world opinion, Secretary Gorbachev is probably calculating that he has an "even" chance of pulling off the Daniloff kidnaping. In addition to supporting the current resolution, I would further urge the President not to engage in any "deal-making" for the release of Mr. Daniloff in exchange for the Soviet agent, Gennadi Zakharov.

I believe the passage of this resolution will send a clear message to the Soviets concerning the precedent they are attempting to set and the strain they are putting on our mutual relationship.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the arbitrary arrest of reporter Nicholas Daniloff provides conclusive evidence that under the "enlightened" and "progressive" leadership of Mikhail Gorbachev, nothing has changed. The supposed openness and accessibility that cloaked the Gorbachev regime in attractive wrapping has fallen away to reveal the totalitarian police state that is the foundation of the Soviet system. Indeed, Daniloff is the most recent victim of the same old Stalin-era tactics that still motivate Soviet policy and action.

To swap the reporter for Gennadi Zakharov, a Soviet spy caught redhanded with classified documents, would only make the Soviets think these brutish methods produce the desired effect and encourage them to do the same thing again and again. This is not the first time an American has been randomly arrested in order to force a swap. Giving in to Soviet pressure to exchange the two would equate Daniloff with Zakharov, something even the reporter himself refuses to discuss as a possibility, and give the Soviets further precedent upon which to take future criminal acts. It is unfortunate that the average Russian citizen must bear the hardships and deceit of such a system, but it is totally unacceptable for an American to have to suffer its indignities. Clearly, the unconditional release of Nicholas Daniloff is the only possible solution to the incident.

If the Soviets are intent on improving the prospects for the summit meeting and arms control talks with the United States, then they must realize their recent action has harmed relations between the two countries. Shrugging off the Daniloff case as "not important" and not worthy of holding Soviet-American relations "hostage," as the Soviet Foreign Ministry has maintained, does very little to improve the summit picture and general relations. The only hostage that is being held is in Lefortovo Prison in Moscow.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, once again the Soviet Union has displayed its open contempt for the principles of due process and justice. This time the victim is a respected American journalist, Nicholas Daniloff. For the past 11 days, Daniloff has been imprisoned in the Soviet Union after his arrest on trumped up spy charges.

The Soviet Union has repudiated all efforts to gain Daniloff's release. This includes an extraordinary personal appeal by President Reagan to Soviet leader Gorbachev where the President staked his prestige to proclaim Daniloff's innocence.

Daniloff is, in fact, being held hostage by the Kremlin in a desparate effort to secure the release of a Soviet diplomat arrested in New York on spy charges. Nowhere do we see Gorbachev appealing for his release—or proclaiming his innocence. The President, in a strong speech earlier this week, indicated the Daniloff matter could jeopardize plans for a superpower summit.

It is high time that the Soviets realized that we will never consider blackmailers to be partners in any agreements, especially those involving arms control. The Soviets have picked the wrong time to pull a stunt of this type. The American public and this Congress is unified in its outrage over this travesty. Our national resolve is strong—and the Soviets must respect it the only way they can—by releasing Nick Daniloff.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, the arrest and imprisonment of U.S. News & World Report journalist Nicholas Daniloff is an outrage, pure and simple. I wholeheartedly support House Resolution 542, which condemns the Soviet Union for these actions, and demands that Soviet authorities immediately and unconditionally release Mr. Daniloff.

Mr. Daniloff was framed by the Soviet KGB. He is not nor ever has been a spy. Two weeks ago, he was invited to take a stroll through Lenin Hills in Moscow with an old acquaintance. It was not unusual for the acquaintance to offer a packet of newspaper clippings in exchange for a gift of some novels. But as soon as Mr. Daniloff accepted the packet, he was seized by eight KGB agents and told that the packet contained "top secret" information. He has been in jail now for almost 2 weeks, pending a "trial" on charges of espionage.

The mistreatment of Nick Daniloff imperils the possibility of a United States-Soviet summit this year and brings into question their willingness to live up to treaty obligations. Under the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union is bound to "reaffirm that the legitimate pursuit of their professional activity will never render journalist liable to expulsion nor otherwise penalize them." Soviet disregard of this obligation can only have a chilling affect on hopes for better superpower relations.

House Resolution 542 sends a strong message to the Soviet Union: the American people will not tolerate the arrest and imprisonment of American journalist on such contrived circumstances. Although I was unable to be present for the vote this morning, I stand to add my voice to those of my colleagues demanding Nicholas Daniloff's immediate release.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection and urge the House to support this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 394, nays 0, not voting 37, as follows:

Mr. DICKINSON and Mr. SILJANDER changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, on the prior vote on House Resolution 542, of which I am an original cosponsor, and which passed unanimously, I did not hold down the button long enough to record my vote. I was on the floor. I would have vigorously voted in the affirmative with the whole rest of my colleagues in the House.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, this morning I was unavoidably detained with some constituents, and I missed the vote on House Resolution 542 concerning the arrest and imprisonment and indictment of Nicholas Daniloff.

Mr. Speaker, had I been present for the vote, I would have voted "aye."

The Soviet Union's decision to in effect kidnap an American journalist and hold him in prison on a trumped-up charge is reprehensible, even by Soviet standards. We, and the rest of the civilized world, must condemn such violations of international order in the strongest possible terms.

OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 541 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 541

Resolution providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes.

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed five hours, to be equally divided and controlled by Representative Wright of Texas and Representative Michel of Illinois or their designees, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. The amendments contained in section two of this resolution shall be considered to have been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. No other amendment to the bill shall be in order except the amendments contained in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, said amendments shall be considered only in the order listed, and if offered by the Member indicated, in said report, said amendments shall not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole unless otherwise specified in this resolution, and each of said amendments shall be debatable for not to exceed the time indicated in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto. With respect to the amendment by Representative Wright containing the text of amendments originally submitted by other Members as indicated in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, those original sponsors as so indicated in the report may insert statements for inclusion in debate in the Committee of the Whole on said amendment, and those statements shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as if they had been actually delivered in debate, any rule or regulation to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendment by Representative HUNTER of California or by Representative ROBINSON of Arkansas may only be offered as a perfecting amendment to the amendment by Representative BENNETT of Florida relating to the authority of members of the armed forces in drug interdiction activities, and all points of order against said perfecting amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may not contain instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. TORRES). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments to H.R. 5484 printed in the report of the Committee on Rules on House Resolution 541 may be offered with corrected page and line numbers, directed to the page and line numbers of that bill rather than to the preliminary committee print by the Committee on Rules, and that Representative LEVINE be permitted to offer his amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules with the following modification:

Delete the word "any" in the first sentence and insert the word "all"; delete the word "is" in the first sentence and insert the word "are"; delete the word "primarily" in the first and second sentence and insert the word "used" and a comma; and insert after the word "intended" in the first and second sentences the words "for use" and a comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent request just agreed to, the modified amendments will be contained in the report of the Committee on Rules and will be available at the desk at the time they are to be called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to my able friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for consideration of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986. It is a modified open rule, providing 5 hours of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by Representative WRIGHT and Representative MICHEL.

The time will be allocated among the 12 committees involved in the legislation and equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of each committee.

The rule makes in order several amendments printed in the Rules Committee report, No. 99-810, accompanying the resolution. No other amendments may be offered. Debate time for each amendment is specified in the Rules Committee report. The amendments are not subject to a demand for a division of the question and are not subject to amendment except where specified.

The first amendment will be offered by Representative WRIGHT. It consists of the text of 14 amendments recommended to the Rules Committee by other Members. The original sponsors of the amendments may insert their statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as if delivered in debate.

Mr. Speaker, the rule also makes in order 30 other amendments printed in the committee report, to be offered only by the Members designated in the report, and only in the order specified in the report. The amendment to be offered by Representative HUNTER or Representative ROBINSON may only be offered as a perfecting amendment to the amendment offered by Representative BENNETT concerning the authority of members of the Armed Forces in drug interdiction activities. All points of order against the perfecting amendment for failure to comply with clause 7 of rule XVI are waived.

Section 2 of the rule consists of a self-executing amendment correcting a few technical drafting errors. Upon adoption of the rule, the amendment will be considered as having been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order one motion to recommit without instructions.

Many Members deserve our appreciation for their special efforts in drafting this important legislation. I want to take this opportunity to especially commend the majority leader. He has distinguished himself, once again, by his efforts to bring together the work of 12 committees on this measure. I wish to praise the minority leader as well for his efforts, in true bipartisan spirit, to produce this bill and to expedite its consideration. The collaborative efforts of the majority leader, the minority leader, and the 12 committees has led to an all-American bill. The measure provides for total mobilization in the fight against the most serious problem our Nation faces today: The evil of drugs.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of lives each year are lost to the insidious drug epidemic. Many of our citizens are living in a nightmare, barricaded in self-erected fortresses. They will not venture out of their homes for fear of being mugged, murdered, or raped by half-crazed drug addicts in need of money to get a fix. This omnibus drug legislation will go a long way toward making America a better place to live. This legislation also provides for significant increases in drug prevention, education, and treatment programs. The improved programs will enable America to recapture the $2 billion our economy loses each year from reduced productivity due to drug abuse.

Mr. Speaker, we, as a nation, must seize this opportunity to bring the monster drug problem under control. This is landmark legislation designed to fight the effect of drugs, an evil that threatens our way of life. The rule bfore us is a fair rule. It expedites consideration of the bill and provides for full and orderly debate of the issues. I urge adoption of the rule.

□ 1130

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, this rule should be adopted. Although it does not accommodate every Member's desire to amend the drug bill, it was fashioned with the agreement of the majority leader, Mr. WRIGHT, and the Republican leader, Mr. MICHEL, and it is a fair rule.

The rule permits most of the major and many of the less controversial amendments filed with the Rules Committee to be offered. At the same time, it does restrict our ordinary procedures somewhat in the interest of moving this important bill forward expeditiously toward final passage.

The bill this rule makes in order, H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986, is a comprehensive bipartisan response to the severe substance and drug abuse problem which afflicts our country. The bill has been put together from the work product of 12 House committees and is presented to the House as a single package containing 12 titles.

The bill provides new funds and new weapons for the war on substance and drug abuse and drug-related crime. It is a major step forward in our national effort to turn the tide against the drug-pushers and drug traffickers who have for years flooded the country with dangerous drugs and sold them at great profit to corrupt, injure, and kill our people.

This is a tough bill. I believe it signals the beginning of a forceful counteroffensive against the drug underworld, and this is a counteroffensive we must win.

Mr. Speaker, this rule does many things. Most of all, it brings to the floor of this House one of the most important measures coming before this Congress in many years. Drug dealers, drug traffickers, drug users, beware. This Congress means business and the passage of this measure and this rule will bring all the efforts of this Federal Government into play to do what must be done to save lives and to eradicate this cancer which is growing and growing upon us.

Here are a few highlights of what the bill does:

It provides additional aircraft and new incentive programs for other nations to reduce the export of drugs into the country;

It provides money for increased use of the Armed Forces and the Coast Guard to stop the drug smugglers before they can unload and distribute their cargoes in this country;

It strengthens the U.S. Customs drug enforcement capability, increases criminal and civil penalties for drug trafficking, and denies trade benefits to those countries who fail to cooperate fully with us in the war against drugs and drug smuggling;

It promotes drug eradication programs overseas through the multilateral development banks, and strengthens our money laundering laws;

It increases criminal penalties for narcotics violations and provides block grants to the States to step up the enforcement effort against the drug traffickers;

It provides grants for new Federal drug education programs focusing on drug abuse education and prevention programs, and also provides grants to the States and localities to establish and improve their own drug education programs;

It increases penalties for the use of aircraft in drug smuggling operations, and creates new penalties for the transportation of drugs;

It provides increased Federal assistance to the States and localities for drug treatment and prevention programs, and includes so-called designer drugs in the list of the Controlled Substances Act;

It makes legal changes to coordinate our efforts with our Indian citizens to improve law enforcement and to organize new alcohol and drug abuse treatment and prevention programs for native Americans;

So, this bill does provide new money, new programs, new and stiffer penalties, and a new commitment on the part of the Federal Government to fight this national war on substance and drug abuse and the drug traffickers.

I believe this bill is worthy of our support. Of course, it is not perfect, and I think it can be improved by the adoption of some of the amendments that will be offered on the floor. This bill will prove helpful in giving our people some new weapons to fight against the drug pushers and narcotics gangs that are preying on all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a "yes" vote on the rule so that we may begin on this important bill, which I hope will pass by a big bipartisan vote demonstrating the depth of our commitment to win the war against drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to our minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time.

I will be speaking more specifically on the omnibus drug bill during general debate on the bill itself, but I did want to make a few comments on the rule before us at this time.

Obviously, a rule that seeks to limit amendments to a bill as wide sweeping as this one is not going to be totally satisfactory to a vast number of Members in this body. I guess if I had my druthers, I would have made in order all 88 amendments that were printed in the RECORD by individual Members. I believe in free and open debate and in the integrity of the amendment process. I believe we ought to opt in the direction of inclusion, rather than exclusion, as far as the right to offer amendments is concerned, particularly to a piece of legislation as broad sweeping and with as wide a scope as this one has.

The rule does make in order in one fashion or another about half of the amendments that were submitted. For the Members on our side, it is important to note that 18 Republican sponsored amendments will be permitted on the floor and another 6 of those will be included in the Wright en bloc amendment that will be offered during the course of our deliberations.

Among these amendments to be considered on the floor are the Gekas death penalty amendment, the Lungren amendment on the exclusionary rule. These are obviously two of the more controversial amendments.

Altogether of the 11 amendments that we indicated were of top priority, 10 were actually made in order on our side of the aisle.

My feeling was in these whole deliberations that in a bipartisan effort, admittedly with majorities in each one of the 12 committees that were putting together this package, obviously with a majority of Democrats they had a little more input there at the committee stage than we would have as a minority party; then when we get to the floor we felt that we were entitled to have at least this number of amendments made in order so that there could be free and open debate.

I applaud the majority leader for his efforts in our behalf to really truly come to the floor in a bipartisan fashion.

I regret that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] will not have an opportunity to offer his amendment on drug testing. There was some misunderstanding, I guess, about specific language there as to whether or not it was mandatory or voluntary in nature.

I would just simply make the point that the President does, however, have the authority to require Federal agencies to implement drug testing programs if he so chooses. He does not need congressional authorization to do so.

All in all, I believe this is a good rule from our standpoint. I urge Members to support it. If the rule goes down, there are no guarantees that any subsequent rule will be better. In fact, it would most likely move in the opposite direction of being even more restrictive.

So let us vote for the rule and move on to consideration of the bill itself.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume, to the able gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], who has done such a magnificent job as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics in the fight against the terrible drug abuse problem in America.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. I think the House was indeed fortunate that we have as chairman of the Rules Committee a gentleman that spent so many years, indeed decades, fighting against this surge of drug abuse that has hit our Nation as well as other countries in this world, who has a full understanding of how difficult it was to bring together Republicans and Democrats, but even more importantly, the chairmen and the members of 12 standing committees that all had the same common cause and that is to have an omnibus bill, but certainly all wanting to maintain the legislative prerogative of maintaining their own committee jurisdiction.

I certainly believe that with some of the issues, and indeed the controversial issues, that all Members of Congress would want to debate them to such an extent that we could share with each other our concerns and go home believing that we had given the proper consideration to those issues.

Certainly the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] has one that he has vigorously fought for in committee. We had hoped that everyone would have an opportunity to do this, but when the majority leader and the minority leader got together and started reviewing the numbers of amendments, and serious amendments that people had, it became abundantly clear that if this was to occur that we would not be able to maintain and keep together the package.

One of the greatest things that I think this House has going for it now, and I hope it is contagious to the other body, is that nobody throughout this process has tried to impress the other side as to who is more serious about bringing some solutions to this dangerous problem and this crisis our Nation is facing.

I know that this being an election year, there are those who would challenge the integrity of the House, or indeed the Congress, as to why we are doing it at this time, as though responding to the demand of the American people that we do something would not be sufficient.

But I do hope that in the course of debate as we try to support this rule and get it passed that we are not tempting, by questions like the exclusionary rule, just how far the military can go, and indeed the death penalty, to try to impress each other to the lack of sincerity of those who may oppose some of the amendments that are coming on.

I just would like to close by saying that the minority leader of this House and our majority leader, the gentleman from Texas, JIM WRIGHT, has proven to the American people just the height of cooperation that we can reach in this country and in this House when we find that our Nation is under attack. If we can only try to maintain this, no matter how strong our feelings, until we conclude this legislation, I think we will be sending a message to the other body that the American people are not interested in who is the best Democrat or Republican, their only concern is are we prepared to respond to this problem.

As the gentleman from Texas, JIM WRIGHT, says, not to say that we have a solution, but at least to say that we have developed a national strategy for all of us from the White House to the House of Representatives and to the other body so that we can work together toward a common solution.

So I hope that you can see your way clear to support this rule and eventually to support this bill.

I thank the gentleman for the time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this extremely fair rule, providing for the consideration of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Narcotics Act of 1986. It has been some 15 years since the House of Representatives last considered comprehensive narcotics legislation, yet in the period which ensued since that last enactment, we have seen our Nation's sons and daughters lured into ever more narcotics as they virtually drown in a tidal wave of deadly drugs. Today's landmark bipartisan legislation is an opportunity for America to stem the rising tide that already finds us up to our necks in illicit drugs. I commend our House leadership Speaker O'NEILL, Majority Leader WRIGHT, and Minority Leader MICHEL for mobilizing Congress into bringing about this major antidrug initiative and expediting its consideration.

The rule before us is a magnanimous one. It provides for 5 hours of general debate, and makes in order more than 40 amendments. This is a modified open rule, providing us with the opportunity to discuss and amend the many titles that make up this comprehensive, coordinated attack on narcotics.

As ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I have worked with Chairman RANGEL and so many other Members of this body in conducting hearings across this Nation on the drug menace. What we uncovered were tales of tragedy, human suffering, and untold physical and emotional scars.

This legislation is a modest, $1.5 billion attempt at fighting the narcotraffickers and their deadly product. Eradication, interdiction and law enforcement efforts, as well as treatment and prevention programs will all benefit from H.R. 5484, which although not a perfect measure, is certainly an excellent base from which to begin the legislative process. I commend the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. PEPPER, and the ranking minority member, the chairperson from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] for having reported out this resolution in this manner, which also makes in order an amendment which Chairman RANGEL and I will introduce to beef up the local law enforcement funds in the section of this omnibus measure that was considered by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Speaker, today's consideration of H.R. 5484 is a landmark event. We must fight this scourge on our society as never before. The proposed rule is a good one and a fair one. Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to fully support the rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I support the rule, and I agree that this is landmark legislation that we have before us today. It is becoming increasingly important for this Nation to take strong measures to overcome the epidemic of drug addiction sweeping this country.

In testimony it was shown that an estimated 500,000 Americans use heroin, 5 to 10 million use cocaine, and 20 million use marijuana. Between one-third and one-half of all crimes in this country are drug-related, costing us billions of dollars each year.

These statistics are overwhelming, and simply put, they show that illegal drug trafficking is running rampant in the United States, and will continue to do so unless strong and concerted action is taken on several fronts.

Mrs. Nancy Reagan, the First Lady, has made drug abuse prevention her prime task as First Lady, as has the President of the United States. The Congress needs to have a battle plan for a war against drugs. This bill does that. Congressman ST GERMAIN and I introduced legislation back in July to stop the money-laundering schemes and smurfing that help make drug trafficking the large and growing business that it is.

By making money-laundering subject to these penalties, we will discourage dope dealers from using unknowing financial institutions to deposit large amounts of money derived from drug trafficking without a permanent record of the transactions being created. Billions of dollars are thought to be moving through the banking system without leaving the trace necessary for successful prosecution of drug criminals.

This legislation will by no means resolve drug problems, but it will make it easier to trace the progress of these moneys through the banking system and help us trace drug trafficking to the source. Title V is a good title of the bill, this is a good bill, and I urge adoption of this legislation.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule, but the point that I want to make during this time is less about the legislation that we are going to consider, and more about the drug problem that we are facing.

We can win this war against drugs, and I think that the time now is very ripe for us to take some very serious action.

There is an appropriate Federal role, and we are bringing forth a bill that I think has many meritorious things in its favor. There are some problems, and I hope that we can correct those in the amendment process.

It is important that we make as serious and all-out an effort from the Federal level as we possibly can. I strongly support involving our military in interdiction of drugs. I strongly support using our foreign aid and favorednation trade status with countries as a level to enforce their cooperation in terms of getting at the source of drugs. I strongly support beefing up the FBI, the DEA, the U.S. Customs Service, and what other branches are appropriate to fight in this war against drugs.

However, the point that I want to make is that we will not be successful if we simply have a Federal initiative alone. Unless we involve all of our communities and every resource at the State level, at the local level, and at the community level, we will not be successful. Only interdicting the supply, which we know cannot be 100-percent effective, will not bring about a solution. We must work on the demand side of this equation. We must reduce the demand for drugs on the streets if we are going to be successful.

How do we do that? We do that by, No. 1, involving the entire community in the effort. Schools must say, "No drugs in these schools, period." Business and labor must get together and say, "We will create and work for a drug-free workplace." Our social institutions, our cultural institutions, our religious institutions, must say, "What can we do to work on this war against drugs?"

Let us work together, let us cooperate together, let us involve the family, let us involve the communities, let us involve all of us in this process. Only then will we be successful.

I commend the House and those who have been involved in this process for bringing this forward in an expedited manner, and I look forward to starting the Federal initiative, remembering that it is an entire community, entire Nation program, and that unless we all get involved, we will not be successful.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I am a cosponsor of the bill to which the rule relates, providing more Federal funding for drug abuse prevention and control, but I want to make it clear that the bill is a help—the bill is not a cure.

Consider the $350 million in additional fiscal year 1987 education funds in the bill. That represents only a little more than one-tenth of 1 percent of the $278 billion spent nationally each year on education. The approximately $850 million in the bill for fiscal year 1987 law enforcement is only a 12-percent increase over the $7 billion which the Federal Government alone spends in that sector, and it is only a drop in the bucket compared with the total national spending for law enforcement.

In short, this is not a problem that can be solved by Federal fiat; the war on drugs must be fought from the grassroots up. For example, we have to get certain "image makers," the producers of movies and singers of songs, to stop glamorizing and trivializing drug abuse. There are some in the entertainment industry who are trying to discourage drug abuse, but kids will not be impressed by public-service messages as much as by popular movies, videos, and songs.

Hollywood and Tin Pan Alley have to clean up their acts.

Moreover, there are individuals, middle- and upper-income educated, socially active and socially influential, who for years have demonstrated a two-faced attitude toward drugs. "Terrible," they say, that kids get hooked, but "terrific," they smile, when bragging about the pills they pop, the marijuana they smoke, the cocaine they snort.

For more than two decades, we have had an American experiment with drugs, on the one hand, decrying their abuse, but on the other hand, accepting their use; scolding out of one side of our mouths while laughing out of the other.

It has not worked very well. Lives are still falling apart. People are still dying. Drug-related crime still victimizes innocents.

We cannot have it both ways any longer. Dangerous drugs are either good or bad, and if the majority of Americans agree they are bad, then it is time for society to do what we can to solve the problem.

The point is that Federal money can help, but it is going to take a cooperative effort by every segment of this society to solve the drug problem.

If every segment of society will not pull together on this, we are going to continue to have sick kids, burned-out kids, dead kids.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, what we have today is not the best rule that I think could possibly be structured. I have a sense of disappointment out of one item that was excluded from this particular rule, but I think all things being even, and in light of what some of the rules do to some of the issues that some of us feel very strongly about at one time or another, I think this is a rule that all of us should support.

I would urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support it.

Two or three months ago, none of us believed that we would be considering a death penalty provision. Here today, we are going to be able to start talking about this.

Few of us believed that we would be able to do anything with the exclusionary rule as far as it applies to the admissability of evidence in a criminal trial. But today we are going to be able to do something about it.

There is some strong feeling out there with regard to other items. One which I have felt very strongly about and wanted included in this bill is one that would have provided for a drug-testing program to be put into place for Federal employees who have access to sensitive information or whose derelection of duty could cause property damage or loss of life.

This evidently is a provision that has become quite controversial and one that many of the Members did not want to vote on, so at the last minute, late last night, this was taken out of consideration.

But I am willing to go along with this rule, even though I have a sense of personal disappointment for the exclusion of that particular provision because of what is in this bill.

This is a good bill. The amendment that will be offered by myself and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] is one that will allow the military to become more involved. This is something the House has considered on many occasions, and it is something that at last perhaps we can finally get the other body to agree with our philosophy on this particular matter and come to grips with the problem for a greater use of the military in this particular battle.

I think most of all, the important thing that we have before us today is the bipartisan approach that the gentleman Texas and the gentleman from Illinois, leaders of their respective parties, have been able to put together in a bipartisan way.

I applaud them both for their efforts.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise and commend the leadership of both parties for what has been a truly bipartisan effort to bring together a very effective drug package as a first step in this war on drugs, and also a rule that I think is very fair and very bipartisan.

A number of us who have on occasion engaged in confrontational tactics have done so precisely to make the case that we can cooperate when we get cooperative rules. I commend the Democratic leadership for having put together a rule which is very fair to both sides and which is effectively bipartisan.

I wish it would have been slightly broader and offered one more amendment, but I think it is a tremendous step from the bipartisanship we all too often see.

Let me also say to the House, though, that I think this bill is only a first step. For the war on drugs to be successful, for us to stop cocaine and heroin, is going to take a continuing series of efforts, of which this is only the beginning.

We have come a long way from the days in 1978 when Peter Bourne, the President's Drug Adviser under President Carter, was apparently sniffing some coke, according to Time magazine and, in fact, using drugs rather than trying to stop them. We have a long way to go, but this is a significant milestone on that road.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse and as a member of the Republican Task Force on Drug Abuse in strong support of this rule.

I do so to commend my colleagues for title V of the bill, which is the money-laundering provision. In that provision is a program that would address the problem of smurfing. Many of us believe that smurfs are funny-looking little people that wear strange costumes. Others of us believe that smurfs are small-stature receivers for the Redskins. But smurfs, in the drug jargon of this Nation, are ordinary citizens who, for a fee, convert illicit drug proceeds in the nature of $100 bills generally into legitimate bank deposits.

They do this every day. We have heard testimony from a Government witness that in Miami, one gentleman converted $10,000 per day every day of the week for years, which was, in fact, illicit drug money.

The suggestion has been made that what we ought to do is simply increase the penalties against the financial institutions, but that is not the answer ladies and gentleman, because if the reporting requirements were reduced to $1, it would be unworkable and there would be another way.

What they do now is convert the amount of money less than that in the reporting requirements. What we have to do is create a crime, which we do in this title of this bill, to stop this onerous practice. We think we have made real progress in this bill.

I would urge my colleagues to support at least title V as it has been reported out of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH], who has already, as the chairman of a subcommittee, done a magnificent job in this great fight.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a very exciting day. It is an exciting day, I think, for this country.

For the first time in the history of this Nation, we are seeing a real war on drugs put together. I think that that is something that the whole country can enthusiastically applaud.

I certainly want to commend the majority leader and the minority leader. I want to commend all the committee chairmen and the ranking minority members because each of those members have played a very important role in bringing this package together.

I think it is very unusual and unique, as we get close to the election itself, to find this type of bipartisan joining together for this kind of an effort. It is an effort that is long overdue.

I think that many of the people of this Nation have been frustrated by the fact that they did not think that we could really do anything about the drug problem. They have heard over the years various Presidents from various political parties, from either of the two political parties, describing how they were going to launch a war on drugs. But year after year, we saw more and more drugs coming into this country, more and more usage and more and more of a problem for all of our citizens.

The subcommittee that I have been privileged to chair over the past 5 years, the Subcommittee on Government, Information, Justice and Agriculture, has held 39 hearings, we had our last one yesterday, in looking at this problem.

I am here to tell the people of this country that this piece of legislation certainly responds to the needs that we found in each of those 39 hearings.

For instance, we have great holes in our border system, a system that has been wide open. In fact, I think that it could best be described that there is a very small fig leaf over that portion of southern Florida and the rest of the country is completely bare, completely bare, even today.

We find, for instance, that there are only four aircraft for the entire Nation that are properly equipped to detect drug smugglers coming into this country.

□ 1205

We have to be able to detect drug smugglers before we can catch them. The estimates have ranged, according to the Stanford Research Institute, that as many as 18,000 flights a year are coming into this country; and this Nation has only four properly equipped aircraft to meet any kind of challenge. Even with those four aircraft, they are not up in the air most of the time; we find that they only have enough in the way of gas and oil and people to be able to fly those aircraft for 8 hours a day, 5 days a week.

That means two-thirds of the time, even during those 5 days that they are supposed to be flying, there is no one there. There is no challenge whatsoever to the drug smuggler as he comes into this country.

This legislation deals with that. It responds to that. It increases that amount so we will be able to go 16 hours a day, 7 days a week. It puts us in a position that we will be able to challenge the drug smugglers at night.

Would you believe that the detection system of this country has been the fact that we have sent some men up in small, two-engine aircraft with a pair of binoculars, looking around to see if they can see anyone suspicious?

That is what the war on drugs in this Nation has consisted of up until this date, up until the point that we are finally beginning to provide the resources so that we can actually challenge the smugglers at night when, according to the drug smugglers themselves, over 90 percent of the smuggling activity takes place at night, not during the daytime.

With interception, those people who are able to pick up these smugglers as they come in to this country and follow them to their destination. We have only had seven aircraft for the entire country to act as interceptors. Properly equipped interceptors that can work at night, that can follow those smugglers to their destination, and make sure that those smugglers do not get away.

Is it any wonder, then, that out of those 18,000 flights that we have had coming into this country that this Nation has only been successful last year in catching 210? Let me correct that. We did not catch 210; we intercepted 210. We only caught 64. Only 64 out of nearly 18,000 flights.

That, I think, underscores the weakness that this Nation has had in its war on drugs.

In order to bring our law enforcement officials to the scene, to the scene so that they can make the arrests and apprehend the drugs, catch those drugs when they are in bulk, before they are scattered out to thousands of people who are selling drugs to our children throughout this country and on the street corners of this Nation; catch them at that particular point.

We have only had eight helicopters to be able to ferry those law enforcement officials to those locations. All of those subjects are addressed in this piece of legislation, and plenty more. Not only does it address interdiction, which has certainly been a stepchild as far as law enforcement is concerned, but also education and treatment, which are vitally important to be able to assist the people of this Nation and underscoring to those people the harm that drugs do to them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, to vote in favor of this rule, in my judgment, is to do two things simultaneously: One, to signal to the American people that we are ready to get on with it, to begin the waging of the war on drugs.

Second, to endorse by voting in favor of this rule, to endorse the excellent efforts on both sides of the aisle to fashion a bipartisan approach to the entire series of issues that confront us in the war on drugs.

I, personally have yearned for a day in which we can come to the floor on a major piece of legislation with all the pieces in place for a true, bipartisan approach, open for debate in appropriate issues and to allow the will of the American people to be fashioned in the legislative Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule. This legislation will stimulate enforcement, by all of the agencies of Government, and help to eliminate the users, the traffickers and the dealers in drugs throughout this country.

It is a cancer upon us; and the cancer must be cured. This is the beginning and not the end; and I urge adoption of the rule.

To close debate, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I appreciate the indulgence granted to me by the Committee on Rules in that several of the amendments that I wish to offer are made in order.

Having said that, let me just say that as I support this rule, there are a couple of concerns I have. I wish things had been done a little bit differently; and let me just voice that concern.

One of them has to do with the Morrison amendment, which is an amendment to create a fifth exemption or exception to the designer drug violation. This amendment, as I understand it, will be rolled into the Wright bloc amendment.

The concern I have is this: We tried to structure very, very carefully a bill out of our Judiciary subcommittee that dealt with this new problem of designer drugs. I have had a designer drug bill in the hopper for over 13 months.

As we move to it, there was some question brought up as to whether a specific exception ought to be granted for people who happen to have Ph.D's and M.D.'s behind their names; that is, that they would be granted a different status than everybody else in terms of designer drugs.

Some say that is necessary for their own personal research. I object to that very, very strongly. I think one of the real problems we have had in this country is we have had a double standard. There has been a double standard created that we look down on the druggie who happens to be in the street, but if that person happens to be a high finance druggie or a professional druggie, we call it recreational use. Somehow, if you have a diploma hanging on your wall, if you have some degree behind your name that therefore you are going to be treated differently than the rest of us. I happen to think that's the effect of the Morrison amendment; I am sorry that that is going to be considered en bloc rather than considered by itself.

The second thing I have to say has to do with an amendment I wished to offer which would have made any person convicted of violating a Federal, State, or foreign government law dealing with drugs ineligible for postsecondary Federal financial assistance during a 5-year period following the conviction.

What I am saying here is, we only have a limited amount of resources, as we know, to give grants and to give loans to students going to college. It seems to me if we are trying to send a clear message one of the things we ought to say is, "If you are convicted of drug use, you will be ineligible to receive that kind of financial assistance for 5 years."

Another double standard I think we have had in our society is that we have said, "It is wrong to use drugs, it is illegal to use drugs," but then we carved out an exception in most of the colleges and universities in this country.

We have got to take down the white flag of surrender that has been on our college campuses for a long time; we have got to say what we mean and put our money where our mouth is, and I would hope that at some point in time, we ought to follow this type of approach in the future.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in the past there have been certain dictators who learned to their subsequent sorrow that a democracy could function when it was challenged. This is a magnificent example of leadership rising to an emergency of national character.

I want the record to show that last summer our great Speaker summoned the chairmen of all the committees of this House to his office for a luncheon conference. In that meeting, he said he wanted to mobilize the might of our Nation to fight the curse of drugs in America. He wanted every committee that had jurisdiction over any aspect of this problem to be prepared to present its respective recommendations as to legislation that should be adopted.

Then he wanted all of that legislation to be put together in one conglomerate bill, and he designated our great Democratic leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] to handle and to mobilize and to maneuver and manage all of this mighty effort.

So today we see the realization of that great effort; the President, both Houses of Congress, both parties in the Congress, all working together. The leader leading with such brilliance and such trepidity; and with the able cooperation of the minority leader, are presenting this bill today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

□ 1215

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule. I just want to say a few things about the truly unusual character of this situation. The rule and the bill are unusual in two respects. First, because in the truest and best sense of the term, this bill is bipartisan. We have turned aside from any petty temptations on either side of the aisle to cast aspersions at one another or to question one another's sincerity or depth of devotion to the national cause of creating a crime-free and drug-free country.

This bill will not solve all of the problems. This basic drug problem will be with us for a long while. At least this new bipartisan approach may permit us to begin to make progress and start gaining ground rather than continuing to lose ground in the war against drugs.

Permit me to express publicly at this time my genuine appreciation to Minority Leader BOB MICHEL of Illinois. He is a man of his word. He is a man of honor. He is a person of great leadership capability. I want to thank not only him but the chairman and ranking minority members and all members of the 12 committees which have struggled together to perfect this legislation.

This bill is precedent shattering in the second sense that it combines in one omnibus package the constructive work of 12 different House committees. That is the second point I would make.

On behalf of the Speaker and the other members of the leadership on both sides of the aisle who have contributed their best efforts to the preparation of this historic legislation, I would like to make a statement on committee jurisdiction over this and subsequent drug legislation.

The extraordinary cooperation and diligence of the 12 committees which share jurisdiction over the bill presented to the House have produced omnibus legislation of a comprehensive and unprecedented nature. In most cases, separate elements of the bill have been formally reported to the House by the committees with jurisdiction. Upon formal introduction as a complete package, the bill was referred concurrently to the 12 committees with jurisdiction over its contents.

In consultation with the authorizing committees, the bill has been organized into 12 titles, each bearing the name of the committee which developed that portion of the legislation. As with any type of omnibus legislation which is truly ambitious, some cross-jurisdictional approaches to enhancing Federal efforts with respect to the drug problem have been incorporated. In those areas, the leadership has worked actively with the committees in question to avoid and to resolve jurisdictional and legislative conflicts, and appreciates their cooperative spirit.

The bill has been organized to reflect primary committee jurisdiction over each title and to consolidate within each title, to the maximum extent possible, matters solely within the jurisdiction of the designated committee. Since the omnibus bill has not technically been reported by the various committees or divided for reference, and since its separate elements have not all been introduced or reported, the organization and consideration of the bill should not be considered to prejudge or dictate committee jurisdiction and referral over every single portion or section thereof if introduced as separate legislation.

Pursuant to clause 5 of rule X of the rules of the House, the Speaker will continue to refer separate legislation dealing with the drug problem or with any other issue under existing precedents, and with the appropriate exercise of his authority under that clause, in order to assure that each committee which has jurisdiction under rule X over any subject matter will have responsibility for considering that subject matter and reporting to the House with respect thereto.

The unique way in which this legislation was developed was intended to produce, in the quickest way possible, a comprehensive and sound Federal approach to a crisis facing America and the world at large, but is not intended to change the jurisdiction of any committee of the House as it now exists. I will further assure the Members, on behalf of the leadership, that every effort will be made to ensure the active involvement and representation of every committee with responsibility over a portion of this legislation as it is developed into a law of the United States. It is also the intention that this bill is subject to the appropriations process.

Mr. Speaker, this is simply an assurance that we intend in the future as we have in this instance to respect and fully to protect the jurisdictional rights of the committees of the House.

I am delighted with the legislation.

On balance I think it is extremely positive. For many years we have been engaged with the minions of the drug culture and the underground in an undeclared war. The difficulty is that we on our side, the side of Government, the side of society, the side of civilization have not really been fighting that war; we have simply been counting casualties.

Now we join the forces of evil in combat. We mobilize our entire capacities, and we will make progress.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN], who has had a great part in this effort.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the distinguished leader for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as you and certainly Members of the House leadership task force charged with the drafting of this legislation already know, a very critical component of our interdiction effort along the border is known as EPIC, the El Paso Intelligence Center. Its role has been expanded over the last several years as our Federal efforts have really become more coordinated and attention to importation problems along the Southwest border became more focused.

I wanted to ask some questions relative to the El Paso Intelligence Center if I might.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let me just take this opportunity to acknowledge the significant contribution which the gentleman from Texas has made, as a former member of the Government Operations Committee and now on the Committee in Appropriations as well as his role as chairman of the Congressional Border Caucus, in helping to streamline the Federal response to the drug problem and to bring Congress' attention to the unique concerns regarding the illicit narcotics that are currently afflicting our border communities. I think the gentleman has been an outstanding leader in that endeavor.

I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the leader for the compliment, I very much appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the burgeoning problem of the influx of illegal drugs across our border areas in this Nation have really served to, I think, elevate the interdiction role played by the El Paso Intelligence Center. There has been certainly some concern about its role in the omnibus package. We want all involved, Federal, State, and local enforcement agencies wherever they are in the United States, to have the ability to utilize EPIC and make sure that it operates effectively. I know that that intent has never been changed and would not be changed by this bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, those of us who have put this bill together and have worked with it certainly are very well aware of the activities undertaken by the El Paso Intelligence Center. The role was certainly expanded and better defined after the efforts of the chairman, GLENN ENGLISH, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. COLEMAN, in exposing the confusing and overlapping maze which formerly characterized the Federal drug interdiction efforts. During the course of congressional hearings on the issue, the need to overcome the bureaucratic turf battles between competing Federal agencies and to establish one central intelligence source to oversee interdiction initiatives in fact led to the creation of the El Paso Intelligence Center.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. If the gentleman would continue to yield, it is my understanding that nothing in this legislation would in any way alter the continued critical role now played by EPIC by any action taken here today or on this legislation; that the intention is to maintain that center in El Paso.

Mr. WRIGHT. Absolutely our intention is to maintain and to strengthen its efforts. Those charged with drafting this bill are quite familiar with the Federal drug interdiction undertakings and are currently enthusiastic and supportive of the El Paso Intelligence Center's continued ability to function as an integral component and that your operations at the El Paso Intelligence Center must remain in a setting which places it in a geographically sensitive location, along the southwest border, just makes eminently good sense.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I want to take this opportunity to thank the majority leader and all of those who have worked with the minority leader and all the others in this bipartisan fashion to at long last bring the attention of this Nation where it belongs, and that is on this problem that will consume us if we do not act.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for an "aye" vote on the bill and an "aye" vote on the rule.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that my distinguished friend on the other side, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] has used up all of his time, and that one Member from his side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DIOGUARDI] has asked for some time. I gladly yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DIOGUARDI].

Mr. DIOGUARDI. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I rise in strong support of this rule.

Mr. Speaker, let there be no mistake about it. this Nation has a serious drug problem. And, with the emergence of crack, an inexpensive deadly derivative of cocaine that our kids can easily afford, this problem will threaten our Nation's future unless we act now.

If you do not believe that this issue is a serious one, I suggest that you speak to my constituents. Recently, I sent a questionnaire to the people of my district in Westchester County on the problem of drugs and crack. The people's response has been overwhelming and no other issue has sparked as much concern and call for Federal action.

The people of Westchester are not alone. All across America, honest and hardworking people have seen the ravages of drug abuse around them. Their voice has been heard in my district, and I hope it will be heard by this House. I urge a "yes" vote on this rule.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I rise today in opposition to the rulemaking in order consideration of the omnibus narcotics bill, H.R. 5484.

I am in broad agreement with the substantive provisions of this legislation as it was introduced. The narcotics plague which afflicts our society must be addressed forcefully and comprehensively. The bill before us does this.

Its provisions for drug education are seriously needed and long overdue. The bill also provides needed support for drug interdiction and enforcement. I would like to commend the distinguished committee chairman and Members of the House who have helped to shape this bill. I want especially to commend my dear friend and collegue from New York, CHARLES RANGEL, who in his capacity as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics has provided outstanding leadership on this issue for many, many years. I would also like to compliment distinguished Speaker and majority leader for their indispensable work on this bill.

It is unfortunate that the rule before us today provides for the consideration of no less than 44 amendments, many of which are ill-considered, pernicious, and at best marginally germane to the subject of this important legislation.

I refer in particular to the amendment to be offered by Mr. LUNGREN, the gentleman from California, which would drastically modify the exclusionary rule in criminal trials. The Lungren amendment has no place in the bill under consideration today.

The Lungren proposal has implications which go far beyond narcotics control. By undercutting the primary tool for protecting Americans against unreasonable searches and seizures, this proposal would strike at the very foundations of the fourth amendment. It is a measure of at best doubtful constitutionality. It is most inappropriate that the House should take up such a far-reaching proposal as one of many amendments to an omnibus narcotics bill, with debate on the amendment limited to 15 minutes for each side. Proposed modifications of the protections in our Bill of Rights should be taken more seriously than this—and they should be deliberated in other and more appropriate contexts.

I also draw my colleagues' attention to another amendment made in order by the rule, a proposal by Mr. GEKAS which would permit imposition of the death penalty in new categories of cases. I am unaware of any hearings which have been held, or other evidence which woud indicate that this expansion of society's ultimate sanction would have a significant impact on the narcotics problems our Nation faces. This bill is not an appropriate vehicle for consideration of speculative and destruction proposals of this character.

The rule also makes in order amendments which would fundamentally alter and expand the role of the U.S. Armed Forces in law enforcement. I refer specifically to the Bennett and Hunter amendment Nos. 16 and 17. Our country owes its long and deep tradition of liberty in no small part to the historically clear separation between our police and our Armed Forces. We should not consider blurring this distinction on the basis of a few minutes' debate on amendments which have not been given full consideration in committee or elsewhere.

For these reasons, I cannot vote in favor of the rule which is offered here today. As I emphasized at the beginning of my remarks, I remain strongly in favor of the many constructive provisions in the bill as introduced.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the majority and minority leaders, and the task forces and committee members of both parties who have toiled so diligently on putting together this bipartisan drug package. I think the fact they were able to bring forward a bipartisan product in such short time is evidence of the widespread alarm about this national drug epidemic and the nonpartisan commitment to eradicating it.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few minutes discussing the process and procedure involved here. Our colleague on the Rules Committee from California [Mr. BEILENSON], expressed his dismay yesterday over the fact that we are dealing with a major bill in the waning days of the session and devoting far too little time to debating the bill or important amendments being made in order.

He went on to reiterate his belief that if our committees did their work earlier in the session each year, we would not be faced with this last minute crunch toward the end of a session that takes its toll when it comes to sound policy.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with my colleague. The drug problem is not some emergency that has just sprung up. It has been with us for some years now. We've had a select committee of the House looking at this problem for several congresses now. There's no excuse for waiting until the last 2 months of a Congress to try to patch together a comprehensive drug bill. It does a disservice to the Members, the legislative process, or to the American people. This is no way to legislate. We don't even have a committee report on this omnibus, 334-page bill.

I would hasten to add that I have no problem with the leadership involvement and initiative in this issue. I think it's commendable and often necessary. But, it should come much earlier to give committees sufficient time to hold hearings and develop sound legislation.

In our haste to patch together a drug bill—any drug bill—before we adjourn, we have run the risk of ending up with a patch-work quilt—a grab-bag of diverse proposals—that may or may not fit together into a comprehensible whole.

Second, I am uncomfortable with the way the amendment process has been handled. In the first place, Members were notified by letters that arrived at their offices the day after they left for the August recess that they would have to file their amendments with the Rules Committee the Friday before they got back. That was hardly fair. Nevertheless, some 88 amendments were filed.

But even then, not all of those have been made in order under this rule. Only 55 of the 88 have, by my count. Some 33 amendments did not make the cut, for whatever reason.

Granted, there is a need to limit the time we can spend on this. But I think we could do so without arbitrarily picking and choosing between amendments.

Third, there is a provision in this rule that says that those Members whose amendments have been rolled into the noncontroversial, en bloc Wright amendments—some 13 amendments in all—may insert their statements in the RECORD in support of their amendments, and I quote from the rule, "as if they had been actually delivered in debate." What that means is that we are repealing, for the purposes of this bill, the new CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reform rule we made permanent just last August 12. That rule requires that the RECORD be a verbatim account of words actually spoken, and that inserted remarks appear in different typeface. I was proud to consponsor that reform with our distinguished Majority Whip (Mr. FOLEY), and I am saddened to see it set aside so soon and so easily. This is a bad precedent!

Finally, I take exception once again to the majority denying the minority its right to offer a motion to recommit with instructions. The option should belong to the minority; this is our historic and traditional prerogative. I resent the majority attempting to dictate what we can and can't do.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 382, nays 19, not voting 30, as follows:

Mr. VISCLOSKY changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 541 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5484.

□ 1245

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, with Mr. CARR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] will be recognized for 2½ hours and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] will be recognized for 2½ hours.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a landmark piece of legislation. It is, in the truest and best sense, bipartisan in character. It is an omnibus contribution from 12 different committees of our House.

During the general debate I shall yield to the chairmen or the spokesmen for those various committees to explain their precise portions of the bill. Let me say at the outset that I think this is a day long in coming and long overdue. This represents the first truly comprehensive approach that Congress will have made toward an all-out war on this menace of illegal drugs which probably constitutes the biggest, single social problem confronting our country.

That problem has grown. We have been losing ground in our effort to control the flow of illegal drugs.

□ 1250

This bill will approach it in a coordinated way on six fronts simultaneously. The bill helps us to eradicate sources where drugs are grown abroad or at home or where they are manufactured in backlot facilities.

Further, it will assist to interdict and interrupt the flow of supplies coming into this country by providing equipment and materiel to those agencies charged with that responsibility.

Third, it will provide numerous better and much needed tools for law enforcement in this country, including a tool to use against the prevalence of laundering of money and large supplies of cash by dealers in narcotics.

Fourth, and perhaps most important of all, we will make a major assault in our effort to reach the young of our country in an educational program designed to utilize that powerful tool of peer pressure by which we can encourage the young before they are ever tempted to experiment in drugs to recognize the menace that lies out there lurking to ensnare them.

And finally, we will provide tools and sympathetic help to those unfortunate victims of drugs who have become ensnared and harmed along the way to rehabilitate themselves to useful lives.

We all know why we are here. America is being invaded. The borders of our countries and the streets of our cities are being overrun by a rising tide of dangerous drugs that sap the economic vitality of our country and leave in their wake a trail of broken lives, corruption, crime, and death. More than one-half of the crimes committed against property and about two-thirds of all the crimes of a violent character are related in one way or another to the sale and addictive use narcotics.

It is time to declare an all-out war, to mobilize our forces, public and private, national and local, in a total coordinated assault upon this menace which is draining our economy of some $230 billion this year, slowly rotting away the fabric of our society and seducing and killing our young.

That it will take money is hardly debatable. We cannot fight artillery with spitballs. But what it will cost to wage a truly serious war against illegal drugs is a pittance compared to what it is costing society not to do so.

This drug menace is not a partisan problem. Quarreling about whether one political party or another hates drugs more would be petty and pointless. Our minority leader, Representative BOB MICHEL of Illinois, and I have worked with a bipartisan group of our colleagues from these 12 committees to produce this comprehensive omnibus assault on this deadly menace. It will help us to have a battle plan wherein we can fight this menace of illegal drugs in the fields where drugs are grown, in the channels of illegal commerce where they are shipped, in the streets and in the alleys where they are sold, and in the minds of people young and old.

This is a war that we can win with persistence and one that we dare not lose.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve what remains of the 15 minutes allotted to me. I reserve that time for the use of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], the chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics, after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] has had an opportunity to utilize such portions of his time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] has consumed 5 minutes and reserves 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, let me state to my colleagues that, like my distinguished colleague, the majority leader, I, too, will allocate time after the original remarks that we make, along with the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], who heads up our task force on our side, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. BEN GILMAN, our ranking member on the Select Committee on Narcotics. As the distinguished majority leader indicated, we have 12 committees of the Congress involved here, and it would be my intention to allocate time to the ranking members of each one of those committees as we go forward to discuss this legislation and its amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the comprehensive legislation before us is bipartisan in origin, multifaceted in approach, and unified in purpose.

By this legislation we seek to eradicate drug production in the fields and factories where it begins. To intercept shipments bound for the United States; to enforce more vigorously the existing drug laws and draft new ones. To educate Americans, especially children, of the danger of drugs; and to strengthen rehabilitation centers and programs.

Twelve committees have contributed to this effort. And, as we know there are a host of amendments.

It is an unprecedented effort by the House. All of the members of the various committees and all the staff members have performed a major task. They deserve our congratulations and our thanks.

It might be asked if all this taxpayer's money is going to put a dent in the problem. After all, in the final analysis, doesn't it come down to the individual decision to take or not to take illegal drugs? How much can Congress really do?

I am remined of two lines of poetry which sum up our dilemma:

How small of all that human hearts endure
That part which law . . . can cause or cure.

The ultimate cure for the drug epidemic must come from within the heart of each individual faced with the temptation of taking drugs. It is ultimately a problem of character, of willpower, of family and community concern and personal pride.

The home is the first line of defense. The fight against drugs will be won in discussions in our living rooms, not in judgments in our court rooms. The Government, for all its power, is but one small part of this fight.

But our legislation can set a standard dealing with problems of enforcement, international cooperation, medication and detoxification, education, prevention, and treatment.

Last week I sat with local officials from drug and alcohol treatment centers in my district.

They are on the front line. We in Congress see the statistics, the drug-treatment officials see the victims. We talk about national problems: those officials deal with personal and family tragedies.

One of those officials said something that struck me as getting to the heart of the problem.

Speaking of the declaration of war on drugs, this officials said:

. . . We should first find out if substance abuse is the real problem or merely a symptom of another, deeper problem. We should know just what it is, we are declaring war on.

And I hope that message is heard by the administration and by the Congress.

What has happened within our society over the past generation to have brought us to this tragic state?

We appear to have lost the connection between rights and responsibilities that alone can make freedom work.

We have neglected formation of character in educating our children, at home and in schools.

The death of basketball star Len Bias shocked us into action.

What should shock us even more is that we had to be aroused out of our pathy by such a disaster.

There are thousands of young Americans whose names will never be known to anyone outside the circle of their own family and friends whose death from drugs was just as tragic.

The forgotten, unknown children who have died from drugs or who have has their lives ruined deserve our dedication to their memory.

This means that we do something more than pass this legislation and then go on to other things. We do that so often in the Congress.

This time we have to make an effort to be patient, to hang in there, to fight this battle not just on the day we pass the legislation, but beyond.

We have only just begun. If the House isn't willing, through oversight, to see to it that the legislation we pass is really working, we shouldn't pass a law in this area.

Let's do what we can in the hope our actions may inspire others to do what they must in the fight against this monstrous evil.

□ 1200

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in general support of the proposal that is before us. I have some serious reservations concerning some of the amendments which may be offered.

The Judiciary Committee labored long, hard, and strenuously in a bipartisan effort to fashion a bill so that we could meet this crisis that is a plague on our Nation. While the committees of the Congress have brought forth legislation designed to effectively deal with this crisis, it seems to me that we now have the possibility of certain amendments being offered which in my considered judgment would not in any way effectively deal with this crisis against drugs.

I would have hoped that we would have had a completely noncontroversial bill which all of us could support and support strongly; however, that is not the case.

Because of my responsibility as chairman of the Judiciary Committee and acting as manager of the House of Representatives in the impeachment trial of Judge Harry Claiborne which is taking place right now, there are arguments being made in the other body in the Clairborne impeachment proceedings and I must return to that body in order to continue my participation. Therefore, I am not going to be here at the time that the Committee on the Judiciary will have debate on its title of the bill, but the gentleman from New Jersey, the subcommittee chairman, Mr. HUGHES is going to be assigned to manage that portion of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, as we consider the omnibus drug legislation before us today, we should all pause to recognize one highly unusual feature of this issue.

Rarely do we see our Nation so united behind the need for action.

Rarely do we see Democrats and Republicans come together in such a bipartisan manner. And rarely do we all agree on the threat posed to our society.

In a pluralistic democracy, this unity of purpose comes infrequently. But it comes without fail when the health, safety, and security of our people are put in jeopardy.

With the drug epidemic wrecking our cities, dividing our families, generating crime, and killing our children—that is the situation we face today. We are in a crisis—a drug-induced state of emergency—and the response has been as one country united.

Mr. Chairman, I want to applaud the way you and Majority Leader WRIGHT have provided leadership on this issue, as well as the efforts of Members on both sides of the aisle. As one who has spoken out for years on the need to curb drug abuse and trafficking—and as one who has authored previous laws to combat drugs—I am gratified that we in Congress are about to launch this full-scale attack on the problem.

Before us is a legislative package that includes seven bills reported by the Judiciary Committee which strengthen our drug laws and give more weapons to those on the front line fighting drugs. These bills—in connection with other international, prevention, and educational measures contained in the omnibus bill—will constitute a strong line of defense against drugs.

Our goal, in short, is to reduce both the supply and demand at the same time.

Among the bills passed by the Judiciary Committee is the Drug Enforcement Enhancement Act, which provides one of the tools we need most: money.

We all know that State and local law enforcement agencies bear a disproportionate share of our Nation's drug efforts. Yet their resources are limited. This bill shows that the Federal Government is behind them by providing the first of what should be many more grants to help them do their jobs. It also targets well-needed funds to maintain and rebuild our overcrowded prisons—over $1 billion for prison construction, and $34 million for prison operation. Money for drug prosecution and Federal enforcement is also included.

Another of the Judiciary Committee bills also involves money, but in a very different way: by cutting off the drug trafficker's access to "clean" money. This bill, the Money Laundering Control Act, creates a crime called "money laundering" that allows us to prosecute and punish those who enable drug traffickers to reap their profits.

Other bills passed by the Judiciary Committee stiffen penalties for drug trafficking and drug-related crimes. One cracks down on those who manufacture and distribute deadly designer drugs. And another bill tries to keep drug-dependent offenders from returning to crime by providing treatment and rehabilitation services that are long overdue.

Now all of these bills will provide needed tools as our Nation confronts the drug problem. But none, no matter how effective, can serve as a substitute for the most essential component in the war on drugs—and that is, a comprehensive national strategy to fight drugs.

Mr. Speaker, we have a consensus in this country about drugs which cut across political and geographical lines. But we lack direction for our efforts—we lack a national strategy. And without a strategy to combat drugs, we will be left with little more than a band-aid approach to a crisis that really demands coordination and long-range planning at the Federal level. We need to look beyond the short term.

That is why the omnibus legislation now before us includes another bill passed by the Judiciary Committee, calling on the President to convene a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control. Congressmen RANGEL, HUGHES, GUARINI, and GILMAN all joined me as original sponsors of this bill.

The purpose of the White House Conference is simple and straightforward: to pool the best minds and resources of our Nation so we can develop a comprehensive, coordinated, and effective strategy to fight drugs.

The conference will give force and direction to our national consensus to fight drugs by drawing on the collective wisdom of all levels of our society—experts and educators, law enforcement and drug counselors, government officials, and grassroots activists.

Now why call a White House conference? Because only the President can bring all these people together—in a nonpartisan and cooperative manner—to address this problem that affects us all. And as a conference held at the highest level of Government, it will be in the position to ask tough questions about past policy—and help set priorities for the future allocation of resources.

Mr. Chairman, scattered shots in the dark are not going to win the war on drugs. Nor will rhetoric, no matter how well intended. Right now we are losing this war. But it is not too late. This legislation before us will help us develop a successful strategy to defeat drugs—before they defeat us.

I urge the adoption of the omnibus bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, this is a great and a historic period I think that this House, this body is going through, and certainly the members of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control would like to thank the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority and the minority leaders, for the active role which they allowed the members of the select committee to play in the formation of this legislation and especially to the gentleman from New York BEN GILMAN who made certain that no matter how great the temptation to be partisan on this issue that our commitments have to be to follow that line at least as it related to the select committee to make certain that we meet our contribution to the House and not to the party.

I suspect that everyone would know in their own home towns just how bad the problem is, but this is the first time I think that we in the House and in the Nation as a whole will be able to work within the framework of some national strategy. It is impossible for us to even hope that we will have anything less than a bumper crop from the countries that are growing, processing, and distributing drugs, into the United States.

Just this weekend our President had indicated that if a foreign country was held responsible for the lack of quality in our school system, that in his opinion it could be considered an act of war.

I say to the President that certainly foreign countries are responsible for the growing of drugs that we do not grow in the United States and that I think we should consider it a threat to our national security.

Certainly recently the former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Warren Burger, indicated to me that in his opinion he thought the narcotics problem was a greater threat to our national security than communism.

This bill addresses itself to the problem, that we will let countries, friend and foe alike, know that they cannot continuously expect to receive economic, military, and technical assistance, if indeed they do not cooperate in their international agreements or bilateral agreements with this country, and the Foreign Affairs Committee deals with it by giving tools to the State Department and to the President to assist the cooperating countries in dealing with the problem and also to provide the sanctions, some of which were provided by the Ways and Means Committee in removing most-favored-nation treatment to those countries that just ignore their international commitment.

When it comes to our borders, Commissioner von Raab indicated that it is a sin, not only for aliens, but certainly for drugs, 30 percent of the cocaine, not grown in Mexico, is pouring across that border as tonnage of that type of drugs.

Certainly if the President can say that the drug epidemic is a threat to our national security, we should hear from the Department of Defense to at least as they protect our heavens, to protect our borders against the intrusion of these poisons.

I suppose when we talk about law enforcement, if we really want to find out where the troops are coming from, we have to look to local and State law enforcement officials, because if we look to the Drug Enforcement Agency we can only find some 2,000 dedicated men and women, but certainly not enough to take care of the international and national problems that we face.

This bill addresses itself to that problem. Representative GILMAN and I will be increasing the amounts of money, and we hope we can be persuasive to this body, to make certain that we give our local law enforcement and criminal justice system the tools that are necessary if indeed we are going to wage a battle.

And of course, as everyone has pointed out, we cannot expect to have too much success as it relates to the epidemic that we are witnessing if we just concentrate on law enforcement and supply. We have to have some type of a national obligation in this country to reduce the demand. We cannot do it if we have a $200 billion education budget and yet in reviewing each part of our responsibilities we walk away, as we have in the past, and say that only $3 million will be allocated to local and State efforts in order to educate our children and to rehabilitate those who certainly have already abused drugs.

I think the First Lady has done a remarkable job in focusing attention, especially as it relates to attracting the private sector in doing something about this problem; but it just seems to me if the legacy which we are going to leave to our children is a healthier world and to be able to say to our kids not only that we hope you graduate, but we hope that you live to be able to have a healthy life, that we have to do more than give out comic books and hand out books, but to be partners in a comprehensive program with local and State authorities to make certain that we do have an education and prevention program.

Of course, as this explosion of drug addiction and drug abuse takes place, it seems to me that when we have a hot line or when we tell people that they should call for assistance, that it is really wrong to do this and to find out there is no place to go for assistance.

We have a national hot line and yet in the city and State of New York, if you call that number, more than likely you are going to be placed on hold because we do not even have the centers or the counselors that are necessary to treat those people who are seeking help.

I think at the very minimum we should be able to say that in this war against drugs that anyone who seeks help, seeks treatment, seeks advice, that this country is prepared to make certain that it is available.

Certainly when we talk about drug treatment and rehabilitation, this bill attempts to address those problems.

Now, I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, and to my friends and colleagues that we are fully aware that a lot has to be done by the private sector, by our churches, by our leaders in the synagogues, and more importantly, by the American families to recognize that we have an obligation to our children, our families, and our friends to have some moral standard that makes you proud that you are not abusing drugs, rather than jsut to frighten people about the dangers of using drugs.

But in all of this, we have to say as human beings, as politicians and as legislators, that we have tried to make a contribution in making certain that toward our national defense, toward protecting ourselves against this threat to our national security, that we at least attempted to develop a plan. That is what we will be doing today and tomorrow and I am confident then when we finish with that product, and I hope that we get the type of vote that can send a message to the Senate that the American people have talked with the House of Representatives, where indeed the people govern, and they will act accordingly in the other body and present to the President for the first time in recent years a comprehensive national strategy to deal with this problem.

I am certain that when we do this, that in the near future there will be no need for a select committee to deal with narcotics abuse and control because we can once again get a handle on this and provide the type of direction and send a message to other countries that have ignored this problem that we as the leader in the free world have done more than just fight a rhetorical war, but we have done something that can make our Nation and humankind proud.

So the gentleman from New York BEN GILMAN, and I and all of the members of the select committee would like to thank you for the support that you have given us over the years and we think that this package that is going to be passed pays tribute to each and every one of us.

I sincerely hope that the atmosphere of bipartisanship in which this package has been created will be the one that we will truly enjoy when the President signs it into law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding and I want to congratulate him and Congressman GILMAN for the superb leadership that they have given the Select Committee on Narcotics for the more than decade I have worked on it.

The thing that really excites me about this bill is not only that it provides money for eradication, cleaning up the poppy fields of Laos, Burma, Thailand, Turkey, and the like—not only that it provides money for interdiction at our borders, not only that it provides money for law enforcement in our communities, but that it provides for the first time a significant statement in the form of $350 million that the prime challenge, the major target of opportunity is educating American youth that drugs lead down the path to destruction of careers, destruction of education prospects, destruction of health, destruction of job prospects, destruction of families, and ultimately destruction of lives.

We have to change behavior in this country and this is the way to do it.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such, time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I would like to take just a moment to express for this side of the aisle our deep appreciation to the leadership of this House for their sensitive response to the reality, if we are to effectively wage war on drugs, that that effort must be bipartisan.

The speaker, Mr. O'NEILL, the majority leader, Mr. WRIGHT, have been more than cooperative with the Republican side of the House. They have been willing to allow a variety of input that truly will assure that upon final passage this bill will make a significant contribution to our effort to win this war against drugs in our society.

If, indeed, Mr. Chairman, the legislative process is like making sausage, the work of the committees of the House has produced sausage here that is of very high quality.

Under very difficult time constraints, those committees have come forth with sections of this bill that touch every base that is fundamental to a meaningful and significant effort.

The issue in many ways was brought home crystal clear to me just yesterday morning, when I was on my way to a committee meeting with one of our liaison officers. This fellow, in talking about the bill as before us, told me of an incident that recently had occurred in his own family.

He and his wife have one child, and they have just had to transfer that child from a public school in a nearby State to a private school in hopes that their child will receive the sort of effective supervision and control that they feel he needs at this moment.

The reason for their concern is because it seems that in that school district, high school students are arriving on his child's campus in an attempt to entice young students to use drugs. The son that my friend was concerned about is in the second grade.

Indeed, this problem bubbling under the surface in our country is at the point of explosion. The House has been attempting, piece by piece, to work with that problem for some time.

The President has expressed his concern about the impact of narcotics upon our society since he arrived at the White House.

Recent events have allowed us to finally crystallize a major effort that has here produced the most important drug package in the history of the Congress.

In the area of criminal law enforcement, often our committees feel limited in terms of what they can do. They are hesitant to be as tough as many of us feel necessary. Because of that established bias of the committee system, the rule allows through the amendment process the potential for bipartisan improvement of the committee work.

There are approximately 18 amendments that will be carried by Republicans that are given individual time and approximately 11 Democrat amendments. Those amendments will not carry partisan labels as such. They are an effort to meld that bipartisan voice that is broader than the committees.

Among those amendments there will be some controversy. My colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO], expressed some concern about that earlier. I must repond to those comments by saying this: The committees are concerned about their bailiwick; but also, the American public is very seriously concerned about making sure that this total package reflects the kind of movement that will allow us to be successful.

Most concern centers around two subject areas. First is that of making law enforcement more effective in dealing with those people who profit through the illicit traffic and sale of drugs. Beyond that, it is clear that we are going to spend a good deal more new money in the process of carrying out this war. Some of the amendments will alter the priority for expenditure of those funds.

Let me mention a few of the amendments that will be before us tomorrow.

In title II, the armed services portion of the bill, we would like to see meaningful reform of outdated posse comitatus laws. These laws, which date from the Civil War era, have prevented our military from fulfilling the needed role that they could play in assisting civilian law enforcement efforts. The Hunter amendment will allow Presidential deployment of sufficient military personnel to make real progress against the ever-increasing supply of drugs penetrating our borders. Existing laws which prevent our military from assisting in the hot pursuit of suspected narcotics traffickers are an anachronism in an age where the supply of drugs constitutes a very real threat to the American way of life.

In title III, the Way and Means portion of this bill, Mr. CRANE will strike a blow for financial responsibility. His amendment will reduce the new authorization of moneys to the Customs Service to a level that Customs officials feel they can really absorb. The Crane amendment will not destroy the bipartisan effort to increase Customs funding but rather will restore fiscal sense to an otherwise self-defeating effort to throw money at an agency which plays a lead role in reducing the supply of illegal drugs.

The Judiciary Committee crafted title VI of the bill and Republicans will be offering at least a half dozen amendments which should receive the support of a majority in this House. The most controversial will be the Gekas proposal to allow for the death penalty in a continuing criminal enterprise where a murder results. The Gekas proposal is aimed at major drug traffickers who intentionally murder people during ongoing criminal conspiracies.

Mr. LUNGREN should be supported in his efforts to revise existing law so that a good-faith exception can be made to the exclusionary rule and so that prosecutors can really get at the hidden profits of drug dealers by seizing substitute assets.

Title VI also creates a 50–50 match block grant program for Federal aid to State law enforcement efforts. Mr. LUNGREN will offer an amendment to eliminate the law enforcement block grant program. Many of us wonder if it is wise to send such a small amount of money to units of government that spend less than 3 percent of their law enforcement budgets for drug enforcement. The amounts provided for this purpose and the priority which State and local law enforcement budgets have given to the drug problem in the past would seem to indicate that this money would not make an effective contribution.

If such a program should not be eliminated, then, at the very least, an effort should be made to make grant recipients meet a minimum standard in order to qualify for the funding. I urge your support for Mr. MCCOLLUM's amendment to require that a State have adequate possession statutes in place before it becomes eligible for this funding. Continuing the trend toward decriminalization for possession of certain drugs is, in my view, totally inconsistent with the fundamental and guiding principle of this new drug policy effort, which is to reduce the demand for narcotics by enhancing enforcement of existing laws and improving ongoing drug education and counseling programs.

Republicans believe that a concerted effort should be made to place more drug dealers in prison. They also recognize that many State prisons are already overcrowded and that additional funding will be needed to solve that problem. I urge bipartisan support for Mr. MCCOLLUM's amendment to eliminate the existing cap on Federal contracts for which State prison industries may bid. This will allow the States to earn more money, enhance job training for inmates, and, plausibly, to channel savings achieved by increased sales into new prison construction.

Title VIII, the Education and Labor title, provides for a new federally funded series of drug education programs at an estimated cost of $350 million for each of the next 3 fiscal years. House Republicans recognize that it will take a substantial Federal effort to get the ball rolling but they also believe that the ultimate responsibility for funding such programs should be shared on a more equal basis with the private sector and units of State and local government.

To that end, I again urge bipartisan support for Mr. COLEMAN's amendments. One of the Coleman amendments creates the national trust for a drug-free youth which would be funded largely through private sector gifts and contributions. The other Coleman title VIII amendment alters the bill's grant formula for drug education. Instead of a 75-percent Federal contribution after the first year, the formula would provide 60 percent Federal support in the second year and 20 percent in any subsequent year.

In title IX, the Energy and Commerce section of the bill, Mr. MADIGAN will be offering an amendment to reduce the authorization for emergency substance abuse treatment by $80 million and to eliminate set-asides for the agency created by the bill and community-based local programs. Never let it be said that House Republicans oppose any effort to speed relief to the victims of either drug or alcohol abuse. The Madigan amendment, like the Lungren, Coleman, and Roukema amendments which came before it, are an indication of the approach that we believe all Members should take toward spending and the role of the Federal Government. We do not oppose any and all new spending across the board. Rather, we recognize the need to address the drug epidemic in a fiscally responsible manner by assuring that new expenditures can be absorbed by the agencies involved and that they will have the intended impact on the trafficking of drugs with its Pandora's box or related problems.

Finally, in title X, the Post Office and Civil Service Committee title, Mr. SHAW will offer an amendment to authorize Federal agencies to implement drug testing programs. The Shaw amendment would authorize such tests only for Federal employees with access to classified information.

The bipartisan drug effort has been just that. It is my greatest hope that our efforts here on the floor will ultimately result in the passage of meaningful reforms. The phrase, "War on Drugs" has been bandied about a good bit. I honestly believe that this House has done a marvelous job on moving forward to deal with a major issue while acting under tremendous time constraints. If it is the wisdom of this body that the bill be amended to reflect the concerns I have just outlined, then I believe we will transform our current efforts to a status where the phrase "War on Drugs" takes on new meaning. This is a battle with few pretensions. It is a battle that America cannot afford to lose.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the historic bipartisan legislative initiative we are considering today, H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986. Not only is the legislation historic in scope and depth, but it represents a rather unique bipartisan effort to cope with a problem of immense proportions. In addition, it should be noted that this is the most comprehensive drug measure considered by Congress since the enactment of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, which established a foundation for Federal efforts to combat narcotics trafficking and drug abuse and, among other provisions, created a system of penalties for incarcerating drug traffickers.

Under the strong leadership of our distinguished Speaker, Mr. O'NEILL, a bipartisan team composed of the distinguished Majority Leader JIM WRIGHT, and the distinguished Minority Leader BOB MICHEL, along with the chairman and ranking minority members of the standing committees as well as the distinguished chairman of our Narcotics Select Committee, Mr. RANGEL, with whom I have had the pleasure serving as the ranking minority member along with many Members from both sides of the aisle, Republicans and Democrats, liberals, and conservatives, have formulated H.R. 5484. In short, this measure reflects the work of the leadership and numerous Members who have worked so intensely under severe time constraints to bring this bill to the House floor.

Drug trafficking and drug abuse have reached epidemic proportions not only in the United States, but on a global scale. Both the production of, and the demand for drugs of all types have increased dramatically in recent years despite record seizures by our law enforcement agencies. The most disconcerting fact is that the more enforcement and interdiction activities we have undertaken, the more drugs have been available on our streets and in our schools. Failure to take dramatic action at this time could be disastrous.

Since 1981, numerous enforcement mechanisms have been created by the administration to deal with the problem of drug trafficking. The South Florida Task Force, and the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System [NNBIS] are two prime examples where coordination and cooperation have been increased among Federal, State, and local drug law enforcement officials resulting in large seizures of all types of drugs.

Mr. Chairman, despite these efforts, the Narcotics Select Committee estimates that more drugs will be smuggled into this country during the current year than ever before in our history. Specifically, we estimate that 150 tons of cocaine, 12 tons of heroin, between 30,000 and 60,000 tons of marijuana, and 200 tons of hashish will enter the United States during the current year. Obviously this dreadful situation cannot and must not be allowed to continue. Either we are wasting scarce resources against an insurmountable supply of drugs and extravagantly wealthy drug traffickers, or we are not placing sufficient resources on programs designed to reduce the demand for drugs in the United States.

We are indeed engaged in a tough, up-hill battle, but one which can be won only if increased resources, equipment, and manpower, including our military resources, are utilized in the fight. In addition, we must do much more to make certain that drug producing countries intensify their eradication efforts. Our military forces can also be used in that regard as the recent example of Bolivia clearly indicates.

Of primary importance, however, is the need to increase the Federal role in, and the financial support for demand reduction through drug education and prevention programs. It is estimated that there are 25 million Americans who have tried cocaine. There are also an estimated 550,000 active heroin addicts, and the new and more potent form of "black tar" heroin from Mexico creates a new and even more deadly threat to our citizens.

The need for increased drug education is further underscored by a 1985 high school senior survey which revealed that almost two-thirds of those seniors surveyed have used illicit drugs. It further revealed that cocaine use had risen to a new high of 17 percent, and more than 34 percent of the students felt that trying cocaine was not dangerous.

The simple truth is that no one segment of our society is unaffected by drug trafficking and drug abuse. We all pay a price, be it in terms of the more than $100 billion annually in increased health care cost, lost productivity and related crime and violence; or more directly through the human suffering of addicted loved ones or friends.

The Federal response to demand reduction to date has concentrated primarily on the intense and dedicated efforts of First Lady Nancy Reagan and various private grass-roots organizations and private sector corporations. These actions, especially those of Mrs. Reagan, are highly commendable, but they are not enough.

Unfortunately, the sad fact is that Federal support for drug abuse services has been reduced by over 40 percent since 1980. While budgetary constraint is a hard fact of life, such excessive reductions in this crucial area must be reversed. In addition, States visited by the select committee in our numerous hearings around the country have failed to establish their own drug education programs, and the Federal Government has failed to take the lead in mandating that this be done.

For some time many of my colleagues have viewed a comprehensive, multipronged approach, as the only viable solution to the enormous problems of drug trafficking and abuse that we face. The omnibus antidrug bill before us today adopts that approach.

First, this bill seeks to intensify eradication and enforcement activities at the source through the creation of incentives for foreign nations to intensify their efforts to cooperate with the United States in eradicating. Specifically, the bill increases the authorization of funds for international narcotics control; and requires the President to deny most-favored-nation trade treatment on other preferential tariff treatment to drug producing countries which refuse to cooperate in halting the flood of drugs to our shores or in the apprehension of drug traffickers. In addition, it requires the United States, in its participation in international lending institutions, be required to use its financial resources, its votes and its influence to promote the reduction and elimination of narcotic crop production. We simply must let drug producing nations know that we are serious about ending drug production.

Second, the bill dramatically increases our interdiction capability by providing for additional narcotics control aircraft and aerostat radar balloons to be deployed on both land and sea. In addition it requires the purchase of other types of highly sophisticated detection equipment. Interdiction is also enhanced by authorizing additional personnel and equipment for the Coast Guard and the Customs Service.

Third, the bill responds to the need for increased drug law enforcement by further increasing penalties and by providing mandatory minimum sentences for "serious" and "major" drug offense categories. The sentences range from 5 to 20 years depending on the type of offense category and whether it is the first or a subsequent offense. Other key provisions in the legislative package place strong restrictions on "designer drugs," provide increased funding support for Federal, State, and local drug law enforcement and creates a new Federal criminal offense for money laundering with penalties of up to $1 million and 20 years in prison.

Fourth, the legislation authorizes an additional $350 million annually for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 for Federal and federally supported drug abuse education and prevention programs.

Fifth, the bill authorizes $150 million in grants to States for drug abuse treatment and prevention services and an additional $20 million for the creation of a new agency for substance abuse prevention.

Finally, in terms of all the problem areas mentioned, the legislation requests the President to convene a White House Conference on Narcotics Abuse and Control. Such a conference will bring together the best minds in our country to develop workable programs and policies to deal with drug trafficking and abuse.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would only add that the time for action is now. An indepth, comprehensive, coordinated antidrug policy is the only way we will ever have a chance of victory in the "war" on drugs. I am convinced that enactment of this omnibus package will make it possible to turn the corner and allow us to reclaim our streets and neighborhoods, our schools and parks, and even more important, our children. The $1.5 billion authorized in the package is a small price to pay for the very future of our society.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise as an original cosponsor and strong supporter of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act. Simply put, drug abuse is the single greatest threat facing our great Nation, and this legislation has been crafted accordingly. It is a bold and ambitious legislative product—one that I am proud to associate myself with.

"Give us back our city!" That's the cry that has gone out from New York City, and so many other communities throughout our Nation. It sums up our frustration and our total disgust about the drugs that have overtaken our streets, our workplaces and our schools. It is a national crisis that demands a national response.

It's a nightmare best told by numbers. The House Select Committee on Narcotics estimates that 12 tons of heroin will enter the United States in 1986, along with 150 tons of cocaine and 30,000 tons of marijuana.

But, it is cocaine that has become the drug of choice. Twenty-five million Americans have used cocaine; about 5,000 try it for the first time every day; and Americans spend over $50 billion annually on cocaine. Cocaine deaths have nearly tripled since 1978 and one out of every four cocaine users commits a crime to support his or her habit.

For young people, the numbers are even more startling. Consider that nearly two-thirds of all high school seniors report using illicit drugs; nearly a third of all seventh graders say they've already tried them; and, certainly the most alarming statistic of all, 25 percent of our Nation's fourth graders say they feel peer pressure to use drugs.

Drugs in the workplace have also had devastating effects. According to a study conducted by the Research Triangle Institute of North Carolina, drug abuse in the workplace resulted in an estimated $33 billion in reduced productivity in 1983.

During the last year, our Nation's already severe drug problem has scaled new and even more frightening heights, and the reason is crack, the cocaine-based drug that is killing our kids, and sending violent crime statistics sky high.

Just recently, I met with a group of remarkable teenagers from Co-op City, a community in my home district of New York. They call themselves "Kids Against Crack." Some of these young people are former crack users, but mostly they're kids who are tired of seeing their friends being destroyed by crack. These young people have told me that crack is a problem engulfing their entire neighborhood. They live with this problem, so when they say crack is "the dealer's dream and the user's nightmare," we should listen.

The omnibus drug bill before us today shows that we have been listening and we are responding in a comprehensive and dramatic way. More than anything else, this legislation, which contains all or part of 20 drug-related bills crafted by 12 House committees, reflects a clear and accurate belief that there is no easy, single solution to our drug crisis. Only through a comprehensive sustained attack on illicit drugs can we expect to make any headway at all.

This bill authorizes a total of $1.5 billion in fiscal year 1987 to strengthen the enforcement of drug laws; to stem the flow of illegal drugs into and throughout our country; to increase drug penalties; to expand Federal prison facilities; to educate our citizens—particularly our young people—about the dangers of drug abuse; and to treat and rehabilitate those individuals who have become dependent upon drugs. Specific highlights of the bill include: up to life imprisonment for drug dealing which results in serious injury or death; drug enforcement grants to local law enforcement agencies; increased Coast Guard funds to give them more manpower and equipment to help interdict drugs; making it easier to detect and prosecute money laundering; requiring drug producing countries to establish eradication programs in order to be eligible for U.S. aid; grant programs for local drug education and treatment programs; and a Federal drug education program.

I would also like to focus special attention on provisions in the bill establishing tougher penalties for the manufacture or trafficking of small amounts of drugs, as well as for using children to distribute or manufacture drugs. Both of these key provisions were included in my bill, H.R. 5103, to toughen the Federal response to the crack crisis.

In addition, I want to stress the special importance of title VIII of the bill, which is the Education and Labor Committee component. Specifically, this title authorizes $350 million during the next 3 fiscal years for drug abuse education efforts in our schools. As far as I am concerned, nothing in the bill is more important than the new emphasis it places on drug abuse education—and I say that with 23 years of law enforcement experience and a full appreciation of the vital role law enforcement plays in the war on drugs. In fact, it is safe to say that only law enforcement plays a major role in each phase of the drug abuse prevention process.

However, the fact is, while we have vigorously been working to reduce the supply of illicit drugs—with mixed results—we have done precious little to cut down on the demand for drugs. Consider, for example, that only 1 percent of all Federal antidrug funds—$1.7 billion this year—are being spent on drug abuse education. That is intolerable and it is a fatal flaw in our society's approach to combating drug abuse. Title VIII of the bill says we must do much more in the area of drug abuse education, and we must start that educational process as soon as the child enters school—and not let up.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise two concerns I have about the bill. First, I am concerned that an important amendment I had attached to the education and labor component—an amendment which received unanimous committee approval—was deleted from the omnibus bill. That amendment would have ensured that at least part of the funding for drug abuse education came from the forfeited assets of drug traffickers. The amendment would have allowed up to $10 million a year from both the Department of Justice assets forfeiture fund, and the Customs forfeiture fund to be used for drug abuse education. While these funds have traditionally been reserved for law enforcement purposes, there is a substantial surplus that is not being spent and is returned to the general treasury fund at the end of each fiscal year. That surplus amount, which is expected to be more than $40 million at the end of fiscal year 1986. I would strongly urge the appropriate committees to seriously consider acting on this proposal during the early part of the upcoming Congress.

Second, I am concerned that an amendment I had planned to offer on the floor was ruled out of order. That amendment would have allowed funds authorized under title VIII to be used "to improve security measures in elementary and secondary schools." I viewed this as an important clarifying amendment. It has been stated that the bill would not prohibit such expenditures in its present form, but I agreed with the U.S. Department of Education that some schools might be reluctant to use funds for enhanced security measures unless it was specifically stated in the bill.

Schools have been very reluctant until recent times to take tough security measures, including reporting to and bringing in the local police when there is a drug problem in the schools. Based upon the testimony our committee has received, I am pleased to note that this ivory tower mentality is beginning to change. Now, there is a growing realization by school officials that working more closely with law enforcement, and taking other types of security precautions are absolutely essential components of any effective drug abuse education and prevention program. I am hopeful that schools will not be discouraged from using funds under the omnibus bill for this important purpose.

Notwithstanding these concerns, Mr. Speaker, I would strongly urge the overwhelming passage of this vital piece of legislation. It sends the right message at the right time, and I am confident much good will result.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that Congress is finally taking the lead in the fight against narcotics abuse and trafficking. I am particularly pleased that the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act recognizes that the drug epidemic transcends our country's borders.

Certainly, we must address the problems of abuse within the United States. The need for education and treatment cannot be overemphasized. Equally important, however, is remembering that the responsibility for drug production and trafficking goes far beyond our own backyards.

The foreign assistance and trade provisions of the bill hold other countries accountable for their actions. I wholeheartedly support the suspension of U.S. financial assistance to countries which do not cooperate with international drug fighting efforts. Moreover, I will urge the President to make active use of his power to impose trade sanctions against these uncooperative nations.

The time has come for us to toughen our stance against countries which do not cooperate in our drug interdiction efforts. I earnestly hope that the Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act will prove true to its name.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support for this bipartisan effort to launch an all-out assault on the drug problem in our country. The statistics compiled from several diverse sources indicate alarming increases in drug use among our youth as well as a sharp increase in the shear amount of drugs flooding our borders. The omnibus antidrug bill before us, of which I am a cosponsor, would attack both the supply and the demand side of this most distressing national problem. Consider the following statistics from the drug abuse warning network of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services regarding the use of cocaine:

From 1981 to 1985, the number of hospital emergencies associated with the use of cocaine increased threefold from 3,196 to 9,946 cases and the trend continues.

From 1981 to 1985, the number of cocaine related deaths increased almost threefold form 195 to 580 and the trend continues.

From 1982 to 1985, the number of hospital emergencies associated with the use of cocaine in our Nation's Capital increased from 116 to 360 and the trend continues.

From 1982 to 1985, the number of cocaine-related deaths in our Nation's Capital increased from 2 to 32 and the trend continues.

Mr. Chairman, the supply side of the drug problem also has its share of alarming statistics. Consider some of the following:

In 1985, Bolivia produced 34,250 metric tons of coca. During the same period, it provided 15 percent of U.S. cocaine supply.

In 1985, Colombia produced 11,000 metric tons of coca and 2,500 metric tons of marijuana. During the same period, it provided 75 percent of U.S. cocaine supply and 49 percent marijuana supply.

In 1985, Mexico produced 21 to 45 metric tons of opium and 2,500 to 3,000 metric tons of marijuana. During the same period, it provided 38 percent of U.S. heroin supply and roughly 32 percent marijuana supply.

In 1985, Peru produced 95,000 metric tons of coca. During the same period, it provided 5 percent of the U.S. cocaine supply.

The omnibus antidrug legislation now before us attacks this drug problem in five ways: First, eradication of drug production in the fields and factories; second, interception and interdiction of shipments inbound to the United States; third, enforcement of present drug laws; fourth, education, especially of young people, on the dangers of drug abuse; and fifth, rehabilitation of victims of drug abuse.

Before the August recess, the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, reported out a number of strong measures to be included in the omnibus antidrug package which are aimed at stemming the tide of illicit drugs flooding the United States. Some of the provisions authored by the committee are:

First, an increase of $7.9 million above the current authorization level for the fiscal year 1987 international narcotics control budget, making the total authorization $65.4 million.

Second, development of a safe and effective herbicide for aerial eradication of coca.

Third, new authorization of $2 million for U.S. Information Agency and $3 million for U.S. Agency for International Development to be used for drug education programs overseas.

Fourth, partial repeal of the present law which would allow U.S. officials to be present at drug busts once the Secretary of State has determined it is in the national interest.

Fifth, withholding of $1 million from Mexico pending the full investigation and prosecution of DEA agent Enrique Camarena's murderers.

Sixth, instruction to the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of the effectiveness of international narcotics control programs.

Narcotics production is out of control in many parts of South America. National leaders in South America have repeatedly stressed to U.S. officials that if the United States does not act quickly to help these nations, it will be too late to stop the spread of illicit narcotics cultivation and traffic. Law and order, and the viability of fledgling democratic governments are at stake.

We need a tough, bipartisan action to gain control of the international scourge of drug trafficking and I am hopeful that the legislation we are considering today will help stem the tide of illicit narcotics pouring into the United States. The well-being of our Nation and the future prospects of our younger generation depend upon it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, it is clear to me that drug abuse in the United States has reached the crisis point. Drug abuse results in a staggering and tragic loss of human potential. Illicit drug trafficking has become a huge and deadly business. Despite the best efforts of our existing law enforcement, health, and education programs, the drug problem rages out of control.

For these reasons, I believe that Congress must attempt to stem the tide of drugs. I applaud this legislation as an effort in the right direction. The bill is the product of work by a dozen committees, and is tremendously complex, as is the drug industry. I wish the bill were better coordinated.

I am not pleased with several aspects of the bill, but I support it as a necessary attempt to cope with the drug problem. Specifically, we are overfunding these programs. Each member and each committee and each party tried to outdo the other in its enthusiasm to wage war on drugs. We should have been more careful.

There are several portions of the bill which I wholeheartedly endorse, and which have won my support of the entire bill. The bill contains strong antimoney-laundering provisions, which will make the drug economy's workings more difficult. The bill addresses the "designer drug" problem effectively. It strengthens existing antidrug laws and penalties. And it places an increased emphasis on education as a means to combat drug use.

My objections center on the bill's cost, roughly $2 billion. The exact cost is unknowable because much of it will be contained in the budgets of other agencies, like the Department of Defense. The bill tends to provide large increases in funding for each agency and program that addresses the drug problem, but money can't guarantee coordinated efforts, or results.

For example, the bill provides $350 million in funding for antidrug educational programs. I believe that educating people about the dangers of drug use is perhaps the most effective means of combatting the drug problem. However, I am concerned that we are throwing a large sum of money at the problem through an untested grant program, without necessarily knowing how that money should be, much less will be, spent.

Similarly, we are providing large increases in funding for various drug interdiction activities. Those activities are essential. However, I am not wholly convinced that providing an additional $300 million for Coast Guard and Navy interdiction activities will yield substantial results. Given the hasty manner in which this bill was drafted, it seems quite possible that funding was assigned without a clear perception of anticipated benefits.

The ways and means section is the title on which I have had the greatest involvement and interest. Despite some initial concerns, I believe it has been refined so it is not unnecessarily disruptive of normal commercial Customs procedures.

Members of the Ways and Means Committee had little time to review the first draft of their bill. The private sector had less time. Business interests who were concerned that the bill was overwritten, and conferred authorities not needed, did not even see the draft before hearings were held. They barely had an opportunity to present their list of concerns before the markup. Their complaints were responded to, and changes were made which eliminated most of the business community's concerns. The procedure was unsatisfactory, but the result was satisfactory.

The ways and means secton does contain some needed revisions in Customs law that will help us strengthen the drug enforcement and interdiction services of the U.S. Customs Service. Even though some of them may appear to infringe too severely on individual rights, I believe the problem is of such urgency that it demands special attention from the Congress.

An unprecedented section of the ways and means title is the denial of trade benefits to those countries which do not cooperate with our efforts to eliminate illegal drugs. The President must take one or more actions against such a country which could significantly affect its access to our market. Actions include removal of GSP, CBI, MFN benefits, or an increase in tariffs up to an additional 50 percent beyond the column II—or non-MFN—rates. While I normally object to using trade as a weapon to achieve foreign policy or any other objectives, I did not object to the inclusion of this language as a tough measure to deal with uncooperative countries, as long as the President is given some flexibility.

I remain concerned with the high increase in authorization for the air interdiction program because there is no guarantee that the funds will be used effectively, or that they will not duplicate funds authorized in other titles of this bill.

While the drug problem is serious and should command additional resources, I'm not sure it is in our best interests to simply throw large sums of money at each agency that has a role in our drug enforcement efforts and hope that we come out with an effective, coordinated attempt to combat illegal drugs. In the Customs Service authorization we are obviously throwing money, too much, in my judgment.

In this aspect of the war on drugs, as in many others, the Congress will have to monitor expenses and performance closely. If, as in many Federal programs, the performance does not justify costs, Congress must be quick to reorganize the activity, or to stop the flow of money.

With the above caveats, Mr. Chairman, I do support this legislation. The problem is a grave one. Congress today is acting in a comprehensive, timely manner to attack that problem.

With legislation so sweeping, there are bound to be flaws. We need to remain vigilant to correct those flaws, but I believe the overall bill is a positive step, and one worthy of support. Because the problem is of such urgency, we must accept the risks. We have waited too long already.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986. Having introduced and pushed hard for legislation in this area since coming to Congress, I am especially gratified to see the House consider this landmark measure.

As a coauthor of two key components of this bill, H.R. 5393, the Drug Enforcement Enhancement Act, and H.R. 5394, the Narcotics Penalties and Enforcement Act, I want to point out to my colleagues that this bill represents a truly bipartisan measure that has some teeth in it to strike out against the drug traffickers. Title VI of H.R. 5458 represents a get-tough approach that embodies many of the provisions I proposed in legislation I introduced this Congress. It will not only impose greater penalties on major drug traffickers, but will also give our law enforcement officers in the field a much needed psychological edge in their uphill struggle against the drug traffickers. It also provides additional funds for our law enforcement officers in the field—at the local, State, and Federal levels. Clearly, this is where our resources need to go if we are to effectively combat the drug traffickers and drug smugglers at every level of enforcement.

As a former drug counselor and a former sheriff, I have a unique understanding of the serious nature of the drug problem we face in this country. I have been exposed to the problem from both a treatment and enforcement perspective. As a drug counselor I recognize the urgent need to expand local outreach and treatment centers. Most importantly, I have long advocated substance abuse education as a mandatory part of the curriculum in our schools. I have also advocated adult substance abuse education. We must begin to make a concerted effort to fully educate all sectors of our society—young and old—about the dangers of substance abuse. Last year I introduced legislation, H.R. 3769, to set Federal guidelines for a mandatory substance abuse education course to be taught to fourth through twelfth graders, as well as parents. I am pleased to see that title VIII of the bill before us today embodies many of the principles I set forth in H.R. 3769.

This omnibus bill represents a holistic approach to what is perhaps America's number one problem and threat. The drug problem in this country did not happen overnight. It's been around for a long time. As the director of the Mahoning County Drug Program in Ohio from 1971 to 1981, I can tell you that the drug problem in this country has been ruining lifes and devastating families for two decades. The tragic deaths of basketball star Lenny Bias and football player Don Rogers has precipitated a media blitz on the problem of drugs in America. But thousands of youngsters—ordinary kids—have died in the past 20 years at the hands of drugs. The problem has been expanding and escalating in recent years, and has pervaded into every avenue of American life. No one is immune.

The drug problem threatens every sector of our society. Cocaine is no longer a drug of the affluent. A new form of freebase cocaine called crack is now becoming a major problem in many cities. Crack can be obtained for as little as $10 which makes it accessible to anyone. Crack is reported by many medical experts to be the most addictive narcotic drug known to man. The widespread use of crack in New York City is said by many law enforcement officials in that city to have caused a rise in violent crimes last year. Most disturbingly, crack is being used by a growing number of school children. I am relieved that provisions I coauthored in H.R. 5394 to create new stiff penalties for dealing crack as well as stiffer penalties for those who deal drugs to schoolchildren and teens have been included in title VI of H.R. 5484.

Having seen the devastating effects of drug abuse on individuals and their families there is no doubt in my mind that more resources need to be allocated for treatment and outreach programs, in addition to the type of comprehensive educational efforts I discussed earlier. As a drug counselor I have seen, firsthand, the tragic consequences of the drug traffickers activities. Those vile individuals who continue to poison our society must be stopped. As a former sheriff, I was also exposed to the violent nature of the drug trade and the increasing brazeness of the drug traffickers. In many instances, the drug traffickers are better armed than our law enforcement officers in the field. Law enforcement is fighting an uphill battle. We here in Congress have an obligation to give them the tools they need to win the war against the drug traffickers. This bill is an important first step in giving law enforcement the type of help they need. Most importantly, it will begin to shift the psychological edge back to law enforcement. The key is to make the risks of trafficking drugs far outweigh the benefits.

I would like commend the House leadership on both sides of the aisle for working together to bring this package to the floor so expeditiously. I would also like to commend the stalwart job done by my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. HUGHES, who chairs the Judiciary Subcommittee on crime. Chairman HUGHES has been a great help to me in my efforts before his subcommittee to stiffen penalties for drug traffickers. He has been a cooperative chairman and I thank him for allowing me to work with him and the other members of the subcommittee in crafting part of this bill—even though I do not sit on the Judiciary Committee. Title VI of this bill bears the indelible stamp of Chairman HUGHES and I again commend the gentleman from New Jersey for his commitment and dedication in this area.

This is an historic moment as it marks the day when the House took a major step toward combatting the terrible drug problem facing America on all fronts. This bill represents an ambitious undertaking. But if action such as this is not taken now, I fear that our Nation will be overwhelmed by the drug problem. This is indeed a national security issue and this bill treats it as such. The resources must be found to combat the drug problem. Many have talked about winning the war on drugs. This bill is where the talking stops and the action begins. It's time to put up or shut up and I'm glad to that the House is taking positive action that will have an impact. I urge all Members to vote for H.R. 5484.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act, and want to compliment the leadership on both sides of the aisle for bringing this much-needed piece of legislation to the House floor. As a cosponsor of the bill, and of previously introduced bills which were incorporated into this legislation, I feel that this comprehensive effort is long overdue.

The comprehensive approach outlined in the bill is an attempt to put in place a national response to the drug problems that this country is experiencing. With drug use at record levels, it is imperative that we respond promptly to curb the flow of drugs into this country.

It has been estimated that Americans spend about $120 billion each year on illicit drugs. Drug abuse costs the economy between $100 and $250 billion each year in losses due to health care costs, drug-related crimes and violence, and lost productivity. And unfortunately, drug abuse is now on the rise, reversing a recent downward trend. Drug-related deaths are at an all-time high, claiming over 3,000 lives a year. The most dramatic increase has been in the use of cocaine, shown by a 48-percent increase in drug treatment admissions between 1984 and 1985.

Nowhere is the drug problem more serious than among our young people. The use of illicit drugs among our youth is on the rise, especially cocaine use. Almost 40 percent of our high school graduates will have tried cocaine by the time they are 27 years old. There is also a low level of understanding of the dangers of drug use. In a recent national survey, 34 percent of high school seniors saw no danger in trying cocaine.

The problem has overwhelmed law enforcement officials. Federal support for drug abuse services has been cut more than 40 percent since 1980. And in spite of a "War on Drugs" declared in 1981, our drug interception programs only catch 10 percent of the drugs entering this country.

The shocking deaths of athletes Len Bias and Don Rogers due to cocaine overdoses have publicized the lethal effects of cocaine abuse while also galvanizing community, local, State, and Federal leaders. First Lady Nancy Reagan has long led a tireless campaign to educate you young people on the dangers of drug abuse. The "Just Say No" promotion has given our youth across the Nation the courage and pride to, as the slogan states, "Just say no to drugs, and yes to a whole lot more."

But the Federal Government must also say yes to a whole lot more. Yes to stiffer penalties for drug-related crimes; yes to increased drug enforcement and confiscation assistance; yes to stricter prohibitions on money laundering; yes to international cooperation; yes to drug education, treatment, and prevention; yes to a whole lot more Federal cooperation and commitment to eradicating this national crisis.

One of the strengths of this legislation is that it confronts the complex issue of drug abuse on a variety of levels—from drug manufacturing and distribution to drug-related crime. Since this is not solely a U.S. problem, the bill considers trade sanctions against foreign countries which are sources of illicit drugs. If we are to use a stick against those countries which are raising drug-producing crops, then we should be prepared to offer a carrot for those countries which cooperate.

For example, I will be looking forward to the study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, authorized in this bill, on alternative crops to replace drug crops in other countries. This approach may offer an out for those countries which are deriving tremendous income from the drug trade. Combined with aid and trade sanctions, the growing of alternative crops may allow these countries to break their economic addiction to drugs.

In Bolivia, the cocaine trade provides a livelihood for over 400,000 peasants who have little other means of support. Cocoa acreage is increasing and farmers are getting a cash return per acre which is not possible with many other crops. But with a little effort, we can recommend crop alternatives to Bolivia which may substitute for the cocoa income.

We have tried this approach in the past, with mixed results. There was a similar program in Turkey in the 1970's to divert acreage from opium poppy production and there were good results. Our efforts to accomplish the same goal in Southeast Asia, however, were not successful. We need to look closely at those experiences in order to perfect our current work.

This Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act will not be cheap. But neither is the prevalence of drugs in our society. The bill's costs are both modest and highly justified, given the threat that drugs pose to our society. It is estimated that the costs of prevention, treatment, law enforcement, crime and lost productivity total over $100 billion each year, at a minimum. Medical experts have estimated that it would cost between $8 and $10 billion annually to treat just heroin and cocaine addicts. The vast majority of the expenditures included in this bill are for prison construction, necessitated by longer and mandatory jail sentences established under the bill. The total authorized by this bill, $1.5 billion, is less than the cost of one Trident submarine. This is a cost the Nation not only can afford, but must afford.

The drug problem in this country is truly a national problem which demands national action. Although State, local, and private agencies must, among others, share the burden of addressing drug abuse, it is beyond the physical or financial capability of these sectors to effectively address the problem. It would be pennywise and pound foolish to cut Federal spending to a level which reduces effectiveness. This measure represents the minimum that the Federal Government should be doing to rid this society of the scourge of drugs.

In the end, however, the final battle against drugs will not be fought at our borders, in our schools, or on the streets. The final battle will be conducted in the living rooms of our homes. Not ony must we wipe out the supply of drugs, but we must also eradicate the demand. We must reweave the moral and spiritual fiber of our Nation, reinstilling ethical values, commitment and hope among our young.

The deterioration of fundamental American values has led many of our citizens astray. Examples abound in every segment of our society: The Wall Street investment banker who appears to have it all, including an expensive cocaine habit; the college student who gets high at every party; and the poor innercity youth, bereft of hope, and strung out on PCP. These examples only begin to penetrate the extensiveness of the problem, yet each represents a loss—a loss of belonging to family, to community, to our society.

This loss of direction cannot be cured solely by an outpouring of money for local, State, and Federal programs. Instead, it must begin at home with an understanding that as spiritual beings and members of the human family we each have a responsibility to each other. The vast array of personal and societal problems can be immense, but they need not overwhelm us. We can reeducate our youth, as well as ourselves, in the fundamental American values of justice, peace, and progress. To give up and resort to drugs before the battle has commenced is to condemn our society to deterioration and corruption.

This omnibus drug bill represents the Federal participation in the renewal of the war on drugs. Majority Leader JIM WRIGHT and Minority Leader BOB MICHEL are to be commended for forging the most sweeping drug control measure ever considered by Congress. This bill takes a no-nonsense approach to terminating the pain and suffering caused by drug abuse in our communities. It is designed to strengthen the enforcement of drug laws, stem the flow of illegal drugs into the country, increase penalties for illegal drug activities, expand Federal prison facilities, and assist drug education and treatment to prevent drug abuse.

Passage of such a measure is much needed and long overdue. I encourage my colleagues to set aside any political differences, for this is by no means a partisan issue, and support the work of our House leadership by voting in favor of this bill.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act. There is probably no problem facing this Nation that has as many different facets and requires to many different approaches to its solution. This is shown by the fact that 12 major committees of the House contributed to their landmark legislation.

This legislation includes important measures to increase efforts to stop drug trafficking, to discourage the use of drugs through national, State and local educational programs, and to provide effective treatment for those addicted to drugs. The increase in Coast Guard personnel and equipment, the creation of State and local grant programs for drug abuse education and prevention, and the increase in funds for addict treatment programs are all measures that will contribute to the elimination of our Nation's drug problem.

The Foreign Affairs Committee, on which I serve, has been working on the problems of international narcotics control intensively for several years. Thus, title I of this bill, the International Narcotics Control Act of 1986, largely builds upon past legislative initiatives taken by the Foreign Affairs Committee. Title I provides increased funding for international narcotics control, as requested by the President, and refines the tools available to the administration for narcotics control.

The primary thrust of title I of this bill is to increase the pressure on drug-producing countries to cut off at the source the poisons which continue to flood into this country. In the past, a great many drug-producing countries have rationalized their inaction, claiming that without demand in the United States supply would not exist. They turned a blind eye to the problem, thinking that drug trafficking was something that only hurt distant Americans.

Recently, however, the distinctions betweeen drug-producing and drug-consuming countries has blurred. Many of these same countries are finding their own nations infected with a drug epidemic supported by an entrenched and powerful drug underworld. In countries such as Colombia, the drug kingpins maintain their own private armies and are conducting war against the central government. This situation provides the United States with an opportunity to work forcefully with foreign governments against this international scourge.

No longer should we ignore the cavalier attitude of other nations such as Mexico, which has become the major source of drugs entering the United States. In the past 18 months, one DEA agent has been murdered and another nearly tortured to death by Mexican police. The bill deplores Mexico's poor record of cooperation, and withholds $1 million in United States aid until Mexico has effectively prosecuted those responsible for the murder of DEA agent Camarena and the torture of DEA agent Cortez. Frankly, I think that the provisions dealing with Mexico could be stronger. The Subcommittee on International Operations, where I serve as ranking Republican, will began work early next year on the State Department authorization bill. At that time I will look very closely at the actions Mexico had taken to protect United States personnel and to bring drug trafficking under control, and consider what further actions by Congress may be necessary.

Certainly, we must combat the problem of drug use in our country in every possible manner. This legislation moves in many ways against this problem and I believe it is a major step toward eradicating the "hold" of drugs on this Nation. I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this landmark effort.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, we are here today to consider legislation to address the drug epidemic which is raging across our Nation. It is an epidemic which reaches everywhere, to everyone. None of us can sit here today complacently, saying this is not my problem—it is. No one, anywhere in America, is immune.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce shares jurisdiction with other committees in a number of important areas in this bill. However, we have all been able to work together effectively on this legislation, under the guidance and leadership of the Speaker and the majority leader.

This is a first step in our war on drugs and I can assure you that it will not be our last. We will return again and again to this issue as we begin to fight the war on drugs.

Yes, there is a price tag attached to this package, but it is minimal compared with the far heavier price tag attached to not acting at all, or acting ineffectively.

I look forward to working with you today in a spirit of cooperation that will ultimately benefit all of America.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. Drug abuse has become one of the most serious problems facing our Nation today. No segment of society can escape the toll that drug abuse imposes. Our schools and workplaces are daily faced with this problem and with trying to find a solution.

The American people are beginning to stand up and work together to defeat the scourge of drug abuse. I am pleased that we have been able to work in a bipartisan effort to bring this bill to the House floor for passage. Only by working together throughout the country can we hope to solve the drug problem.

It is important to reduce the demand for drugs and our efforts must begin by educating our youth at an early age about the dangers associated with drugs. I am particularly pleased that this legislation includes provisions for drug-abuse education, treatment and prevention programs at the national, State, and local levels. Programs to combat drug abuse should begin as soon as a child enters school, so he or she will realize the effects and risks involved with drugs.

We must also let drug traffickers know that their illegal actions will be severely punished and the bill's provisions to stiffen penalties for drug offenders, including establishing minimum mandatory 5- and 10-year prison terms for major drug trafficking, are critical.

Combating drugs at the source is also an important part of the war on drugs and the legislation includes provisions to enhance international narcotics-control and increase drug-interdiction efforts. An essential element in drug-interdiction efforts is the bill's provisions on money laundering, which attack the drug kingpins who are profiting from the flow of drugs into our country.

Our efforts to win the war on drugs must not end with this legislation. We must continue an all-out assault and it is good to see the bill's provisions for a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control to develop recommendations for further action to control the illicit production, trafficking, and distribution of controlled substances internationally and domestically and to prevent and treat drug abuse.

I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this comprehensive package to combat our Nation's drug problem.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, today, the House takes a giant step in the war against illegal narcotics as we begin debate on the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. I commend all the committees and the bipartisan leadership of the House which has brought this to fruition.

One of the most appealing aspects of the Omnibus Drug Act is the attention it devotes to the development and promotion of State and local drug abuse prevention and treatment programs. Prevention can be a key weapon in cutting off the drug traffickers' market at its very source. I am particularly proud of one such drug prevention program that was instituted in my district in 1982 and continues to grow and prosper today. I am proud of it because it involves young people taking responsibility for counseling their fellow students. we can pass many laws in Washington, but unless the young people of America join together for mutual support, our attempts to meet this grave threat will be largely unsuccessful.

The Youth to Youth Program is part of the Toledo/Lucas County Chemical Abuse Reduced through Education and Services Program, or Toledo/Lucas Co. CARES. It provides a positive, peer organization for young people who have made a commitment to pursue a drug-free lifestyle and want to encourage their fellow students to join them.

Begun in 1982 by the Toledo Junior League and a local juvenile court judge, CARES was a response to local concern over statistics which showed that 70 percent of juvenile delinquency could be linked to drug and alcohol use. The Youth to Youth Program was initiated about a year later. And today, thanks to the continued support of the Junior League and that of the Old Newsboys Association and all local boards of education, Youth to Youth operates in each school district in Lucas County, sponsors an annual summer conference for high school students, and counts between 6,000 and 7,000 people among its membership. Efforts are now underway to expand the program into local junior high schools and a conference for these students will soon occur.

A young participant in the Youth to Youth Program recently told one of its organizers, "Not too long ago, it was hard for high school students to turn down offers of drugs or alcohol from other kids. Now, saying 'No thanks, I'm in Youth to Youth' is an accepted reason for refusing those things." Members of Youth to Youth organize drug and alcohol-free tailgate parties at athletic events and dances, perform skits at elementary schools to show young children there is more to life than pills and liquor, take part in school prom and graduation safety programs and provide a support group for students and their families. The summer retreats involve educational seminars and rap sessions on the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse; leadership training for those involved in school Youth to Youth Programs; and enable the students to develop action plans to promote a substance-abuse free environment for their own schools.

But, the Youth to Youth Program is not just for kids. One of its founders, Juvenile Court Judge Andy Devine, insists that a fundamental factor in its success is the involvement of not only young people but their parents. Parents are encouraged to take part in orientation programs, retreats, activities, and conferences. Youth to Youth and CARES aim to foster a sense of community among children, their parents and the school system and prevent the type of isolation that can lead to dependence on drugs and alcohol. This aspect of Youth to Youth earned it the Outstanding Student Assistance Program of 1986 from the National Association of Student Assistance Programs.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that there are other successful programs like Youth to Youth and CARES throughout the country. I hope that the Omnibus Drug Act will enable more people—especially young people who are our future—to share in their benefits.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill, and I would strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to give it their support as well.

Drug abuse and trafficking in illegal drugs is one of the most serious problems facing our country. Public tolerance of drug use has given way to increasing concern about deaths from drug overdoses, the sale of drugs to schoolchildren, drug use on the job, the involvement of organized crime in illegal drug trafficking, and the connection between drug addiction and crimes such as theft, burglary, and murder.

There is a clear role for the Federal Government in the interdiction of drugs being imported into this country and the suppression of interstate drug trafficking. This bill addresses these problems by strengthening Federal law enforcement's authority and ability to intercept drug shipments. Penalties would be increased in order to deter pushers, and new Federal offenses in the areas of money laundering and designer drugs will facilitate prosecutions. Assistance would also be provided to State and local law enforcement authorities which must deal with narcotics violations as street crimes. Funding would be provided for increased prison capacity and for prosecution to ensure that drug pushers actually are punished upon conviction.

These provisions are necessary in order to interfere with access to illegal drugs and cut back on the available supply. Ultimately, however, drug trafficking will continue as long as pushers have a ready market and can realize huge profits. We therefore must do everything possible to discourage illegal drug use and help current users to recover from their habit. This bill includes funds for antidrug education and for drug treatment programs that will help to reduce the demand for drugs.

We can no longer afford to be complacent or tolerant of widespread drug use in our society. Drug abuse is economically costly in terms of the need for increased health care, the law enforcement resources devoted to the suppression of the drug trade, and lost job productivity among drug users. A more intangible cost is the drug dependence fostered among our young people, the generation of the future, which saps their initiative and creativity. I don't think it is too farfetched to say that the survival of our society depends on our making it very clear both to our children and to the international drug trade that drug abuse is dangerous and unacceptable. While this bill does not contain all of the provisions I would favor, it is an effective opening shot in the war on illegal drugs. I therefore urge my colleagues to give it their support.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, for years we heard the faint but constant drumbeat from some of our colleagues, from parts of our home districts, and in the news about the curse of drug abuse and drug trafficking. Suddenly, a crisis is discovered.

The proliferation of drug use has been occurring right under our noses. The task at hand is dealing strongly and effectively with both the supply of drugs created outside our borders and the consumer demand for drugs in our country. That is what H.R. 5484, the Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986 does.

Traditionally, our efforts to stem the supply of drugs into the United States have been focused on our borders. But this strategy has not been very effective. We need to expand our fight and attack the problem at its source by taking aim at those responsible for creating the supply of drugs that find their way into our country.

I worked hard with my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means to develop measures that will help governments, like Bolivia, with their drug eradication programs and their war against the drug processing factories. Frankly, the soldiers and police of these countries are poorly paid and poorly equipped. They are no match for the merchants of death in the jungle. H.R. 5484 will provide needed funds to help countries like Bolivia and Colombia in their drug wars. However, we must also use our diplomatic channels to support the efforts of these countries to eliminate the means by which the supply is created.

H.R. 5484 provides powerful mechanisms to deal with those countries that are unwilling to help us eliminate the supply of drugs. It requires drug-producing countries to establish eradication programs as a condition of our support for multilateral development bank aid and will impose tough sanctions on those countries that refuse to cooperate with our antidrug efforts.

We must also beef up our traditional efforts to interdict drugs at the borders. H.R. 5484 beefs up the Customs Service and Coast Guard authorizations to provide the equipment and manpower that is required to close our borders to drugs.

The other half of the equation is to break the demand for drugs in this country. We have got to realize and deal with the fact that millions of people in this country have created an overwhelming consumer demand for drugs. The drug business is more profitable than many legitimate businesses. This is absurd. As long as there is a market, we will continue to have a drug problem.

Local, State, and private organizations, exemplified by the Linkage and Apple Programs in my district, have done an outstanding job in providing essential services to deal with the demand problem. But the magnitude of the demand problem is overwhelming. H.R. 5484 will help, but, frankly we need to commit even more resources to treatment and prevention programs.

H.R. 5484 is only the beginning. Vigilant and effective followup to this legislation is necessary if this country is to break itself from its habit.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484. It seems that drug abuse has become the hot issue of 1986. After all these years, it seems that all the factors involved have finally come to a head, with the result being a President who has made drugs a top item on his agenda, and a bipartisan omnibus drug bill on a fast track through Congress. The cause is certainly being helped by the fact that this is an election year, and drugs are a safe, though inspiring, issue to pursue.

Although I don't like the political opportunism surrounding this issue, I do believe in this case that the end more than justifies the means. This is our first organized and comprehensive attack against illegal drugs, and I believe we could see some dramatic results. We are finally admitting that drug abuse is a serious national concern, and we are finally demonstrating our willingness to put our money where our mouths are and commit adequate resources to combat the problem.

I'm sure all my colleagues who have worked behind the scenes for so many years to combat drug abuse are as pleased as I am. Speaking as chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Treasury/Postal Service/General Government, I am glad that the Customs Service should no longer have to go begging for enough resources and personnel to do their job properly. Customs agents have told me that it seems that every day drug smugglers come up with more inventive ways to get their products into this country, and Customs has had to combat this veritable army while inadequately funded and staffed. I believe they do an admirable job under the circumstances, and I know it will be a boost to them not to have to struggle next year to justify an adequate funding level. I'm sure that those agents were as shocked as I was last month when the President threatened to veto the Treasury appropriations bill because he believed the level we had approved for Customs—a barely adequate $100 million and the addition of 850 new positions—was too high. I'm very glad he has seen the light, and has realized that an effective fight against drug abuse must be conducted on many fronts, and with the proper resources, to be successful.

It is also encouraging to note that State and local authorities are prepared to join in this all-out war against drug abuse. Our communities have been the front line in this battle for years, and rightfully believe it is about time the Federal Government gave them some substantive help in combating what is, after all, a national problem. Community organizations in my district are so concerned about the drug problems they are facing that they have asked me to hold a hearing in Los Angeles to give them the opportunity to voice their own particular concerns. In cooperation with my esteemed colleague and good friend, Mr. RANGEL, chairman of the Select Narcotics Committee, I am planning to hold a hearing there this fall. I know these organizations will be very pleased if we can go back and tell them that in the spirit of cooperation, all parties concerned—the administration and Congress, Democrats and Republicans, local and Federal officials, law enforcement personnel, and civil libertarians—we have all gotten together and come up with a substantive, comprehensive approach to combating drug abuse.

This same spirit of cooperation can, if we allow it, carry us through to our first real successes in a national war against a vicious enemy. I urge passage of H.R. 5484.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in wholehearted support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986, and particularly its provisions to address the serious and widespread problem of money laundering. Money laundering is the process by which criminals—and, most notably, drug dealers—disguise the origin of money obtained illegally from activities such as drug dealing, prostitution, investment fraud, gambling, or racketeering. Through various money-laundering techniques, criminals make their ill-gotten gains appear to come from legitimate sources.

One of the most common ways criminals launder money is simply to deposit the cash in a bank account where the money can be used for checks, money orders, or wire transfers to other financial institutions—often to foreign banks that do not share financial information with the United States. In some cases, organized crime figures have even tried to buy their own banks. In typical international money-laundering schemes, drug dealers, loan sharks, and gamblers ship large quantities of small denomination bills—$5, $10, and $20 bills—derived from their unlawful pursuits to foreign banks and withdraw the money later in a "clean" form, such as through money orders or cashier's checks. The foreign banks than ship the original currency to a U.S. bank, which replaces it with larger bills. Many foreign bank secrecy laws make it extremely difficult to trace the overseas money-laundering efforts of criminals.

The real problem with money laundering is that it is the single most important way for big-time criminals to gain access to their illegal income. By laundering the proceeds of their ill-gotten gains, organized and petty criminals alike get access to the cash they need to buy the fancy cars, furs, and jewels they desire. And, most insidiously, they can use the laundered cash to purchase additional drugs to sell to innocent schoolchildren and desperate drug addicts.

According to the President's Commission on Organized Crime, tens of billions of dollars in illegal funds are laundered through U.S. banks and other companies each year. Significantly, most of that money comes from drug dealing, a crime that claims untold numbers of victims each year, both through drug addiction itself and through the crimes that drug addicts commit on innocent citizens to feed their expensive habits.

The principal tools that Federal law enforcement authorities use to detect money laundering and inhibit the ability of criminals to get at their illegal gains are the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act and its companion measure, the Bank Secrecy Act. These acts require financial institutions to keep certain records and file reports with the Treasury Department on domestic and foreign currency transactions. In addition, the acts mandate that individuals arriving in and leaving the United States file reports with the U.S. Customs Service on currency they are transporting into and out of the country. If a financial institution or an individual violates any of these reporting requirements, civil and criminal penalties can be imposed on the violator.

The existing currency reporting laws have done a great deal to combat the problem of money laundering. Approximately 37 financial institutions have been convicted and fined for money-laundering violations since 1977. And, money laundering has received growing publicity over the past year as an increasing number of banks have been accused of violating existing laws. Currently, about 65 banks or bank holding companies are under investigation by the U.S. Government for possible civil penalties due to money-laundering violations. While these statistics show some success in fighting money laundering, it is clear that much more needs to be done to stop money laundering and its evil companion, drug dealing.

As a member of the House Banking Committee, I heard lengthy testimony this year from U.S. drug enforcement officials, Federal bank regulators, and from "smurfs"—individuals used by criminals to launder large sums of money by deliberately evading the currency transaction reporting requirements. Typically, smurfs will avoid the reporting requirements by breaking the illegal money into smaller amounts and depositing it in numerous bank branches, where the money is likely to remain unreported and, therefore, undetected. These Banking Committee witnesses pointed out a number of areas where the currency reporting laws could be improved to address gaps in the money-laundering laws.

The legislation we are considering today contains many of the changes recommended by the committee witnesses, and I am proud to have been an original cosponsor of the House Banking Committee's money-laundering bill. One of the most important changes made by the bill is that it creates a new crime of money laundering. Whereas, under existing law, the crime of money laundering is limited to the failure to file required currency transaction reports, H.R. 5484 would make it a crime to knowingly engage in a financial transaction with criminally derived profits or property, to engage in a commercial transaction to conceal criminally derived profits, or to transport money or monetary instruments into or out of the country in order to conceal criminally derived funds. Such crimes would be subject to up to a $1 million fine and 20 years in jail for individuals, and up to $5 million for institutions.

H.R. 5484 also would impose civil and criminal penalties on individuals who cause a financial institution to fail to file a required currency transaction report or to file inaccurate or incomplete reports. Similarly, the bill authorizes the imposition of civil penalties on individuals who structure transactions to evade reporting requirements. These important changes in existing law will enable law enforcement officials to get at the real criminals in money laundering—those who are making illegal money through drugs and other heinous crimes and using money laundering as a tool to gain access to that money.

H.R. 5484 also makes a number of other crucial changes to existing law to tighten up the currency transaction reporting requirements. It authorizes the Treasury Department to require financial institutions to submit currency reports on any transaction of more than $3,000; existing law requires such reports on transactions of more than $10,000. Thus, H.R. 5484 would require many more reports to be filed and would, consequently, make it much more difficult for money launderers to avoid suspicion by avoiding the reporting requirements.

The bill also tightens up the procedures for individuals and businesses to obtain exemptions from the currency reporting requirements. Under existing law, exemptions to the requirements typically are granted for businesses that routinely handle large amounts of cash; these are mainly retail businesses that deal with consumers. In the crackdown on money laundering and currency reporting requirements over the past 2 years, it has come to light that numerous businesses have been given unlawful exemptions from the currency reporting requirements. To address this serious problem, H.R. 5484 would require that financial institutions certify to the Federal Government that customers seeking exemptions from the reporting requirements are, in fact, eligible for such exemptions. In addition to these significant changes, the bill contains a number of further improvements to existing law.

Mr. Chairman, my involvement with the issue of money laundering goes back many, many years. Beginning in 1979, I introduced a series of bills which authorized payment of rewards to those who informed on money launderers, addressed the uncertainty of when the offense of failing to file a currency report was actually completed, and granted U.S. Customs agents authority to conduct broader searches of outgoing and incoming travelers if they had a reasonable cause to suspect a violation of the currency reporting laws. This last bill was enacted into law in 1984 and has proven to be a valuable tool to the U.S. Customs Service in its efforts to stop the flow of illegal money outside the United States to foreign banks. In the 98th Congress, I sponsored similar legislation, as well as measures to address the currency report filing threshold and to substantially increase the penalties for money laundering. This year, I worked with the House Banking Committee to craft the money-laundering provisions contained in the omnibus drug bill.

It is gratifying indeed to see one's efforts come to fruition in the form of positive, well-drafted legislation. This important bill, which addresses the problem of drug enforcement generally, and money laundering specifically, goes a long way toward providing our law enforcement officials with the tools they need to combat the crime of money laundering and to teach drug smugglers and other criminals the lesson that, "Crime does not pay."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LEWIS of California was allowed to speak out of order.)

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] could help us with questions that are being asked on this side regarding what we anticipate the schedule will be this Friday.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, the majority leader has authorized me to inform the House, if the question was raised, that we will be in session and votes are expected this Friday.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Can the gentleman give us some idea what that Friday schedule would include in terms of floor debate?

Mr. RANGEL. I have not been so informed, but I will check, and at the appropriate time ask for unanimous consent to respond to the gentleman's request.

I have been advised by the staff of the majority leader that the legislative business will be HUD appropriations on the floor Friday.

Mr. LEWIS of California. HUD appropriations will be on the floor Friday. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, title I of the omnibus bill represents a careful, bipartisan agreement among the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on what additional steps we can take to battle the tide of illicit narcotics invading our shores. The committee reported a bill (H.R. 5352) on August 6 with 40 original cosponsors, from the committee. The bill was developed under the guidance of our able chairman of the international narcotics task force, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. LARRY SMITH, together with his cochairman, the gentleman from New York, Mr. BEN GILMAN, and with the active participation of the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DAN MICA, and the gentlewoman from Maine, Ms. OLYMPIA SNOWE, chairman and ranking member, respectively, of the Subcommittee on International Operations.

The foreign affairs title of the omnibus bill authorizes an additional $48 million above current levels for our antinarcotics efforts overseas. All but $5 million of these funds, however, are authorized subject to an existing or expected Presidential budget request; the additional $5 million will go toward enhancing our drug education efforts overseas through the United States Information Agency and the Agency for International Development.

The foreign affairs title also urges that our overseas narcotics control efforts, where possible, should emphasize regional solutions to the drug problem, especially in Latin America. By providing the wherewithal and training for the major drug-producing countries to address the problem themselves, we will lessen the necessity of committing United States personnel—especially the military, as in the current Bolivian operation. These efforts are in the producing countries' interest every bit as much as in our own, and we owe it to them to help them where we can.

There are several management improvements we make in order to better administer our program, such as retaining title to all narcotics control aircraft we provide overseas, and we urge the executive branch to work more diligently to coordinate its efforts so as to use the visa application process to identify and track drug traffickers. We also instruct the Secretary of State to work hard to upgrade our existing extradition treaties with drug-producing countries to cover narcotics-related offenses, and urge the adoption of common boarding practices for vessels suspected of drug-trafficking on the high seas.

All these provisions were developed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs building on its lengthy past involvement with U.S. international narcotics control efforts. As we are all aware, the problem is insidious, complex, and tough to combat. No one solution can be effective; crop substitution efforts cannot succeed without an equivalent commitment to enforcement, since farmers simply will not grow soybeans or corn in favor of lucrative, though illicit, narcotic drugs. What we are talking about is a very, very difficult effort to address a problem which touches all aspects of modern society, both in the United States and in the drug-producing countries. If we are to succeed, we must be diligent, creative, and dedicated to addressing all sides of the problem. This bill contains all of these elements and deserves our strong support.

I would only add that I support the amendments of the distinguished gentleman from Florida, my good friend, Mr. LARRY SMITH, and ask that you support their adoption on the floor. The committee is happy to accept the amendments as filed.

Finally, we have included in title I new language urging the Secretary of State, with the assistance of the Secretary of Agriculture, to enter into consultations with the Mexican Government with the goal of developing crop substitution programs there to encourage Mexican farmers not to grow illegal narcotics. This provision was suggested by my good friend the gentleman from Texas Chairman DE LA GARZA of the Agriculture Committee, and we were happy to include it in the Foreign Affairs title.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] has consumed 5 minutes, and he has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. It is a pleasure to stand here and be involved in something as important as this with Members like the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], who have been working on this for so many years.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Task Force on International Narcotics Control, I rise in support of title I of H.R. 5484.

In 1985, the committee made several major improvements in our international narcotics control laws, including the linking of foreign aid to Bolivia and Peru—the two major coca leaf growers—to eradication efforts and it has worked. We cut off some of their aid this year, and they have been, like Colombia, more cooperative than ever before.

We increase the funds for international narcotics control by nearly $43 million. The existing authorization level is inadequate if we are to make a concerted effort to control drugs at their source.

We earmark $10 million for narcotics control aircraft, one-half of which is to be used in Latin America regional activities. We earmark $2 million for pilot and maintenance training. Regional activities, especially among the Andean nations, show great promise if they are properly supported. They also avoid the political problem of American troops conducting drug eradication programs overseas.

We earmark $1 million for the development of a safe and effective herbicide for aerial eradication of coca leaves. Manual eradication of coca just will not work. We must look to aerial eradication if we are to put an end to coca production.

We provide $2 million for USIA and $3 million for AID in new authorization for drug education programs overseas. This represents a doubling of current efforts. Producing countries now are feeling the devastating impact of internal drug abuse and need assistance to develop effective prevention and treatment programs.

We require that the United States retain title to and maintain detailed flight records for all future aircraft provided for narcotics control overseas. The task force learned that the 88-plane air fleet that we have given to Mexico spends most of its time on the ground. By retaining title over these planes, we will be able to ensure that they are used for their intended purpose.

We require a GAO study of the effectiveness of international narcotics control programs. It has been 12 years since the last major study of these programs, and such a review is overdue.

We ask the Secretary of State to upgrade extradition treaties and common procedures for boarding vessels suspected of engaging in drug trafficking.

We further modify the Mansfield amendment to permit DEA agents to be present at drug arrests, provided that the Secretary of State determines that it is in our interest.

We include directions for improved information sharing on visas and improved capability for combatting narcoterrorism, earmarking $2 million to help protect judges and others in Latin America who may be targets of narcoterrorist attacks.

We amend the posse comitatus law requiring concurrence of the Secretary of State in authorizing the use of U.S. military in narcotics enforcement activities overseas.

We withhold $1 million from funds for Mexico pending full investigation and prosecution of DEA agent Enrique Camarena Salazar's murderers. We are no closer to the prosecution of Camarena's murderers than we were 18 months ago. We must impress upon Mexico the importance of bringing these murderers to justice. Later in the debate, I will be offering an amendment to further condition this aid on action against the kidnapers of DEA agent Victor Cortez.

We establish a United States-Mexico commission on drugs.

Mr. Chairman, I assure you that each of these provisions is justified. Every dollar that can be spent effectively for drug eradication overseas saves us many times as much money in interdiction, prosecution, rehabilitation, and prevention expenses. Cutting the roots of the drug tree is more important than pruning a few branches.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, as you are well aware, this omnibus drug bill embraces the jurisdictions of numerous House committees, including the Foreign Affairs Committee. As the ranking minority member of that committee, I would like to offer some observations on title I of this bill which incorporates provisions of H.R. 5352 that was reported out of the Foreign Affairs Committee early last month.

H.R. 5352 is the end product of an overwhelming bipartisan effort as 40 of the 42 members of the Foreign Affairs Committee cosponsored this measure. My colleague, Chairman FASCELL, is to be commended for his leadership in expediting the consideration and swift passage of this timely legislation. Special credit also is due BEN GILMAN and LARRY SMITH who, through their work on the Foreign Affairs Committee Task Force on Narcotics, provided many of the legislative recommendations embodied in H.R. 5352.

At the moment, the whole Nation's attention is focused on the drug problem which has destroyed so many lives, particularly of our youth. To a large degree, this can be attributed to the drug related deaths of two well-known athletes, Len Bias and Don Rogers. As sports loving people, we tend to identify with athletes more than with any other group in our society. As a result, the deaths of those stars because of cocaine overdoses have hit home with dramatic and vivid impact. In the aftermath of these tragedies, the President, the First Lady, the Attorney General, and Congress have all become involved in high profile campaigns against this rapidly spreading plague.

Corruption is one of the major reasons why this has proved to be such a difficult problem to lick. The drug traffickers have earned so much money through their illicit activities that they can buy government officials, policemen, and even our youth. In some areas of New York City, for example, drug pushers have been paying youngsters up to $1,000 a week to work as runners and surveillance teams.

Given this deplorable situation, no one can deny that this Nation faces a drug problem of massive proportions. All too often, however, our answer to a problem of this magnitude has been to throw money at it and hope for the best.

Indeed, in this instance, some relatively small amounts of money have been authorized, but I am pleased to report that of the amounts authorized by our committee bill, only $5 million was not requested by the administration. That $5 million, I might add, will go to the Agency for International Development [AID] and the U.S. Information Agency [USIA] to augment existing overseas drug education programs in nations that are developing serious drug problems of their own.

In recognition of the importance of gaining the cooperation of drug producing nations, our committee also approved provisions calling upon the Secretary of State to negotiate extradition treaties that will facilitate the prosecution of international drug kingpins. Furthermore, $1 million is withheld from Mexico pending the full investigation and prosecution of DEA agent Camarena's murderer in Mexico.

The Foreign Affairs Committee has been tackling the narcotics control issue for years and has come to the conclusion that turning the U.S. Treasury faucets wide open on international antinarcotics programs often yields marginal dividends.

Consequently, our committee bill reflects a strong emphasis on improving the management of current programs while allowing for modest increases in spending, including an extra $35 million if the President asks for it and certifies to Congress that he has a genuine need for it.

An additional $7.9 million is provided by raising the fiscal year 1987 authorization level for international narcotics control from $57,529,000 to $65,445,000 which happens to be the amount the President originally asked for last year when we passed the foreign aid authorization bill for fiscal year 1986 and 1987.

The fiscal bottom line, therefore, on this Foreign Affairs Committee package with respect to new money is as follows: $3 million for USIA drug education programs; $2 million for AID drug education programs; and $7.9 million for international narcotics control efforts.

Altogether, this rounds out to $13 million which could be added to the previously mentioned $35 million, if the President sees the need for such funding. Thus, the most we are potentially talking about here is approximately $48 million.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, title I of this omnibus bill represents a balanced and responsible approach to a difficult problem, and I unreservedly endorse its approval.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York, Mr. BEN GILMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] is recognized for 4 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I, too, want to commend our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] and our ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD], for their strong support and initiatives in bringing a foreign affairs measure of this bill to the floor at this time.

I also want to commend our distinguished chairman of our international drug task force, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], for his leadership in our committee.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Foreign Affairs provisions of the omnibus antinarcotics legislation, H.R. 5484.

Dating back at least to 1971, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has been active in the struggle to control narcotics trafficking and abuse. Given our jurisdictional responsibilities within the House, our Foreign Affairs Committee has been at the very center of the effort to attack the supply side of the nefarious narcotics equation. Since most of the illegal drugs consumed in this Nation originate abroad, the need to constrict the cultivation of narcotics abroad is a crucial part of any realistic drug control strategy. Moreover, narcotics must flow within foreign countries, and frequently over the high seas or international airspace, before they can enter this country. Accordingly, the committee has authorized numerous programs to assist foreign countries eradicate narcotics production and interdict the flow of narcotics across their borders. In addition, we have provided incentives to foreign countries to beef up their antinarcotics cooperation by conditioning certain forms of cooperation with the United States on reasonable performance in this most important arena.

The omnibus drive legislation now before the House contains the committee's recommendations for strengthening and improving the following programs:

The bill increases the authorization level for international narcotics control by about $8 million, to the administration's request level, and authorizes an additional $35 million subject to a new budget request; $10 million in Military Assistance Program funds are earmarked for narcotics control aircraft, and $2 million is earmarked for pilot or maintenance training so that our aircraft could be used more effectively. We also have increased funding levels for USIA and AID drug education programs overseas. Throwing money at this problem is obviously not the way to go. We could have reported higher authorization levels for these programs, but we were trying to be prudent and not overwhelm the bureaucracy with funds which it could not spend effic'ently.

Other important provisions of the legislation require reporting on foreign cooperation with U.S. extradition requests, modify the Mansfield amendment to allow the presence of American drug enforcement personnel at foreign drug busts, and require a General Accounting Office report on the overall effectiveness of our international drug control programs.

Mr. Chairman, this might be a good time to point to the success of several international narcotics control efforts. In the highland country of Thailand, a combination of eradition and crop substitution appears to be achieving good results. In Turkey, illicit opium production has been practically eliminated. Mexico has drastically reduced opium production, although there remain problems in the production of other substances and in trafficking. Bolivia was encouraged to address the need for reform of its narcotics laws by the threat of a cutoff of assistance.

I am proud of the bipartisan fashion in which this title of the bill was drafted and considered. Under the leadership of the chairman, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. FASCELL, and our ranking member, Mr. BROOMFIELD, the chairman of the International Narcotics Task Force, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. SMITH, and the chairman and ranking member of the International Operations Subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. MICA, and the gentlewoman from Maine, Mrs. SNOWE, and with able help from the staff, we worked out the details of this complex legislation in record time. We had a markup session in which provisions were reexamined and in some cases altered, again in a bipartisan fashion, and the resulting bill was cosponsored by 39 of the 42 members of the committee.

There will be only two noncontroversial amendments offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], relating to events that have taken place since the adoption of our committee bill, and I will support those amendments.

Mr. Chairman, we are fortunate to have neither a very complex nor a very expensive portion of this monumental bill. Nevertheless, the Foreign Affairs portions of the bill are important and needed. I urge my colleagues to adopt the bill by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, the first thing I would like to do is express my strong support of H.R. 5484 and congratulate the Members of the House leadership, particularly my friend and California colleague JERRY LEWIS, Chairman FASCELL, ranking member BILL BROOMFIELD, LARRY SMITH, BEN GILMAN, and CHARLES RANGEL, for their efforts in developing this badly need antidrug legislative package. The time has come for more coordinated comprehensive, action to stop drug abuse—especially among our children.

Included in this bill is legislation passed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs which I cosponsored along with 39 of my colleagues. The committee-passed bill reflects the difficulty of dealing with sovereign nations who do not always share our total commitment to stopping the flow of drugs around the world. We have sought in this legislation means to attack the problem which take into account that cutting off foreign aid and greatly increased funding for international narcotics activities will not by themselves solve the problem.

The committee passed legislation reflects the historical experience the United States has recognized in its attempts to deal with narcotics trafficking. Our effort in the committee was to emphasize improved management of existing programs, and provide for increased funding if the President requests and justifies the need for such steps. We provided for continued strong congressional oversight, including sanctions where appropriate, and particularly, we encouraged a regional response to the problem of narcotics production and trafficking in Latin America.

I also wish to call to the attention of my colleagues the kind of international cooperation envisioned by this legislation. You will recall the United States support operations for antinarcotics raids in Bolivia begun in July 1986. The Bolivian support operation was the first commitment of military personnel to a narcotics control mission on foreign soil since President Reagan signed a national security directive in April. This possibility was anticipated in last year's foreign aid bill and is further clarified in this legislation. It is the type of constructive, cooperative initiative we must encourage with our Latin allies to combat the narcotics problem. Bolivia deserves great credit for undertaking this initiative and for its courage in seeking U.S. military assistance to stop international drug trafficking.

A recent editorial in the Oxnard Press-Courier, a prominent newpaper in my district, emphasized the importance of the joint Bolivian-United States operation. It states that, along with an earlier effort in the Bahamas, "these joint operations represent a dramatic step in the Reagan administration's campaign to staunch the flood of drugs that menace the United States." I commend the editors of the Press-Courier for their thoughtful analysis, and I urge my colleagues to support the legislation before us today and send a clear message that the United States will do what it must to stop the scourge of narcotics trafficking.

Special commendation must go, of course, to President Reagan and to First Lady Nancy Reagan for their efforts in this war on narcotics.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the victorious gentlewomen from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] is recognized for 30 seconds.

There was no objection.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, I support this portion of the bill and its entire contents. When we seek to deal with curbing the trafficking in cocaine we cannot leave it to only local enforcement officers to do it one pusher at a time.

When we fought yellow fever, we did not go at it one mosquito at a time; we went right to the swamp. That is what the Foreign Affairs section of this legislation will do; it will go to the swamps where cocaine is either grown, refined, or manufactured, and that is why I support this section of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986.

Twenty years ago I helped establish one of the first narcotics anonymous programs in Baltimore. Back then drug abuse was confined to heroin in a young adult population. Today, drug abuse is found in every neighborhood. It effects every age group and touches far too many American families. We read almost weekly of the tragic cocaine deaths of young athletes and of the crack epidemic that is spreading throughout the country.

Drug use is pervasive in American society. We cannot deny this any longer. Five thousand Americans try cocaine for the first time every day. One million Americans are already addicted to cocaine. Eleven million are thought to be active users. At the same time, Federal support for drug abuse services has been cut by 40 percent in the last 6 years. It's time to reverse this trend.

Drug abuse is an insidious disease that's destroying our young people. Like all insidious diseases, you don't get rid of the symptoms until you get rid of the source. When we went after yellow fever we didn't just go after it one mosquito at a time. We went after the swamps that bred it.

I believe that we must fight the war against drugs as we would fight any other foreign invader who sought to bring death and destruction to our children and our families. We must wage war against drugs on every available front. That includes: eradication, enforcement and interdiction, and education and rehabilitation.

The Omnibus Drug bill, of which I am proud to be an original cosponsor, will enable us to do just that. The most powerful aspect of the bill will help wipe out drugs at their source. We must recognize that the ultimate battle against drugs will be won through crop eradication. We must fight the drug war before it reaches our borders and streets. We must go to the root of the problem, where drugs are grown, manufactured, and refined.

Virtually all of the cocaine, heroin, and marijuana consumed in the United States is grown and processed in foreign countries. Stemming the flow of illegal drugs into the United States, therefore, must become a major foreign policy objective.

H.R. 5484 would treat the drug problem as an crucial aspect of foreign policy. The bill earmarks two initiatives the President would be required to take to enhance drug eradication efforts. First, the President must deny 50 percent of authorized foreign aid to drug-source countries that do not fully cooperate in drug eradication programs. Second, the President must deny most-favored nation trading status for the same uncooperative drug-source nations.

This antidrug bill will also improve our enforcement and interdiction efforts against the dealers and pushers who buy and sell this death out on the streets.

In the past I have contributed to legislation that improves Federal drug enforcement ability. Federal laws now in affect, that I supported, include bail reform that keeps drug pushers off the streets while waiting for trial. I also supported the forfeiture provision in current law that allows the Government to seize proceeds from illicit drug deals that helps destroy drug-dealing profitability.

The bill before us today would add, 1,500 Coast Guard personnel to drug enforcement efforts. It would also provide the equipment they need to carry out effective programs such as air surveillance and air and sea interdiction. If we want to stop the huge influx of drugs into the United States, we need to close our borders to drugs before they get to our streets.

The bill also earmarks $10 million in military aid for drug interdiction and eradication efforts in countries were drug production is not effectively controlled.

And finally, this bill would upgrade existing antidrug education efforts. It authorizes grants to schools that develop drug abuse education and prevention programs. It also establishes an antidrug media campaign on local and national levels. Our children must be taught that drugs are not glamorous or sexy; drugs are death and disability.

Mr. Chairman, the United States is struggling with a drug epidemic. We must realize, however, that the issue is not confined to the domestic arena. We must reduce both sides of the drug problem—demand and supply. That means going to the source to stop drugs, and that means putting pressure on drug producing nations. Without that pressure and cooperation no amount of education and enforcement will ever be enough.

We must, act now, and we must act decisively. In fact, we already have waited too long. What used to be a trickle has truned into a torrent, and is threatening our future. Let us today strike a blow against the terrorism of drugs.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes, for the purpose of concluding debate, to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on International Operations, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, obviously I support this legislation; and it does exactly what this Congress intended it to do.

It provides funding and action for eradication, for education, for mandatory sentencing, for additional prisons and for rehabilitation. It covers the board with our approach to fight this problem that is facing America.

Let me just say this: Of course, I support title I and the entire bill. Congress can provide the lead. The administration, the Government, can provide the lead. We can give more money and we can coordinate; and that will be done in the State houses also; but the battle will be fought in the streets at home with citizen-soldiers, and that is what it is going to take.

We have the money now, we have the initiative and we have the action, but we are going to have to stand up at home and say, "No more plea bargaining, no more revolving doors." We are going to have to tell our judges that we want strong and long sentences. We are going to say to the pushers: We are going to put you away and we are going to keep you away. We are going to provide the prisons and the funding that it takes to do that.

The time has come; there is a crisis in America; we need action. The Congress and the Federal Government are responding. This is the first step. It is a major battle, and it is one we intend to win.

Mr. Chairman, the issue of illicit narcotics is one that has long been a central issue in my own State of Florida. Now it has seized the Nation and the body politic with a new emphasis. The United States has been infected with a plague of drugs which has known no boundaries of society, education, or economics. It has infected our schools, our homes, and our places of work. It has fostered a continuous wave of domestic and international criminal activity which affects all Americans. Unfortunately, this activity is supported by America's 20 million drug users, many of whom are otherwise exemplary citizens. They may be victims of a vicious cycle of addiction, or casual users. We have the responsibility to help break this cycle and to combat drugs at their source, at our borders, and in the minds of Americans.

Mr. Chairman, this Congress has in the past devised legislation to help alleviate the problems posed by illicit drugs. State and local governments, too, have attempted to exact controls. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has seen enacted a number of its own initiatives that have helped to stem the flow of drugs into this country. But never before have we pulled together such a comprehensive package to stress international cooperation, to fund educational and rehabilitation efforts, and to tighten the laws against traffickers and dealers. Mr. Chairman, I commend your efforts which have produced such broad-based legislation.

Narcotics is a problem which must be addressed at all levels of politics, diplomacy, and professional and family life. It concerns law enforcement officers, doctors, educators, social workers, and parents. It is also a problem for the international community which is finding that its drug-producing citizens are becoming drug-consuming citizens. Many small nations are looking with dismay at the drug czars with their vast monetary and personnel resources as threats to their national security. Indeed, the trafficking of illicit narcotics is a menace that must be attacked abroad as well as at home. I believe that this legislation will give us some of the tools and resources needed to battle this problem.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to be associated with this legislation, and especially commend to your attention title I of the bill. No effort to curb the use of drugs in our country can be successful without international controls and cooperation. Title I provides incentives to aid this cooperative approach. Let me highlight some of the recommendations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Title I:

Bolsters already existing foreign assistance law—section 481(h) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961—that if the President determines that any country has not taken adequate steps to stem illicit narcotics production and trafficking, he must then suspend U.S. assistance to that country.

Increases the current authorization for international narcotics control for fiscal year 1987 by $8 million and authorizes an additional $35 million for that fiscal year if the President requests it, and presents a plan on how the funds will be used.

Earmarks $10 million for fiscal year 1987 to provide helicopters or other aircraft to countries receiving narcotics control assistance to be used for narcotics eradication and interdiction. At least half of these funds shall be used in Latin America.

Earmarks $2 million in fiscal year 1987—IMET funds—for education and training for the operation and maintenance of narcotics control aircraft.

Earmarks $1 million in international narcotics control funds for the development of a safe herbicide for use in the aerial eradication of coca.

Requires the Department of State to report to the Congress on the extent to which nations have cooperated with the U.S. narcotics control efforts through the extradition or prosecution of drug traffickers.

Amends the so-called Mansfield amendment to allow U.S. officials to be present at narcotics raids overseas, if the Secretary determines that it is in the U.S. national interest.

Requires the executive branch to act quickly to establish a comprehensive information system on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States so that the information may be available to embassies processing visa requests. The bill also requires the President to take steps to better collect information concerning links between narcotics traffickers and acts of terrorism.

Authorizes $2 million to be used to provide Colombia or other countries in Latin America assistance for the protection of judicial or other officials who are targets of narcoterrorist attacks.

Urges the Secretary of State, in conjunction with the Secretary of Transportation, to increase efforts to negotiate with relevant countries procedures to facilitate the interdiction of seagoing vessels. It also directs the President to take appropriate actions against any country which refuses to engage in such negotiations.

Clarifies that, under certain conditions, U.S. military personnel may provide assistance to foreign law enforcement officials, and requires that the Secretary of State sign any emergency declaration—together with the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General—authorizing the use of the U.S. military overseas for narcotics control.

Provides an additional $2 million for the United States Information Agency and $3 million for the Agency for International Development to be used to increase drug education programs abroad.

Supports the planned United Nations' International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and asks that a high priority be given to U.S. participation in that Conference.

Calls for a study of the effectiveness of U.N. entities which deal with narcotics prevention and control.

Urges the speedy completion of the proposed new narcotics control convention and calls for more effective implementation of existing conventions in the United Nations.

Withholds $1 million of funds authorized for Mexico in fiscal year 1987 until the President certifies that the Government of Mexico has fully investigated the murders of DEA agent Camarena and his pilot, and has brought to trial and is effectively prosecuting those responsible.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], a member of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of title II and urge my colleagues to support its provisions.

In the interest of time, I will limit my comments to a brief description of the contents of title II.

Let me say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that because we on the Armed Services Committee were forced to consider our input to the omnibus drug bill at the same time we brought the defense authorization bill to the floor, we did not have an opportunity to reach a final committee position on this very important matter. We did, however, consider a number of significant policy options reflecting division within the committee on the appropriate role of the military in the war against illegal drugs. Specifically, the committee debated, but reached no resolution, on whether the posse comitatus law—the statute that prohibits military personnel from enforcing civil law unless specifically authorized by Congress—should be repealed, significantly modified, or left unchanged. While some argued for significantly increased military participation in the war on drugs, including the power to arrest, search and seize in or outside the land area of the United States, others cautioned that we could not advocate such a profound policy change. It was decided that in good conscience, that a more modest approach was in order without extensive hearings. In the end, we submitted all options to the bipartisan leadership for their consideration. Title II, before us today, represents the leadership's approved package, designed to increase the involvement of the military in the war on drugs, but to retain civilians as the primary drug law enforcement officials.

In a nutshell, Mr. Chairman, title II expresses the sense of Congress that the President should apply the full measure of his executive power against the introduction of narcotics into the United States—including expanding the role of the Armed Forces in the war on illegal drugs—and then sets out an affordable plan to work toward this goal. It follows on 4 years of committee activity in military support to drug interdiction.

The centerpiece of the proposal is twofold. First, the plan proposes a $213 million equipment package for loan to the appropriate civilian agencies to enhance drug enforcement assistance activities of the Department of Defense. This package includes $40 million for 8 Blackhawk helicopters, $83 million for 4 AN/APS-138 radar-equipped aircraft and $90 million for 7 radar aerostats. Taken together, this equipment will allow United States personnel to effectively surveil and detect drug smuggling aircraft and vessels along the entire Mexican border and most of the Carribean area. Even more important, this equipment will provide a much-improved capability to stop such aircraft and vessels before their cargo of illicit drugs hit our town and city streets.

Second, the plan would provide $15 million of Department of Defense funds to the Coast Guard for 500 additional Coast Guard personnel to be used in drug interdiction activities, principally aboard naval ships while they were passing through the major drug smuggling corridors. This, as well as the procurement package, would be provided out of existing Department of Defense resources.

In addition to these dollar items, title II proposes increasing the end strength of the Coast Guard Reserve by 1,500 and directing that such additional personnel be utilized for drug interdiction missions.

The plan also includes a health education promotion program for members of the Armed Forces, civilian employees of the Department of Defense and their families. It also makes drugged driving an offense equivalent to drunk driving under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, title II contains a provision that requires the President to report to the Congress, by March 1, 1987, on the appropriate role of the Armed Forces in interdicting illegal drugs as well as other potential participation in the national effort to control and reduce drug abuse. While at first glance this provision may not appear significant, it strikes me as a much more reasoned and prudent approach to defining military roles and missions than some of the amendments we will consider today. It gives the President, as the Commander in Chief, 90 days to define such roles, and this provision will give all of us time to consider whether or to what extent the posse comitatus law should be changed. The direct use of military personnel in arrests, searches and seizures is a major change in policy which should receive intense scrutiny and consideration, both in Congress and within the executive branch.

In sum, title II is a fair package, Mr. Chairman—one that addresses drug interdiction, education, and methods of deterrence from the military's point of view. I urge my colleagues to support title II.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me say it is unfortunate that we were called upon to come up with our portion of the solution to the drug problem at the very same time that we were busily engaged on the floor deliberating and handling the authorization bill for the Department of Defense just before the recess at the end of August.

For that reason we did not have an opportunity to fully focus on the best ways to approach the problem. We did the best we could. What is contained in the bill is the product that we have recommended.

For that reason under title II, which deals with the Department of Defense portion of drug enforcement, I support it and I think most of the members of the committee do also.

We recognize the fact that we have a monumental problem here. We recognize the fact that it is of epidemic proportions. We recognize that whatever we do now will be coming late. For this reason we have agreed and participated and are already participating under legislation enacted last year, as has been pointed out by our colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, some 213 million dollars' worth of equipment in the bill as proposed now will be bought by the Department of Defense out of funds that are allocated to DOD, and equipment will be purchased and loaned to other agencies.

I think, though, I would like to raise a flag of caution at this point. We are supportive of the concept. We want to do what we can to eradicate the manace of the drug problem. We realize that the Department of Defense has tremendous assets and resources, but what we want to caution against and be very careful about is that in our pell-mell race to alleviate the problem and to come up with solutions, that we do not inadvertently create problems that down the road will be insurmountable or will be unpleasant, more unpleasant than we could possibly anticipate at this point.

I refer particularly to a proposed amendment that will be offered dealing with what is called posse comitatus; that is, to allow the military to exercise civilian functions in law enforcement.

Now, there has been a prohibition on our statute books for over 100 years now saying that the military would not be into the civilian law enforcement business. It has worked well. It grew out of the period following the Civil War during Reconstruction when it was found that this was necessary. And it has worked very well.

What we want to guard against here is that the military not be put in the position of the sheriff, now, to go out and make arrests, to go through court procedures, to testify and to become embroiled then in the total civilian criminal process that has nothing to do with the military mission.

Let me point out a practical example of the problem that we face. If we just unrestrictedly say that the military from now on can have civilian right of arrest, seizure, arrest, to capture criminals, people who are suspected of criminal acts, to seize them, to make arrests, bring them to court, interrogate them, and to testify, then what happens during the court process?

Let me give a personal example: We had a civilian who was charged with murder in my district. He was out of prison on a work-release program, and he killed a young lady, raped and killed her, killed her by hitting her over the head repeatedly with an iron bar. There was an eye witness to it. The eye witness happened to be a soldier who was stationed in my district. He was there for the initial trial, he testified. Then, as often happens, the case was appealed and then sustained and an objection was sustained later on in the appeals process, and it was sent back to retry. When it was retried, the soldier was in Korea. There was a question, well, how does the civilian agency go to Korea and get this soldier to bring back, who was an eye witness, essential in this case?

Well, it was a cumbersome thing, but we finally, in that instance, got it worked out.

But now, magnify this by thousands of cases, and not where it is just an individual but perhaps a captain of a Navy ship can be subpoenaed about the interdiction and seizure of a vessel on the high seas. And 1 year later or 2 years later or maybe repeatedly the civilian authorities can force him back by virtue of a subpoena by the defendant to have the captain of that ship come back repeatedly to testify if the case is tried more than one time.

So we have to be very careful not to get the military involved and embroiled in the domestic trying of cases so that they are on call, as witnesses can be, and be compelled to attend from around the world. What we would like to see is that the system remain intact, that the civilians and, in this case, the Coast Guard, which has the authority now, be given the right to actually make the arrest, to testify in trial and that be the authority that would be subject to subpoena and testimony later and not embroil or entangle the military ad infinitum into the future on being on call for everything, to be subpoenaed to testify in civilian cases.

So I would raise this as a cautionary flag. I would hope we would not in our zeal to do good here, set up the machinery whereby the military would be thrust into a position to do something that they, first, do not want, second, should not do and, third, probably would be counterproductive. It certainly is not in the best interests of the readiness posture for the military in this country.

□ 1400

So I would hope that in our support for this bill, which I do support, and support for title II, which I do support, we do not encroach over into an area that is tended to say the least, which I think would be unwise, and that we in our enthusiasm here do not in effect throw out the baby with the bathwater.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, the particular provision on posse comitatus that was just spoken to by the ranking member, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICK-

INSON], and the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], is my particular amendment that I will offer.

Let me say that I also think that posse comitatus had a good justification at one time and that it does prevent military forces from making civilian arrests.

But let me hasten to say that this amendment only relates to a very limited area in which it allows military aircraft and resources and personnel to interdict aircraft that are flying across the international border and ships that are coming into America's waters. It does not allow military people to kick in doors in Alabama or to make arrests on the streets of New York or anything else. It gives only a hot pursuit permission to our military people.

Let me just say that my friend for whom I have great regard, the gentleman from Alabama, was right when the gentleman said that we are going to have military people who are probably going to have to show up on the witness stand and testify. That is true. I think the question is a matter of prioritization.

Let me just tell you that in the entire State of California, and we met with our defense people this morning who are really dragging their feet and do not want to be involved, as Mr. DICKINSON said, they admitted that they, working with Customs, with them handing off radar spotting of illicit aircraft entering the United States from San Diego to Yuma, a 150-mile stretch, have not had a single success. They have not seen Customs take down a single aircraft from aerial pursuit as far back as they can remember, in the last 8 or 10 years. That means that the domestic agency has not captured a single marijuana cigarette as a result of aerial pursuit. This is a job that Customs is supposed to be able to do.

I have sat with my chairman, Mr. RANGEL, and listened to members of the Defense Department explain how they have solved drug problems in the Navy, how they are going to work on drug problems in other services, but how they do not want to get involved in this particular job.

Let me just tell you that the last question that I asked Colonel Pothier, who is the acting head of the military operation with regard to drug interdiction, was, "Could you do it if the President told you to do it? Could you interdict the planes that are illegally penetrating our borders?"

His answer was, "Yes; we can do it if the President orders us to do it."

So this is a very moderate amendment I think. The only erosion in posse comitatus and the limitation to military right to arrest are limited to the crews of these aircraft and ships that are bringing drugs to our children and coming across the international border. It does not give them a police power throughout the State.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug bill of 1986, I wholeheartedly support the majority leader in his efforts to bring this legislation to the floor of the House.

This is not a new problem. Over the past century the ebb and flow of public concern about drug abuse is a matter of record, clearly documented. When an entertainment personality, a sports figure or a Supreme Court Justice becomes involved with narcotics it stirs a great deal of public interest. All of us have witnessed the rise and fall of LSD, PCP, amphetamines, barbiturates, and numerous others. Cocaine, too, has had its heyday and its decline. Today we are seeing a new impetus to cocaine generated by the so-called "crack," which is smoked rather than snorted. It is relatively inexpensive and highly dangerous.

International tensions have surfaced because of the illegal transport of drugs over national borders. The abduction and murder of American drug enforcement agents, particularly when it is inferred that foreign police personnel may be involved, can no longer be tolerated. There are rumors that American aid, military and humanitarian, is implicated in the procurement of narcotics by the recipients of such aid. The drugs are then returned to our shores and sold to our citizens.

The leadership of both parties—the membership of this House from both sides of the aisle—are deeply concerned about the extent of this problem that has permeated every community in America. We have, for years now, had a special committee, a select committee of the House, working with the legislative committees that have jurisdiction on this narcotics problem. Millions and millions of dollars have been spent for research and investigation to combat the cost and spread of drug abuse.

The Congress has not been idly standing by. In 1906 the Congress enacted the Food and Drug Act, and in 1914 we enacted the Harrison Narcotics Act. Thereafter, numerous statutes and amendments relating to narcotics were passed into law. In addition to this, the several States of the Union have adopted their own statutes to address the problem at a local level.

I join with all of you in a fervent desire to rescue the poor, the young, the ill-advised from the scourge of drug dependence. We all know that we are faced with fiscal belt tightening and that in order to achieve our goal of the eradication of this vicious drug problem, it is going to require enormous amounts of tax dollars. Huge deficits and a huge debt are upon us. Nevertheless, we must tighten our belts wherever possible and we must support this legislation which, hopefully, will not only address the problem, but reduce it to the point where we can bring our self-respect as a nation. Our responsibilities are to our young people and if we don't eradicate this problem, we will not be carrying out our responsibilities to them and the future generations who will be subject to more devastating consequences.

We have all read recently of the outstanding Americans, one a Member of the other body, whose parents came here from overseas, penniless, looking for freedom and opportunity. And they found it. This is how America is viewed throughout the world. A country where, no matter what your background may be, you will be treated fairly and where you can advance to any frontier you set for yourself. Our young people must be similarly dedicated. To that end I urge the adoption of this legislation designed to root out the cancer of drug addiction and to restore the vision of America as a wellspring of hope for those who yearn to come here.

Vote aye and reaffirm the faith of those peoples in the rest of the world who look to our land as the land of opportunity. Vote aye to maintain our pride, our dignity, and the world's trust in our Nation.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman from Alabama who gave us some very sound reasons why we should await the President's decision on the proper role of the military. I would dislike to see us undertake to lay out here on the floor of the House as to what role the armed services should play.

In addition to the reasons which the gentleman gave, there is also that of training. I suspect it would take 6 months to train soldiers to make civilian arrests in a manner which would be upheld in court.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH], who has worked very closely with me on the Armed Services Committee and on the gentleman's Subcommittee on Government Operations.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me say that I want to commend the Committee on Armed Services for their section of the bill. I think it is a very good section. I would also thank them for the inclusion of most of the proposal that I offered, H.R. 5270, in that bill.

Very quickly, I will run through this so the Members will understand what it is that is being done with the various features.

One of the big shortages that we have had in the war on drugs has been detection capability. You have to be able to detect a drug smuggler before you can intercept him, before you can arrest him. This is one area in which the military can be of great benefit and of great assistance. Obviously, it is of importance to the military from our overall NORAD defense.

What you see listed in these different colored circles are actually radar coverages that are either presently being offered or are contemplated for the future.

These three brown circles, for instance, on the southern tip of Florida presently exist. None of the other coverages that are shown presently do exist. What is being provided by the Committee on Armed Services and through this legislation are tethered aerostats which would have the coverage of, roughly, a 150-mile radius that would be scattered all along the Southwest border. I think most people recognize that there has been a tremendous increase on the Southwest border recently, and these would provide protection coverage where, for the most part, none exist. We do have two radar aircraft that are there, but for most of the time, they have not been flying.

Down in the Bahamas, this is a choke point, the so-called Windward Passage, where a good deal of the cocaine flows into the Bahamas and on into south Florida. This is the route that they take. We presently do not have any detection coverage. That would cover those areas.

Also contained in this bill are four detection aircraft, the AFT-138, the type that is involved on the Navy's E2-C. It has very good radar. It has a range of around 200 miles. These would operate in the gulf coast areas and cover the distance over water.

So as you can see, we begin to link together coverage of various military assets that would provide the Customs Services with that much needed detection.

Up here, we have the so-called New York Freeway in which drug smugglers come through the Windward Passage and simply head north into the New York area. At the present time, this training area is not being utilized by the military. They told us in the past that they would do this, but, unfortunately, they have not provided any information. In fact, we have not been able to find a single report that has been made from aircraft that are training in that area to the Customs Service.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] mentioned the area out off the California coast, which is another E2-C training areas, 500 miles west and 500 miles south of San Diego.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to express my appreciation on behalf of my constituents and the people in Florida for the gentleman's determination and hard work, the hearings the gentleman has held in our State, and the tremendous contribution the gentleman has made in trying to help solve this problem.

□ 1410

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman. Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

Mr. Chairman, let us set the record straight. No a single call has come from the Navy from this training areas to the Customs Service. One reason that we may find that that kind of call has never been made is because there is not a single interceptor in San Diego. Even if they got the call, they do not have any properly equipped aircraft that can make that response. That is the reason I would suggest to the Members that there has not been a single aircraft apprehended crossing the southern California border, because basically there are no interceptors there that are properly equipped to make that response.

I will say very quickly that in tests that were made we found that over 30 aircraft a month were crossing this particular border, and the only way in which we have been able to catch them out there, since we do not have any equipment, is if they crash.

I would suggest that one important feature of this particular piece of legislation is not over in the detection coverage, but later in the bill under the Ways and Means Committee section is providing the interceptors so that we have someone who can challenge those smugglers once we detect them. Then, perhaps, we can bring the pressure to bear on the Department of Defense to finally provide the detection coverage that the Navy has promised us long ago. That, I think, will give this country some real hope and an opportunity to detect drug smugglers throughout our southern border and even as they come north, as they move toward the east coast, further up the east coast to the New York City area.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objecton, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There is no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my support for H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. I congratulate the President and the First Lady, who have worked tirelessly on the problem of drug abuse, and the House leadership for their achievement in shepherding this important bipartisan legislation onto the floor. This legislation represents a serious effort by Congress to address the twin problems of drug abuse and drug trafficking. Our Nation will benefit greatly from the substantial effort this legislation makes to bring these problems under control.

In attempting to deal with the enormous problem of drugs in our society, H.R. 5484 takes a particularly effective approach. It addresses both the demand side and the supply side of the illicit production, distribution, and consumption of narcotics. It attempts to reduce our Nation's consistently high level of demand for narcotics through both the establishment of substantially higher penalties for drug users, increased funding and coordination of Federal and State drug rehabilitation programs, and, perhaps most importantly, mandating the implementation of drug education and prevention programs so that our Nation's youth might begin to fully grasp the enormous dangers drugs pose to their futures. In addition, the bill dramatically increases penalties for most drug-related offenses, especially those involving the selling of drugs to schoolage children.

On the supply side, the bill increases penalties across the board for crimes relating to drug trafficking and smuggling of narcotics across our borders. It requires a prison term of between 20 years and life for the commission of drug distribution or production offenses which result in serious injury or death. I especially laud the changes H.R. 5484 seeks to make to stem the flow of illegal narcotics into our country from abroad through the drug interdiction efforts of the Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA], Customs Service, and Coast Guard. Along with increased funding for these agencies, for which I have been a longtime advocate, the bill allows the Justice Department to use assets seized in drug cases for increased drug interception efforts. I cosponsored such a bill before its inclusion into this omnibus drug legislation. While these provisions would counter drug smuggling by land and sea, those sections dealing with aviation smuggling, submitted by the Public Works and Transportation Committee, of which I am a ranking member, significantly increase penalties for this illicit activity.

Consistent with my views deploring the preponderance of whitecollar crime in our Nation, I support the Judiciary Committee's efforts to sap the lifeblood of drug traffickers, the so-called money laundering. Drug smugglers would have a difficult time going about their business if we didn't have unscrupulous individuals assisting traffickers in concealing their illicitly gained assets. The new regulations will assist law enforcement authorities in gaining evidence against narcotics traffickers. Disguising large cash movements, the stock and trade of the drug lord, will be made substantially more difficult under H.R. 5484.

Though falling just short of having military personnel assist the border patrol along our southern border in containing illegal alien-related narcotics smuggling, the bill does assist in such efforts by amending the Mansfield amendment to permit the participation of U.S. agents in foreign police actions related to narcotics, contingent upon State Department approval. Additionally, U.S. military personnel will now be permitted to assist in drug eradication efforts in foreign countries.

To further expedite drug eradication efforts at the source, H.R. 5484 would make American economic assistance through multilateral development banks such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund conditional upon progress in drug eradication efforts and control over drug trafficking in those countries. The bill also permits the President to take punitive trade actions against countries deemed unresponsive to U.S. concerns toward drug eradication and smuggling. Taken together, these provisions may allow us to be successful in encouraging foreign cooperation in destroying illegal drug crops, halting international narcotics trafficking, and enhancing our ability to intercept illicit drug shipments.

H.R. 5484 represents a sincere, responsible attempt to bring drug trafficking and drug abuse under control. As such, I strongly urge my colleagues to lend their full support to this legislation. Passage of this bill provides an invaluable opportunity to begin to prevail over these problems which continue to plague our Nation.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL] is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEVILL. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I have just returned from meeting with constituents in all 14 counties of my district. People came up to me at all those meetings and said, "Tom, what are we going to do about this drug problem?"

Frankly, it surprised me that there was such a high level of concern about drug abuse in Alabama, especially in the rural areas. We tend to think that this is more of a problem in big cities elsewhere. Sadly, it is not. Drug abuse is a growing problem everywhere, including Alabama. It's not just a problem for young people, it's a problem for their parents as well. We've talked about it, now we've got to do something about it.

That's why I am strongly supporting the this omnibus drug bill of 1986. This is the first time we have tried to coordinate a nationwide antidrug effort. This is going to be an uphill battle, especially when you consider that between $100–$200 billion will be spent on illegal drugs in our country this year. The demand is obviously there. We must try to stop the demand as well as the supply. I believe this legislation does that.

We will step up our efforts to wipe out drug crops at the source. And, we will help other nations in wiping out their drug crops. We will increase pressure on Mexico to cooperate in stopping drug trafficking.

We will beef up the U.S. Customs Service and increase drug trafficking penalties in an attempt to keep illegal drugs out of this country. For the first time, it will be a Federal crime to involve children in the manufacture and distribution of illegal drugs.

These are important steps, but I believe the best feature of this legislation is an antidrug education program aimed at schoolchildren. We must get the attention of our young people that drugs are dangerous, that they ruin lives.

Drugs are already a major problem in our schools and on our college campuses. I heard stories while I was home about drugs being sold at junior high schools and even at elementary schools. Surely, there is something we can do about this. Knowledge is a great weapon. That's why I believe this antidrug education program is so important.

I am also glad that this bill assures adequate resources to States for providing rehabilitation and treatment services for drug abuses. By helping abusers get off drugs, we are helping to stop the demand for drugs and eventualy, the supply.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this legislation. We need to send a message to these drug traffickers that we are on their trail and we won't let up until they are stopped in their tracks.

I hope that this all-out effort is going to make a difference. There are lives that depend on it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] to present title III for the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GIBBONS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say what a distinguished job the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] has done on this legislation, the chairman of the Antidrug Task Force in the Congress. I would like to say to my friend from New York that there may not be a chair for you in the White House, but there is one for you in heaven for leading this fight.

I appreciate the spirit and the intelligence and the drive with which the gentleman from New York has led this fight against drugs.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to pay appropriate attention to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] for the fine job that he has done in informing us, in fighting the battle, in keeping the facts and figures honest and straight, and in laying out an appropriate program here.

Mr. Chairman, this title that the Ways and Means Committee is presenting is presented nearly unanimously from the Ways and Means Committee; 35 of the 36 members of the Ways and Means Committee cosponsored this in a separate bill, H.R. 5410.

Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means Committee essentially is modernizing a lot of our trade and customs laws to strengthen the hand of law enforcement and to also increase the resources that are available at the border and beyond the border for the interdiction and containment of this very serious problem.

On the law enforcement side, we are making it much more difficult to bring contraband into this country, whether it be by common carrier, personal carrier or by private vessel; aircraft or seaborne.

We make it much more difficult for people to avoid customs as they have in the past, and to avoid this network. We make it easier, not unconstitutionally so, but we make it easier for people to enforce these laws by requiring the reporting of all movements across the border.

We expect to have many more people and a great deal more equipment available for this war. As I said, the gentleman from Oklahoma did a masterful job in explaining this to us; what we have now and what we need. The gentleman's recommendations were taken almost entirely by the Ways and Means Committee and incorporated in our section of this title.

Mr. Chairman, title III of H.R. 5484 contains major revisions to the customs laws in order to strengthen the drug enforcement and interdiction activities of the U.S. Customs Service. These amendments would add new penalties and reporting requirements to the Tariff Act, enable customs to engage in undercover activities more freely, place new controls on vehicles or vessels arriving in the United States in order to deter smuggling, and expand the customs forfeiture fund which is used to finance drug interdiction efforts.

Title III would also create greater incentives for countries to cooperate with the United States in eradicating drug crops and apprehending drug smugglers. The President would be required to take trade actions such as the denial of most-favored-nation [MFN] treatment and other preferential tariff treatment to countries that are the source of illegal drugs if they refuse to cooperate in arresting illegal drug traffic.

Sections 304 and 307 of the proposed bill amend customs laws to clarify and strengthen reporting requirements for those arriving in the United States. A concern has been expressed by some Members about the applicability of these requirements—in particular those contained in section 307—amending 19 U.S.C. 1459—to the operators of recreational vessels.

Further, a technical amendment to section 12109 of title 46, United States Code, is to be adopted. This addition to the shipping laws is merely to give notice that, although documented recreational vessels are exempt from formal entry or clearance procedures with the Customs Service, all other applicable customs regulations must be met. In particular, the requirement to report an arrival as contemplated under sections 304 and 307 of this bill applies. The paperwork of entering and clearing with customs is designed primarily for commercial vessels and is therefore unnecessary and inconvenient for recreational boaters. The exemption in section 12109 in no way detracts from the law enforcement capability of the Customs Service.

The authors of this language note that the reporting requirements of the bill—including all of those applicable to recreational boaters—are to be determined through regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and that the Secretary has sufficient discretion in developing these regulations. Accordingly, we expect these regulations to produce a reporting system that will be enforceable and that will be applied appropriately and sensibly to those subject to its requirements. We do not expect, for example, that recreational boaters returning from a day-trip or other brief excursion to a foreign port will ordinarily be required to report in person to a customs facility, or that obtaining authorization for these boaters to depart their vessel will prove to be a complicated or burdensome endeavor.

The overall purpose of these amendments is to strengthen the hand of the Customs Service in carrying out its drug law enforcement program. Any additional reporting requirements or enforcement measures should be developed and implemented for that purpose, keeping in mind the convenience and the need for continued cooperation and good will on the part of the innocent majority.

Mr. Chairman, the drug problem has reached crisis proportions and we must move quickly to give the administration the necessary tools to address the problem. H.R. 5484 does this in a comprehensive manner and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. GUARINI. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer my strongest support for the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act. I commend the leadership of the House for developing this comprehensive bipartisan legislation. For the first time in our Nation's history, it will enable us to launch an attack on drugs on every conceivable front.

As a longtime member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I have worked for years to draw attention to the growing scourge of drug abuse and to offer proposals for its eradication. I am gratified that the Congress will act promptly on this unprecedented antidrug initiative. I am proud to be an original sponsor of the measure before us today.

Over the years I have had the opportunity to examine the growing threat of narcotics abuse from a variety of perspectives. I have seen narcotics crops in full bloom in South American and Asian countries. I have seen how easily drugs can be smuggled across our 2,000 mile unguarded border to the south. And I have seen the effects of this massive influx of illegal drugs in the pathetic stories of drug addicts and in the overcrowded rehabilitation facilities in my own State of New Jersey.

We can say unequivocally that drug abuse has grown to be the single largest problem facing our Nation today. Like a cancer from within, this $110 billion illegal business jeopardizes the very future of America. It takes a mounting toll in broken lives, ruined careers, devastated families, rising health care costs, loss of productivity, and increased crime and violence in our neighborhoods.

The bill before us today will put in place a national strategy to help us win the war on drugs. It is a comprehensive policy that expands authority to respond to the problem and targets resources and personnel in order to get the job done.

As a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I have pushed for legislative action that will close our borders to drug traffic and impose sanctions on drug-producing countries. Title III of the bill will enhance our ability to fight illegal drugs in two ways. It will increase the Customs Service's capacity to secure our borders against drug smugglers, and it will deny favorable trading status to foreign countries that fail to cooperate in eradicating drug crops at the source.

Our border with Mexico represents the most extensive and uncontrollable part of our narcotics law enforcement effort. The drugs that cross that border spread death and destruction throughout the Nation. Ultimately, the influx of narcotics and the unguarded entrance of illegal immigrants pose a threat to our national security.

This bill provides for increases in Customs Service personnel and for the acquisition of high-technology equipment. It updates our customs laws and closes loopholes that allow drug traffickers to smuggle narcotics into the country. Together, these changes will allow us to beef up our law enforcement efforts along our borders and make dramatic progress in stopping the flow of illicit drugs into our country.

While other sections of this bill focus resources on domestic prevention, education, and treatment efforts, title III complements those plans with proposals to halt drug crop production in source countries. To be successful, we must obtain the commitment of drug-producing nations to prevent the production, processing and trafficking of illicit drugs. The bill authorizes the President to use economic as well as diplomatic pressure in reaching this goal by denying trade benefits to our neighbors who remain uncooperative.

The American people have sent a signal that they will no longer tolerate the insidious effects of narcotics on our society. The bill before us today provides the ammunition for a concentrated attack on the most deadly evil our Nation has ever faced. I urge my colleagues to give it their strongest support.

□ 1420

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUARINI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] for the contribution he has made certainly to the House of Representatives but, more specifically, as it has related to the work of the Select Committee on Narcotics.

As the gentleman has pointed out, our missions have taken us throughout the United States and indeed throughout the world. They have taken up a lot of time, and this has eaten into the time that most of us would want to spend in our districts. However, I cannot recall a time when the committee was asked to perform one of these tasks or attend one of these hearings in someone's district when the gentleman did not respond.

For the leadership that the gentleman has given to the committee, I for one, and certainly the gentleman from New York, Mr. BEN GILMAN, would like to take this opportunity to thank him. I suspect that the passage of this bill will be just one small way of showing the gentleman that his time has not been wasted.

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for his splendid remarks.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUARINI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, since I do not see our ranking member here I just want to say on his behalf, since I know he is a great friend of the gentleman that those of us on our side in this bipartisan effort wish to commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI] and thank him for his great work on our select committee.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5484, a bill which establishes the national strategy we desperately need to attack the insidious drug problem our country faces today.

While we have referred to a war on drugs in the past, our previous efforts have been piecemeal and grossly inadequate. Drug use in the United States is disintegrating the very foundations of our society. The drug menace is a major threat to our health system, our educational system, our economic system, and our criminal justice system. Our very future is threatened when our young people are enslaved and even killed by the epidemic use of illicit drugs.

For once, we are dealing with a problem which is neither partisan nor geographic in nature. Nor does it discriminate according to race, religion, or financial means. We all agree that our best efforts must be directed toward extermination of this 20th century plague. H.R. 5484 is the omnibus and bipartisan counterattack we need to combat this national crisis.

Title III of this bill is substantially identical to H.R. 5410, which was sponsored by 35 members of the Committee on Ways and Means and which was favorably reported by the committee. This title contains provisions to stem the tide of imported drugs and close our borders, which have become open sieves through which the drug trade flows virtually unimpeded. It accomplishes this task by revising many of our outdated customs laws and closing loopholes that now make it easier for drug traffickers to smuggle drugs into our country, by increasing penalties for violations of customs drug laws, by providing funding for drug interdiction programs through the Customs Forfeiture Fund, by significantly increasing the manpower and equipment with which customs will wage a more effective campaign against drugs, and by creating a tool for the President to use by requiring denial of preferential trade status to nations which are the source of illegal drugs if they refuse to cooperate in arresting illegal drug traffic.

The Committee on Ways and Means drafted title III only after receiving the benefit of testimony from experts who have spent years studying the problem, including the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, the Committee on Government Operations, and the U.S. Customs Service. The solutions proposed in title III of H.R. 5484 are well thought out legislative answers to a serious problem.

Mr. Chairman, I am shocked and amazed by the charges that we are moving too quickly or that we are providing too many resources in H.R. 5484. There is no dispute that our borders have been invaded. So why the hesitancy to fight back with the intent to win this war? To those who say we are moving too quickly, I reply that we must act expeditiously because the problem has already escalated to epidemic proportions. For example, it is estimated that the amount of cocaine smuggled into the United States this year will be 150 tons, an amount double the figure for just 1 year ago.

To the unfounded claim that we are spending too much to combat this problem, let me say it is estimated that, at best, our drug enforcement agencies intercept only an estimated 10 to 15 percent of the illicit drug traffic destined for our shores. How can they do better when resources allow operation of interdiction aircraft only during normal business hours? When there is no radar detection under 14,000 feet for vast sections of our border? When agencies charged with interdiction cannot communicate with each other by radio? When officers within the same agency can only talk to each other if they are within 5 miles of each other?

I am aware of and fully support our need to reduce overall spending in order to decrease levels. I do not, however, advocate gambling with the future of this country by standing aside while our borders are invaded. The expenditures authorized in title III provide only the basic necessities for an effective drug interdiction program. And we cannot wait any longer. The enemy has invaded. We must fight now.

I urge all my colleagues to join me in active support of H.R. 5484 to finally win the war against this 20th century scourge.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the Chair as to how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARR). The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. Although various deficiencies remain to be resolved—and budget considerations are an important concern—the bill is a positive and comprehensive response to our Nation's drug problem. President Reagan has made the solving of America's drug problem a top priority of this administration. I am pleased that the Congress has responded in a bipartisan way with H.R. 5484, and I will join the President in this effort.

We all have had a part to play in this legislation, and the Ways and Means Committee has recommended extensive improvements in the Customs Service's drug interdiction and enforcement authorities. With these changes, the Customs Service will be able to expand its air surveillance and detection program and improve its border enforcement efforts.

Among the improvements in customs procedures, the bill requires additional reporting requirements for small boats and planes returning to the United States, increased penalties for smuggling or attempting to enter prohibited substances illegally, improved compensation for informers who assist the Customs Service, more simplified procedures for seizures, forfeitures of vessels and planes, and more effective prosecution, under customs laws, of drug traffickers.

All these somewhat technical changes should improve the Customs Service's efforts at home and allow more coordination with foreign governments to stop the drug trade across our borders. However, one of the most important improvements in existing law, offered here by the Ways and Means Committee, is language to deny market access to those countries that do not cooperate with the United States in our drug enforcement efforts.

These particular provisions of the bill require the President to make annual determinations and reports to Congress on drug source nations and their efforts to cooperate with the U.S. Government to prevent illicit drugs from significantly affecting this country. If these drug source nations do not cooperate in stopping drug traffic, the President must take action against the country's imports into the United States by denying preferential tariff treatment and applying additional tariffs up to 50 percent ad valorem above column 2 rates. The President also may cancel special benefits under the generalized system of preferences [GSP] and the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI].

The action can be a combination of responses, but it must restrict a drug source country's imports significantly enough to elicit cooperation or to cause serious trade consequences. These new provisions will provide an important weapon for the President to use as he coordinates his efforts with developing countries that have open access to our markets but also permit drug trafficking that needs to be brought under control.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express some reservation about the total amount of money this bill authorizes for the Customs Service. It represents a 45-percent increase over fiscal year 1986 and I question whether any agency can effectively absorb such a massive influx of money and provide at the same time efficient and tough new drug programs.

I think it is much more realistic to expand customs' new drug programs in stages over a 3-year period so the money can be most effectively utilized. I plan to support amendments that will achieve this goal.

Mr. Chairman, again I am pleased at the bipartisan effort that has been achieved today. I hope we will continue to support the President in this national effort and I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on H.R. 5484.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, the menace that illegal drugs poses to our Nation and to our families has become acutely highlighted. The deaths of prominent athletes due to drug use, the destruction of lives by new and more dangerous drugs such as crack and the ever-growing threat to our children from drug abuse, have all raised this issue to the national spotlight.

The omnibus drug package, H.R. 5484, that the House is considering today is a bipartisan effort to deal with the grave drug problem confronting this Nation. I am pleased to have contributed to this effort by authoring three provisions of H.R. 5484 during consideration of the drug package in the Ways and Means Committee. These provisions will prohibit the importation of drug paraphernalia; authorize a low-altitude detection system to combat the problem of low-flying aircraft at our borders; and increase fines and penalties associated with the importation of heroin, cocaine, PCP and LSD.

In a further effort to strengthen the war on drugs, I will offer an amendment today to ensure that an aviation pilot who participates in the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances will never legally fly again. Current law mandates that a pilot violating a State or Federal narcotic law can have his license revoked by the Federal Aviation Administration for a maximum of 5 years. My amendment would amend the Aviation Drug Trafficking Control Act of 1984 to require that the FAA Administrator shall not issue an airman certificate to any pilots who have violated a State or Federal narcotic law associated with aviation.

A large portion of the illegal drugs entering this country do so by air, and this amendment can assist in reducing this problem by sending a strong signal to pilots participating in aviation-related drug trafficking.

Mr. Chairman, as the Members are aware, I offered an amendment to the Ways and Means portion of the omnibus drug bill that would increase fines and penalties associated with importation of certain prohibited substances and expand definitions of several drugs. My amendment amended title III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970.

Although the jurisdiction over such an amendment to title III would seem to be under the juridiction of the Judiciary Committee, the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee over the imposition of penalties for illegal import and export drug activity in title III is clearly documented in the report material from the 1970 act. I would like to insert for the RECORD at this time material from the report of the 1970 act; I also would like to insert a letter from the Ways and Means Committee to the Judiciary Committee on September 10, 1986, regarding this matter. I think the Members will agree that this material clearly states the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee over all aspects of title III of the act.

Although the Judiciary Committee rightfully exercises the majority of jurisdiction over criminal penalties under the current committee system, the maintenance of Ways and Means jurisdiction over penalties and definitions in title III is prudent if only for the reason that revenues are involved.

I have worked with the Judiciary Committee to ensure that my amendment to the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act coincides with that committee's diligent efforts in crafting legislation to expand definitions of several drugs and to increase fines and penalties associated with illegal narcotics activities.

I do not wish to create an intercommittee dispute on this issue, but I do want the Members to recognize the jurisdiction of Ways and Means over the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act. The Parliamentarian has agreed with this assertion, and I think the Judiciary Committee and the Ways and Means Committee should be aware of this point during the consideration of this legislation and future measures.

COMPREHENSIVE DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACT OF 1970

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 18583) to amend the Public Health Service Act and other laws to provide increased research into, and prevention of, drug abuse and drug dependence; to provide for treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers and drug dependent persons; and to strengthen existing law enforcement authority in the field of drug abuse, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, which is set forth in italic in the reported bill.

PRINCIPAL PURPOSE OF THE BILL

This legislation is designed to deal in a comprehensive fashion with the growing menace of drug abuse in the United States (1) through providing authority for increased efforts in drug abuse prevention and rehabilitation of users, (2) through providing more effective means for law enforcement aspects of drug abuse prevention and control, and (3) by providing for an overall balanced scheme of criminal penalties for offenses involving drugs.

BACKGROUND

Titles I and II of the reported bill were the subject of hearings before the Subcommittee on Public Health and Welfare on February 3, 4, 17, 18, 19, 20 25, 26, and 27, and on March 2 and 3, 1970. Following the hearings, the subcommittee considered the legislative proposals before it during a total of 37 executive sessions, as a result of which a clean bill (H.R. 18583) was introduced incorporating revisions in the legislation before the subcommittee.

The legislation was further considered in executive sessions before the full Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on 8 occasions, and titles I and II were ordered reported to the House unanimously on August 14, 1970, together with title III incorporated in the bill pursuant to action of the Ways and Means Committee (as indicated below).

Legislation providing increased law enforcement authority in the field of drug abuse was transmitted to the Congress by the President on July 14, 1969. Because the proposed legislation repeals the tax laws and other laws under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means used to control narcotic drugs, the President's message was at first referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. However, because the proposed legislation also deals with drugs regulated under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the proposed legislation was divided into two bills, H.R. 13742 (referred to the Committee on Ways and Means) and H.R. 13743 (referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce). The two bills were, in general, identical, except with respect to the drugs covered by their provisions, with H.R. 13742 being limited to narcotic drugs and marihuana (regulated today under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and other Acts), and H.R. 13743 being limited to drugs today regulated under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

Hearings were held on H.R. 13742 and H.R. 17463 (a bill combining the provisions of H.R. 13742 and H.R. 13743) on July 20, 21, 22, 23, and 27. Thereafter the Committee on Ways and Means decided to consider only the provisions relating to imports and exports of narcotic drugs, marihuana, and depressant and stimulant drugs and recommended to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee an amendment to H.R. 18583 which is incorporated in the bill as title III thereof. The reported bill is based upon the provisions of the legislation heretofore discussed, with the form in which the bill is reported being designed to preserve the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee over future amendments to this legislation relating to imports and exports of drugs covered by the bill.

By agreement between the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and the Ways and Means Committee, the former committee will handle and have jurisdiction over titles I and II of the reported bill, and the latter will handle and have jurisdiction over title III of the bill, as set forth in the following letter from Chairman Mills to Chairman Staggers:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., August 12, 1970.

Hon. HARLEY O. STAGGERS,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with our prior understanding relative to committee jurisdiction over the subject of narcotic and dangerous drug legislation, this letter is to advise you that the Committee on Ways and Means has completed action on its portion of the legislation to be reported to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I am authorized and directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to formally forward to you under cover of this cover of this letter the legislative language which is to be contained in title III of the comprehensive drug bill which will be reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This title III contains the matters over which the Committee on Ways and Means will have jurisdiction and is related to the subject of importation and exportation, and amendments and repeals of revenue laws. The short title for title III is the "Controlled Substances Import and Export Act."

There will also be forwarded to you appropriate report language relating to title III for you to include in the committee report which your committee will file on this legislation, in accordance with our understanding.[1]

Further, the Committee on Ways and Means will handle matters related to title III of the legislation before the Committee on Rules, and on the floor of the House of Representatives when the bill is considered by the House.

Sincerely yours,
WILBUR D. MILLS,
Chairman.

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

H.R. 18583, as reported, consists of three titles. Title I establishes rehabilitation programs relating to drug abuse; title II provides anthority for the Justice Department with respect to law enforcement aspects of control of drug abuse; and title III, as recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, covers provisions relating to importation and exportation of drugs subject to abuse.

Title I: Rehabilitation.—The bill provides authority for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to increase its efforts in the rehabilitation, treatment, and prevention of drug abuse, through community mental health centers and through public health service hospitals and facilities. Over a 3-year period $75 million in increased authorizations are provided for community mental health center facilities to deal with narcotic addicts and drug dependent persons, $29 million is authorized for drug abuse education activities, and $60 million is authorized for special facilities in areas having percentages of narcotic addicts and drug dependent persons.

Increased research and training activities are authorized through the National Institute of Mental Health out of appropriations otherwise authorized for that institute. Section 4 of the bill would encourage treatment of narcotic addicts by individual physicians.

Title II: Control and Enforcement.—The bill provides for control by the Justice Department of problems related to drug abuse through registration of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and all others in the legitimate distribution chain, and makes transactions outside the legitimate distribution chain illegal.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.

Hon. PETER W. RODINO, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to clarify the position of this Committee with respect to various amendments to the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act which are included in H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. In an effort to expedite consideration of this important legislation, the Committee on Ways and Means has agreed to delete from its title of the bill certain provisions which are also included in the title reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. This decision does not necessarily preclude future Committee action or jurisdictional claims on these provisions. Amendments to this Act have been recognized in the past as matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. Any future decisions regarding appropriate referrals of these matters must be made by the Speaker according to applicable rules of the House.

The amendments in question would alter provisions of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act to tighten certain prohibitions on the possession, manufacture, or distribution of narcotics for the purpose of unlawful importation. They also increase the minimum prison terms and fines for violations of such prohibitions. Because this Committee has jurisdiction over import regulations, it is clear that the prohibitions of this Act, which are enforced by the Customs Service, are properly within our jurisdiction. Naturally, the penalties imposed for violations of the Act are also within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

I would like to reemphasize that our willingness to delete these amendments from our title of H.R. 5484 does not confer any exclusive jurisdiction in another Committee, and should not be considered a precedent. In fact, the Committee on Ways and Means reported a predecessor bill to Title III, H.R. 5410, which contained the penalty provisions. However, in the interests of promoting cooperation between our respective Committees and expediting this crucial legislation, we have agreed to resolve any jurisdictional conflicts on this particular bill.

I appreciate your cooperation and courtesy in this matter.

With warm regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,
DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE], a valuable member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, trade is a problem in this country right now, particularly unfair trade. What this section of the bill deals with is absolutely an intolerable situation that exists in trade. What we have right now are countries that are dealing legally, trading items, sending them to this country or selling them to us, and at the same time perhaps dealing illegally in selling drugs to the United States and getting away with it. That is an absolutely intolerable situation. We should not tolerate that 1 minute longer.

I want to compliment my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee. We have brought to you a bill now that begins to shut that off. What it says is that if the President finds such a situation and that country is not cooperating with us in stopping the drug trafficking, we can take away from them their most-favored-nation status. We can take away from them their generalized system of preferences, both of which give them a favorable trade relation with the United States.

What that boils down to is that the President of the Untied States can double or even triple the tariffs on their goods coming into this country to get their attention.

I would have gone further. I would have absolutely gone for an embargo and shut them off completely, not let them trade in this country at all; but the practical effect of what the Ways and Means Committee has done is to make those goods coming into this country noncompetitive. They will not be able to sell them here if we double or triple the tariffs upon them. That is a good move, Mr. Chairman. We are moving to stop something that is absolutely idiotic and needs to be stopped. This situation where a country can sell legally to us on the one hand and illegally to us under the table, selling drugs in this country, poisoning our young people and our population, this bill will stop that. It is about time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act.

This antidrug bill is the first comprehensive approach the Congress has ever taken to coordinate a nationwide war against drugs. Illicit drugs do indeed constitute the Nation's biggest social problem. The drug war is clearly a national security priority and, as some have said, our Nation's first line of defense.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and as one of a handful of House and Senate Members who wrote to the Secretary of Defense a couple of years ago asking that a special wing be created for drug interdiction, I strongly support the provisions that authorize funding for the Defense Department to procure antidrug equipment to help in the interception and interdiction of illegal drug shipments inbound to the United States. The bill will also increase Coast Guard authorization for more personnel and equipment to stop the flow of illegal drugs into this country and assigns Coast Guard personnel to Navy ships to make arrests in drug smuggling areas.

The magnitude of the drug problem is frightening, and it is escalating at totally unacceptable levels. It is so massive that we can only grossly estimate what the total sales of illegal drugs is. Even with our recent stepped-up efforts to interdict and intercept illegal drugs, it is likely that less than 10 percent entering the country are ultimately confiscated. Then, we have the costs of this illegal trade in social and economic terms, which are devastating.

This bill, with its sweeping approach involving 12 separate House committees and the drug enforcement efforts by Federal, State, and local authorities, provides the best news for all Americans concerned with the inherent dangers of illegal drugs in our homes, our schools, in our workplaces, and on the street corners.

I strongly urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my 4½ minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I will reclaim the balance of the time.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Ways and Means Committee and also to thank them. They included most of the provisions in an earlier measure that I had, H.R. 5267.

This particular measure, I think, really addresses three problems that we have as far as the war on drugs is concerned. First of all, it has to do with flying time. I think most people are not aware of the fact that we only provide enough gas and oil and personnel to fly these aircraft for 8 hours a day, 5 days a week. That means that two-thirds of the time, even on the days they are flying, there is nothing up there, a complete void, nobody there, nobody at home, and on 2 days of the week there is absolutely no one there 24 hours a day, nothing at all.

Is it any wonder then that the overwhelming majority of these 18,000 flights a year that are coming into this country get through? I think not. The Ways and Means Committee has plugged that gap. They have provided them so that they can go 16 hours a day, 7 days a week. There will not be a day left in which a smuggler can come through and feel safe that there will not be someone up there checking.

Second, it has to do with the issue of interceptors. We heard from the gentleman from California earlier about the west coast, and he has had 30 airplanes a month coming through there and not caught a single one. The reason is because he does not have a single interceptor out in the San Diego region.

In fact, we look at the eight air support branches across the Southern part of the United States and we find that three out of those eight do not have a single interceptor, and most only have one. When those interceptors go in for maintenance, obviously there is no one there at all.

Third, it has to do with command and control. We find that much of the effort taking place across the United States is cowboy style. Everybody gets in an airplane and they go up to see if they can see anybody that looks suspicious, and you are on your own, you are out chasing. There is no command and control of the assets and resources across the entire United States as we try to shift and pick up the trends as the smugglers move from one region to the other seeking the most vulnerable parts of this protection and coverage that we have.

This particular legislation provides for command and control. For once, we are going to be able to pull together and utilize the resources and assets not just of the Customs Service or the Coast Guard, but also State and local law enforcement agencies, the military, as well as the FAA. We are going to be able to bring the resources of the United States to bear on these smugglers as they move across these regions.

That is what I find so hopeful and promising about this piece of legislation. It knits together the entire war on drugs. It is for the first time in the history of this Nation an honest to goodness war on drugs.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. Chairman, today we have before us omnibus legislation designed to help America start winning a war which we have been losing for some time, the war against drugs.

I support this measure, but not without some concern. My concern is based on the basic fact that this body has put together a $2 billion package in just a few weeks expecting it to cure a disease which has been eating away at our Nation for decades.

We are probably fooling ourselves in thinking that this bill will wipe out illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse in this country. Whether it be $2 billion or $50 billion our society will have great difficulty in stopping the supply of drugs. It takes no education, no skills and is highly rewarding to those who distribute drugs. There will always be those willing to risk losing their liberty by smuggling several pounds of cocaine for several millions of dollars.

I am not without hope, however. While the provisions of this omnibus legislation may make a dent in the overall problem, my main hope rests in educating the very young. Amazingly, the decision on whether to use or not use drugs begins at the very early age of 11½ years. What this Nation must do is to inculcate those from kindergarten through sixth grade on the absolute devastation using drugs causes. We need to demonstrate the evils of drugs by setting role models for these kids during the formative stages of their lives, before their peers tell them otherwise.

Of course, other steps need to be taken as well. Tougher enforcement, increased penalties, proper treatment and cooperation among nations. But unless we teach our children and our children's children of the evils of drugs, the battle will forever be lost.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, 2½ minutes, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, on the face of it, the omnibus drug legislation we have before us, H.R. 5484, has a noble purpose: "* * * to respond to the serious problem of illegal drug smuggling and the growing threat to this country from foreign-sourced drug production." There is no question that I, like the majority of American citizens, believe that we must do more as a country to address this most pressing issue. But while I wholeheartedly support the intent of the legislation, I have serious concern that the budgetary, policy, and resource implications have not been adequately taken into account. In my view, it is fiscally irresponsible to increase spending, as the bill would do in many ways, without a complete evaluation of how those tax dollars will be used.

Specifically, early in calendar year 1985, the Customs Service was operating under a hiring freeze. For fiscal 1986, the Customs Service presented a budget to the Ways and Means Committee that represented a very slight increase over fiscal year 1985. Although the Customs Service testified that they could fulfill their responsibilities based on this budget, the Congress has appropriated $717 million thus far in fiscal 1986 for the Customs Service. To put this in perspective, it represents an 11-percent increase from fiscal 1985.

H.R. 5484 also contains an authorization for the Customs Service of $1.3 billion in fiscal year 1987 to maintain existing programs and significantly expand drug interdiction efforts. This is an increase in their budget of 45 percent in 1 year. It is totally unrealistic to think additional programs of that magnitude can be brought on line so rapidly. If we are serious about effective drug enforcement we should spread this money over 3 years and see that new equipment and procedures are effectively implemented.

Once again Congress is pouncing on a severe problem with the politically popular but fiscally irresponsible approach of authorizing huge increases in expenditures before reviewing resources that are already available. We have devoted very little time to thoughtful consideration of this legislation.

Coordination and cooperation among the various agencies responsible for drug interdiction is essential for mounting a credible threat against the problem. Right now responsibility for drug interdiction is divided up among the Coast Guard, the Drug Enforcement Agency, the Customs Service, and the various services of the Department of Defense.

I think it is clear that these agencies fail to gather and share information collectively. The Committee on Government Operations reports that almost all coordination of communication between the Department of Defense and the civilian law enforcement agencies mentioned above takes place on a "case-by-case request basis" with little or no orchestration of efforts. As is often the case among agencies with similar responsibilities, more energy seems to be devoted to trying to claim credit for successful interdictions, than to coordinate the use of scarce Government resources.

In my view, many issues should be addressed ahead of funding increases. For example, how much of the air interdiction program could be handled by the military? Could not aircraft in simulated training missions be utilized more often for air interdiction in conjunction with their training? The military controls many assets that could be of great help in the war on drugs if there was a way to mesh its efforts together with those of the service and integrate missions into a coordinated system.

In another instance, we have not adequately reviewed where the customs marine interdiction program fits into the border law enforcement picture. Obviously, the Coast Guard also has important responsibility in this area. We should try to avoid competing independent efforts, and instead, promote cooperative use of resources that can effectively combat the drug problem. In my view, it is the Congress' duty to resolve these conflicts before approving such a hearty increase in the expenditure of tax dollars.

Later in the debate, I will offer two amendments to the Customs Service portion of the bill that I believe will improve the bill's chances for effective implementation. I urge my colleagues to support my amendments to spread new customs authorizations over a 3-year period, and to maintain the Customs Forfeiture Fund criteria as they exist in the recently enacted statute. These amendments will help to ensure effective drug control under a reasonable budget.

□ 1445

I think with the title III provisions which the Committee on Ways and Means had some jurisdiction over that amendment, coupled with another one that I have dealing with the Customs Forfeiture Fund, will greatly strengthen and enhance the quality of the bill.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], the Speaker, the majority leader, the minority leader, and all the others who have made such a wonderful contribution in this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, a few years back I lost my eldest born son to drugs, so I am a person who speaks from the heart and with great enthusiasm about doing something constructive in answering the problems of this terrible situation in our country today.

The real reason that I asked to speak at this particular moment is that earlier on there were some things said about the amendment which I expect to offer that were I think a little out of context.

The amendment which I expect to offer is one which passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 364 to 51. It is a very strong amendment, but it does protect against the military taking over civilian activities.

First of all, it says that the Attorney General shall certify that there are insufficient law-enforcement resources to have the military get into it at all, and second, it says that assistance has to be approved by the Secretary of Defense, and with the concurrence of the Secretary of State. Then it says that Federal drug enforcement officials maintain control over the activities and direction of any drug enforcement operation.

Finally, it says nothing in this subsection shall transfer the responsibility for enforcement of this to the Department of Defense.

So this is not a question of the military taking over a civilian activity, it is a question of the military being used by the civilian activity to enforce the law.

There is nothing new about this. President George Washington in 1794 used the military to put down the Whiskey Rebellion in Pennsylvania. President Eisenhower used it to integrate the schools of Little Rock. President Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson and others did the same sort of thing.

My amendment merely releases the heavy hand of the comitatus law so that the defense assets can be used by the civilians, and that is a proper thing. That is not the banana republic aspect. This is not the military taking over the civilian activities; it is the civilians using military assets.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS], who is representing the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on title IV.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am a cosponsor and strong supporter of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986.

No one can claim that passage of this legislation will eliminate the drug problem, but it does reflect a strong and serious response to a crisis that intimately and harmfully affects the lives of millions of American families, and that saves its greatest damage for the young.

The fight against illegal drugs is a marathon, not a sprint. The key to success will be persistence in educating the American people about the hazards of drug abuse, in reversing the peer pressure that encourages drug experimentation, in providing incentives for those now involved with drugs to go drug-free, and in making it more difficult to profit from trafficking in drugs.

The proposal before us today will make a difference, but only if—after approval by the House—it is also approved by the Senate, and signed by the President, and implemented through the appropriations process, and if the appropriations process is not then subverted by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. In this sense, the bill constitutes a litmus test for the White House and for others who have talked and talked and talked about the drug crisis, but who have also cut and cut and cut the budgets of the agencies charged with bringing this problem under control.

Because people care deeply about the drug problem, and because of the publicity surrounding recent tragedies stemming from drug abuse, this issue has become fertile ground for political folderol and hype.

But to those seriously concerned, neither drug abuse nor law enforcement are or ought to be considered partisan issues. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Coast Guard, I have worked closely with Members from both parties, and from all regions of the country, to make certain that the Coast Guard would have the tools it must have if it is to serve our country effectively. There is, after all, nothing partisan about a Coast Guard helicopter or patrol boat, or about the courage of the men and women who risk their lives daily in that service.

In developing its recommendations for this bill, the goal of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has been to bolster maritime drug interdiction efforts without requiring cutbacks in other Coast Guard missions. The Coast Guard should never have to choose between busting a drug smuggler and saving a fisherman or a family in danger at sea. The Coast Guard is expected to perform both missions, and it should have the resources required to do so.

The recommendations developed by our committee are incorporated in the bill as title IV, and would authorize $118 million in 1987 and $143 million in 1988 to:

Increase the military strength of the Coast Guard by 1,500, thereby restoring cuts made since the Reagan administration took office in 1981; and to authorize the purchase of secure communications and radar equipment required to improve the effectiveness of drug law enforcement operations.

Permit the operation by the Coast Guard of long-range air surveillance planes, if made available by the Navy, for the purpose of maritime air surveillance over the high seas;

Provide air-to-air search radar, night-vision equipment and other spare parts for eight Coast Guard falcon jets to enable them to assist in maritime air surveillance and interdiction operations; and Procure, upgrade, and operate a system of sea-based aerostats capable of both surface and air surveillance in support of the drug interdiction mission.

Given the scope of the problem and the level of concern that exists with respect to the use of illegal drugs in this country, the proposal put forward by our committee is extremely modest. It states simply that if you are serious about waging a war on drugs, you do not cut 1,500 military personnel from the Coast Guard—which the administration has done; you do not continue to permit Coast Guard communications to be open to whomever happens to feel like listening in; and you make an effort to stop those bringing in drugs by air, as well as those coming by sea.

Title IV of the bill states that—given adequate resources—the Coast Guard is the agency of the Federal Government that is best qualified to carry out drug interdiction and law enforcement operations upon the high seas and waters over which the United States has jurisdiction, and to carry out maritime air surveillance operations over the high seas to the extent required to support drug law enforcement operations in the United States. That sounds like simple common sense, except that some have taken it into their heads that the Air Force, or the Navy, or the Customs Service are somehow better qualified to carry out high seas maritime surveillance and interdiction operations than is the Coast Guard. That is not true, and this legislation says that it is not true.

Unlike the other armed services, the Coast Guard has a domestic law enforcement function that traces back to the founding of the Revenue Cutter Service, during the first years of our Nation's history. Those calling for the Navy or Army or Air Force to move beyond a support role to direct frontline involvement in the battle against drug abuse seem to forget, first of all, the importance of the other missions performed by those services, and second, the difficulties involved in carrying out law enforcement operations in a professional manner. Law enforcement is not a job for amateurs; without specialized training, mistakes will be made, innocent people will get hurt, and—due to procedural errors—convictions in court will be rare.

Those seeking to vastly expand mili tary involvement in drug law enforcement need look no further than the Coast Guard, the only institution that is already both a law enforcement agency and a uniformed military service.

Title IV of the bill also states that:

> Nothing in the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986 shall require the Coast Guard to recruit, compensate, train, purchase or deploy any personnel or equipment except to the extent that additional appropriations are made available, in appropriations acts, for that purpose.

This provision is necessary to make certain that requirements imposed by other titles of the bill will not cause the Coast Guard to divert existing resources from current missions. Title XI, for example, seeks to require the Coast Guard to assign and maintain a certain number of patrol boats in the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands. Title IV makes it clear that this requirement must only be fulfilled if additional funds are made available, through appropriations acts, for this specific purpose.

I am pleased by the contribution that our committee has made to this legislation, and I salute, in particular, the chairman of the full committee, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, and the ranking minority member, Mr. DAVIS of Michigan.

I urge Members to support the omnibus antidrug bill as it has been brought to the floor, to reject divisive or mischievous amendments, and to encourage prompt and favorable action in the other body.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986.

We have maintained a national effort to control drug abuse in this country for some time. However, it has become clear that these efforts have not been able to reverse the increasing use of drugs in this country. It seems that it is only the popularity of different drugs that has changed.

Where drug use was considered a problem of the poor or maladjusted among our citizens, today it is a fact of life throughout our society. Our children are using drugs with frightening regularity. For many it is considered recreation. But there is nothing playful about the tragic consequences of drug abuse.

What we have before us today is an extraordinary effort, to have an effect on this disastrous turn of events in our Nation's history. We cannot pretend that this legislation, or any legislation in itself, will solve the problem. But we have to try. We know that we need better education. We know that we need better interdiction. We know that we need better enforcement. These are things we have to do just to begin.

Title IV of this bill contains the work of our committee in an effort to see that the Coast Guard has the equipment, manpower, and funding to do its part in this effort. It is important that the Coast Guard maintain the ability to fight the war on drugs, but not at the expense of its other missions—search and rescue, fisheries enforcement, or military readiness, for example.

Title IV would provide the Coast Guard with $118 million in fiscal year 1987 and $143 million in fiscal year 1988 for:

One thousand five hundred additional military personnel it desperately needs.

Secure communications equipment. Unbelievably, one of the Coast Guard's major interdiction problems is that smugglers are listening to Coast Guard radio communications.

Air-to-air search radar, night vision equipment, and spare parts for eight Coast Guard falcon jets.

Procurement and operation of sea-based aerostats for both air and surface surveillance.

As reported by our committee, the legislation included funding for the operation of Navy aircraft if made available to the Coast Guard. That funding does not appear in this package. Whether the Coast Guard will get this aircraft is, I believe, still under consideration. I feel very strongly that the Coast Guard should be allowed to take the lead in air interdiction over the high seas and waters under the jurisdiction of the United States. This is a policy decision that as yet has not been made by this administration. It is a decision which needs to be made and, as I understand it, this legislation directs the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board to make that determination. I hope the decision will be made in a rational manner, after careful consideration of the resources and capabilities of the Coast Guard, and its unique position as a military force with domestic law enforcement missions.

Sections 304 and 307 of the proposed bill amend customs law to clarify and strengthen reporting requirements for those arriving in the United States. A concern has been expressed by some Members about the applicability of these requirements—in particular, those contained in section 307 (amending 19 U.S.C 1459)—to the operators of recreational vessels.

Further, a technical amendment to section 12109 of title 46, United States Code, is to be adopted. This addition to the shipping laws is merely to give notice that, although documented recreational vessels are exempt from entering or clearing with the Customs Service, all other applicable customs regulations must be met. In particular, the requirement to report an arrival as contemplated under sections 304 and 307 of this bill applies. The paperwork of entering and clearing with customs is designed primarily for commercial vessels and is therefore unnecessary and inconvenient for recreational boaters. The exemption in section 12109 in no way detracts from the law enforcement capability of the Customs Service.

The authors of this language note that the reporting requirements of the bill—including all of those applicable to recreational boaters—are to be determined through regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and that the Secretary has sufficient discretion in developing these regulations. Accordingly, we expect these regulations to produce a reporting system that will be enforceable and that will be applied appropriately and sensibly to those subject to its requirements. We do not expect, for example, that recreational boaters returning from a day trip or other brief excursion to a foreign port will ordinarily be required to report in person to a customs facility, or that obtaining authorization for these boaters to depart their vessel will prove to be a complicated or burdensome endeavor.

The overall purpose of these amendments is to strengthen the hand of the Customs Service in carrying out its drug law enforcement program. Any additional reporting requirements or enforcement measures should be developed and implemented for that purpose, keeping in mind the convenience and the need for continued cooperation and good will on the part of the innocent majority.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend our chairman, Mr. JONES, and the chairman of the Coast Guard Subcommittee, Mr. STUDDS, for their extraordinary efforts to bring to this package the unanimous recommendations of our committee.

□ 1455

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. JACK FIELDS.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the spirit and intent of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986.

I agree that an all-out war on drug trafficking and drug abuse is the only way that the United States will be able to gain at least a modicum of control over the situation that threatens national security. I am an advocate of strengthened law enforcement and drug interdiction measures. I am pleased to see in this package before us that we will provide the necessary tools to the various law enforcement agencies to be more effective, such as those contained in the provisions of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, of which I am a member.

I also agree that critical to the success of a comprehensive drug control program is the realization that the demand for drugs must be diminished and, hopefully—finally, eradicated. Toward that end, I support the intent of the provisions of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, also of which I am a member. It is incumbent upon us in Congress, the President, State, and local officials, teachers, health professionals, parents, and friends, to use our influence—to spread the word that drug use is not acceptable.

Employers must tell employees that drug use will not be tolerated because it interferes with productivity. The United States' economy cannot afford to have its productivity crippled. Our inaction is tantamount to tacit approval of drug use. We must acknowledge our responsibility to say no to drugs. If an employee refuses to say no, the employer must say no for him or her.

Parents and teachers must educate our children that drug use is dangerous and wrong. Drug use by our young people only serves to guarantee a life of mediocrity. Drug use diminishes mental capacity and functioning and physical stamina. Furthermore, drug use arrests emotional development and sentences our youth to a life characterized by the inability to cope with life's situations. Instead, let's arrest and sentence drug pushers before they have the chance to peddle their poison.

Perhaps most important and most effective, friends should tell friends that they do not accept their drug use. Peer pressure and positive example often prove to be more effective in stifling drug use than negative example, horror stories, and preaching. Friends need to tell friends that they do not like to be around them when under the influence of drugs. Friends need to be told that they must seek help with their problem or they will find themselves without friends, without family, without employment, without a prayer.

Although I generally support a very limited role for the Federal Government in education, I believe the drug abuse crisis is a national problem which necessitates a national response. The realization that intensified efforts in interdiction, traditionally a Federal responsibility, is not enough to eradicate the drug abuse crisis, leads me to support increased Federal activity in drug abuse education and prevention.

I am pleased to be able to say that I serve on two committees which address the drug abuse crisis from the supply and demand perspectives. The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee provisions of H.R. 5484 will serve to improve air surveillance and drug interdiction on the high seas. The provisions enable the Coast Guard to draw on the expertise and sophisticated equipment of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Although I and my Republican colleagues voiced reservations about the Energy and Commerce Committee provisions during committee consideration, I support the intent of those provisions. Prevention, treatment and rehabilitation are critical to a successful comprehensive drug control program. However, I have some concern that the provisions as reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee somewhat overlap other provisions or duplicate current efforts by other responsible bodies.

I am not opposed to an infusion of new funds where needed for this cause, and they definitely are needed for the end purposes as stated by the committee. But, I am opposed to spending that money inefficiently. The creation of more bureaucracy, which Energy and Commerce proposes to do, is, in my estimation, spending money inefficiently.

Given the extent of this drug abuse crisis and the severe limitations on Federal resources, we cannot afford inefficiency and ineffectiveness. Therefore, I will support amendments that will be offered to the Energy and Commerce provisions to ensure the more effective expenditure of Federal funds.

Mr. Chairman, again I support this legislation in principle, although I am not happy with all of the provisions. The foreboding situation our Nation faces forces us to act now, and that I am confident we will do concertedly.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the omnibus antidrug legislation that is before us.

What we want and what we need is a tough and comprehensive drug policy that will protect all of us from the insidious threats of drug use and drug addiction. We want a policy that will get the pushers out of our schoolyards and drugs off of our streets.

Headline grabbing gimmicks like drug tests for the President's Cabinet members are, frankly, a tragic hoax. What we need today are drug education and treatment programs, increased penalties for drug traffickers, more aggressive enforcement of antidrug laws and improved interdiction activities at our Nation's borders.

This bill provides all of these important reforms and more and its passage is essential to removing the blight of drug use and drug addiction from our homes, our schools, and our neighborhoods.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUDDS. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] a question and to clarify one point with the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, section 403 of title 4 amends section 89 of title 14, United States Code, to provide that Coast Guard officers shall arrest any individual when it is indicated that a violation of the laws has been committed. Am I correct that arrests under this section must be based on the constitutional predicate of probable cause?

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct. Probable cause is required for an arrest of an individual, just as it is required for seizure of a vessel or aircraft under subsection (b)(2) of section 89.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY], who is a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, many of us, myself included, had an opportunity to go to south Florida not too long ago to witness the efforts by the Coast Guard and the Navy in the drug effort by the Vice President's task force down there.

One of the things that struck me when we had a chance to visit was the apparent inability to control some of the flow of illegal drugs by those two components, the Coast Guard and the Navy. We saw it with our own eyes. We did see an opportunity for the Coast Guard to christen two new cutters that were used in the drug trade and that have been very effective, but from a manpower standpoint, it was very difficult.

I am pleased to know and discover that in this legislation, we have increased the amount of money available to the Coast Guard and in allowing our military to be more involved, not only in south Florida, but throughout the areas where the drugs are the most prevalent.

This will give them, in my estimation, the tools that we have to have. The Coast Guard kept emphasizing to our committee and to the Members down there that this is what they needed. They did not want necessarily to be pleading for more money, but it was very clear when we interviewed those people down there and saw what they were up against on a day-to-day basis what they needed.

In one example we saw down there, a truck that was parked along the coast was used to fill up illegal drugs. When the truck box was filled up, it was ultimately taken to Miami.

We asked them how often they filled that truck up to be taken to Miami to be incinerated and they said once a week. That was just from one area down in the Keys as to how much drugs were taken out of there and taken up to Miami to be incinerated.

That gave us some idea about the vastness of the drug problem in the south Florida task force. I do want to speak in strong support of this legislation.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS], for his courtesy in yielding this time to me, and I want to compliment the leadership of the House for moving forward so expeditiously with this omnibus antidrug legislation.

I have been involved in efforts to fight drug abuse and illegal trafficking of drugs for over 30 years, starting as a young prosecutor in New York. I have never, in all that time, seen as much concern on the part of the people of the city of New York, and especially in my district, which is being made up of a large number of small communities in many ways equivalent to small towns, regarding the devastation that is being wreaked upon the people, and especially the younger people, because of the abuse of illicit drugs.

So it seems to me that this effort is not only well-intended, but it is absolutely essential. We simply cannot allow the continued destruction of so many lives.

What is important to note about this bill is the comprehensive approach it takes. Education and rehabilitation are as important components as the various aspect of law enforcement.

Narcotics abuse is a complex problem and this legislation attempts to deal with its complexities.

□ 1505

I fervently hope that in the course of the amending process that we do not see the adoption of mischievous amendments which in fact will negate our efforts and which may make it impossible to support the amended version of the bill.

Members should not be forced to choose between fighting the drug menace, upholding the Constitution or violating basic moral principles.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. Chairman, no one can claim that passage of this legislation will eliminate the drug problem, but it does reflect a strong and serious response to a crisis that intimately and harmfully affects the lives of millions of American families, and that saves its greatest damage for the young.

The fight against illegal drugs is a marathon, not a sprint. The key to success will be persistence and educating the American people about the hazards of drug abuse, in reversing the peer pressure that encourages drug experimentation, in providing incentive for those now involved with drugs to go drug free, and in making it more difficult to profit from trafficking in drugs.

The proposal before us today will make a difference, but only if after approval by the House it is also approved by the Senate and signed by the President and implemented through the appropriations process and if the appropriations process is not then subverted by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

In this sense, this effort constitutes a litmus test for the White House and for others who have talked and talked about the drug crisis, but who have also cuts and cut the budgets of the agencies charged with bringing this problem under control.

Because people care deeply about the drug problem and because of the publicity surrounding recent tragedy stemming from drug abuse, this issue has become fertile ground for political and Federal hype.

To those seriously concerned, neither drug abuse nor law enforcement are or ought to be considered partisan issues.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Coast Guard, I have worked closely with Members from both parties, and from all regions of the country, to make certain that the Coast Guard would have the tools it must have if it is to serve our country effectively.

There is, after all, nothing partisan about a Coast Guard helicopter or patrol boat, or about the courage of the men and women who risk their lives daily in that service.

Mr. Chairman, let me just finally say that I doubt that there is dissent, at least in the absence of controversial amendments; I doubt that there is dissent about the thrust, the contents, and certainly not about the intent of this bill.

I should also like to reiterate that passage of this bill will not solve the problem. This is an authorizing bill. There are real dollars that are needed, and those dollars I frankly do not know where they are going to come from given the budget process under which we are operating at the moment.

If in the remaining time there are Members who would care to enlighten this Member, how, given the constraints of Gramm-Rudman and other things under which we have operated here for the past few months we are going to find this money, I would be interested to hear it. I hope that we can.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in response to a request by the Speaker and Minority Leader MICHEL, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported H.R. 5406, to be used as its portion of the omnibus antidrug bill. Our portion of the bill was developed in a true bipartisan fashion and is included as title IV of the omnibus bill, H.R. 5484 which we debate today. Title IV focuses on areas within the jurisdiction of our committee, most specifically on the responsibilities of the U.S. Coast Guard.

Currently, the imbalanced between the responsibilities placed upon the Coast Guard and the resources which it has been given to perform those duties has hindered the Coast Guard in the performance of its missions. To counter this situation, title IV enables the Coast Guard to enhance its drug interdiction efforts without compromising its ability to perform its more traditional and equally important responsibilities such as vessel safety and fisheries enforcement.

To that end, the legislation authorizes $118 million in additional funding for the Coast Guard in fiscal year 1987 and $143 million in fiscal year 1988. These funds will be used for the following purposes:

Provide for the recruitment of 1,500 additional military personnel, restoring personnel levels to what they were in 1981. Most of the additional personnel will be assigned to patrol boats thereby allowing for two-man boarding parties while leaving two personnel on board to operate the patrol boat. Additional remaining personnel would be used for the cooperative effort between the Coast Guard and the Navy to place Coast Guard boarding teams [TACLETS] on appropriate Navy vessels.

Purchase secure communications equipment to eliminate unauthorized monitoring of Coast Guard communications.

Install improved radar equipment in existing Coast Guard aircraft.

Procure six sea-based aerostats for long range surface radar surveillance, as well as the upgrading of existing aerostats, and

Provide for necessary funding to operate and maintain surveillance aircraft in the event that the Coast Guard is properly deemed responsible for maritime air surveillance.

Central to our title is a provision which states that:

Nothing in the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986 shall require the Coast Guard to recruit, compensate, train, purchase, or deploy any personnel or equipment except to the extent that additional appropriations are made available, in appropriations acts, for that purpose.

This language is included to insure that the Coast Guard will never be placed in the position of having to choose between its important role of saving lives at sea and that of halting the flow of illegal drugs onto our Nation's shores.

The committee believes that its contribution to H.R. 5484 will properly man and equip the Coast Guard in order to fight and to win its battles in this all too deadly war.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back whatever time I have left to the manager of the bill on our side, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN], the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, drug trafficking—from the street corner to the international crime syndicates—depends on access to this Nation's legitimate financial institutions.

H.R. 5176, as reported by the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee and incorporated in this omnibus package, slams the door shut on the use of banks and other financial institutions to launder funds derived from drug trafficking.

No longer would we allow banks to be laundromats for organized crime.

Mr. Chairman, we're not talking about your 75-cent laundromat. We're talking about a $50 to $60 billion a year habit—the amount of illegal money laundered through financial institutions annually.

Organized crime and drug dealers must be able to wash their dirty money and slip it into other channels of commerce undetected. Without this access to the American financial system, organized crime is crippled and its activities laid open to law enforcement agencies.

The legislation reported by the Banking Committee puts the full force of the financial regulatory agencies, the Treasury Department, the Justice Department, and, yes, the banking industry against these criminal elements.

Mr. Chairman, 16 years ago, I participated in the successful passage of the Bank Secrecy Act which has provided a paper trail to assist law enforcement agencies in tracking drug operations and other criminal activity.

Unfortunately, this act has been poorly enforced and that is why the legislation reported by our committee overhauls, expands, and strengthens the compliance and enforcement procedures.

The bill would send the money launderers to jail and fine them as much as $1 million. It would also provide for seizure of cash or property of any person who participated in a scheme to willfully evade the reporting requirements.

The legislation would require financial institutions to establish and maintain specific procedures for compliance with the currency reporting law and would authorize the regulatory agencies to use cease and desist powers and civil money penalties to require institutions to comply.

We also strengthen change in bank control statutes to assure there is a full investigation of the background of persons seeking to acquire financial institutions.

In addition to preventing organized crime from laundering funds in the front lobby, we must make certain we don't let this element come in through the back door as owners of these institutions.

The legislation also authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue summons for documents and testimony to obtain evidence of money laundering. The current law requires all transactions of $10,000 or more to be reported, but our bill would authorize the Secretary of Treasury to lower that amount if required to prevent money laundering in any area of the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the Banking Committee's section of this legislation is the product of long years of oversight of the Bank Secrecy Act, investigative hearings involving such celebrated cases as the criminal charges against the Bank of Boston, staff studies and consultations with Members of Congress, regulatory and law enforcement agencies across the Nation. I feel very good about the legislative product that we have brought to the House and I am confident that it provides significant new tools and sharpened weapons in the war against drug trafficking—a war that must be won unconditionally.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs passed and ordered reported, with amendments, on July 22, 1986, H.R. 5176, the Comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act, by a vote of 47-0. Title V of the omnibus drug bill embodies the provisions of H.R. 5176 as passed by the Banking Committee. Prior to passing H.R. 5176, the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance (which I also have the honor and privilege of chairing) held 4 days of comprehensive legislative hearings, and heard 15 witnesses, including those who represented the administration's position on money laundering. Indeed, it is gratifying that the Departments of Justice and Treasury, which represented the administration's views, expressed their support for H.R. 5176 as follows:

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in reference to H.R. 5176, the Comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act, which your Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance reported to the Committee on July 17, 1986. You are to be congratulated for your leadership in drafting this important piece of legislation. The Department of Justice believes it can make an important difference in our efforts to combat money laundering and we support its thrust and we greatly appreciate your extensive work in this area. . . . . (Portion of letter from John R. Bolton, Assistant Attorney General, Department of Justice, to Chairman St Germain, dated July 20, 1986.)

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am gratified to see that the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, which you chair, has reported out H.R. 5176. This bill, if passed by Congress, would provide the Department of the Treasury with a number of powers that would significantly endance its capabilities to deal with the problem of money laundering. . . . . (Portion of letter from Francis A. Keating, II Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Enforcement, to Chairman St Germain, dated August 15, 1986.)

H.R. 5176 (now title V), introduced by me with 31 members of the Banking Committee as cosponsors, is a consensus bill which was drafted to take into consideration the provisions contained in money laundering bills introduced by a number of members of the Banking Committee, as well as some who were not. Thus, H.R. 5176 not only received the full support of the members of the Banking Committee (and in that regard, I wish to especially thank the ranking minority member of the committee, Mr. WYLIE), but also the cooperation of the members of the Judiciary and Ways and Means Committees, as well.

Also, at this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank Messrs. RODINO and ROSTENKOWSKI, chairmen of the Committees on the Judiciary and Ways and Means, respectively, and Mr. HUGHES, chairman of the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Crime, for their cooperation; and a very special thank you should go to my dear friend and colleague, Mr. PICKLE, whose bill, H.R. 4573, is incorporated into the committee's reported legislation and which constitutes a key element in title V of the Omnibus drug bill.

In addition, the Government Operations Committee, particularly its Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs, chaired by our very able colleague, DOUG BARNARD (who also is a member of the Banking Committee) provided incisive and comprehensive oversight hearings and a committee report on criminal misconduct and insider abuse in the Nation's financial institutions, which have been of great assistance to our committee. Certain legislative recommendations of the Government Operations Committee have been adopted in H.R. 5176, and I am deeply grateful to Mr. BARNARD and the Chairman of the full Committee, Mr. BROOKS, for that committee's contribution.

Mr. Chairman, it is important to note that the Banking Committee's interest in combating money laundering, especially as it involves drug trafficking and other organized crime activities, did not begin with the 4 days of legislative hearings referred to earlier. As a matter of fact, the Banking Committee has always played a vital role in efforts to wipe out all kinds of criminal activities which use financial institutions to accomplish illegal ends.

As early as 1970, the House Banking Committee displayed its interest and involvement in the war on organized criminals, drug traffickers, tax evaders, and various other white-collar criminals by reporting out what is known as the Bank Secrecy Act. The act, among other things, established dollar amount reporting thresholds for large cash transactions which were designed to track down the illicit cash proceeds derived from criminal activity. The Bank Secrecy Act is the cornerstone of all anti-money laundering initiatives that have followed since its initial passage, and amendments to that act comprise an extremely important part of title V which we are considering today.

Furthermore, the House Banking Committee has held numerous oversight hearings on the Bank Secrecy Act, including several that have given impetus to reports by the General Accounting Office [GAO] or enforcement by the Treasury Department of the act itself. These oversight activities culminated in the committee's hearings in the early spring of 1985 on the First National Bank of Boston and the Shawmut Bank of Boston, which highlighted both industry and regulatory agency deficiencies with regard to the Bank Secrecy Act.

The committee's investigative hearings on money laundering, beginning with the Bank of Boston hearing in April 1985, along with that bank's guilty plea to violating the Bank Secrecy Act, have caused other banks to flood the Office of Enforcement and Operations of the Treasury Department to negotiate civil money penalties for violations of that act. This sudden repentance, dubbed by some as "Dial-A-Confession," has resulted in civil penalties against 19 banks since June of last year. The penalties imposed against those banks exceeded $13 million. Many of the 19 are among the largest banks in the country, with penalties assessed going as high as $4.75 million against the Bank of America in January 1986.

Further, according to the Department of the Treasury, as of July 2, 1986, there were 177 investigations that the IRS Criminal Investigation Division had authorized for possible criminal violations of the currency transaction reporting requirements. All but 25 involve financial institutions that are regulated by a bank supervisory agency. As appalling as this is, it should come as no surprise that drug dealers have to have access to financial institutions in order to carry out the illicit sales of drugs in the United States which are estimated to be between $50 and $75 billion each year. And that is a conservative figure.

Without access to the U.S. financial system, drug dealers are crippled and their activities are exposed to law enforcement authorities. Title V of the omnibus drug bill, in a very substantial way, closes drug dealers' access to financial institutions for their illegal profit. Following is a general summary of what title V, subtitle A, does:

First. Section 502 strikes a crushing blow to the criminal elements in our society (especially the drug traffickers) who abuse our Nation's financial institutions to further their illegal gains. Extensive testimony received by the committee establishes the fact that billions of dollars are laundered annually by drug dealers and other criminals by using banks and other financial institutions.

To remedy this abhorrent situation, section 502 expressly subjects to potential criminal and civil liability any person who causes a financial institution to fail to file a required report under the Bank Secrecy Act, or who structures a transaction in order to evade the reporting requirements of that act. Under existing law, a financial institution is required to file a CTR [Currency Transaction Report] for any transaction of currency over $10,000.

These money laundering schemes are called "smurfing," and one who does the smurfing is called a "smurf." In a typical situation, the smurf goes to several financial institutions to convert drug cash into negotiable instruments (such as cashier's checks) for amounts of under $10,000, to avoid the currency reporting requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act.

Section 502 of the bill is meant to resolve a number of conflicting U.S. appellate court decisions as to whether smurfing schemes are a crime, and specifically whether the reporting responsibilities for such transactions are placed solely upon the financial institution. By expressly subjecting to potential liability a person who causes or attempts to cause a financial institution to fail to file a required report or who causes a financial institution to file a required report containing misstatements or material omissions of fact, section 502 resolves the legal issues raised by the circuit courts. Also it creates an offense of structuring a transaction to evade the reporting requirements, without regard for whether an individual transaction is itself, reportable under the Bank Secrecy Act.

Second. Section 503 authorizes, for the first time, the seizure and forfeiture of cash, or property related to such cash, of any individual who knowingly has caused a financial institution to fail to file a CTR. It expands IRS's authority to provide for such seizure and forfeiture of currency and other monetary instruments, under title 26 of the Tax Code, and section 504 imposes a civil money penalty on anyone who knowingly or with reckless disregard violates the structuring transaction prohibition. I would note, Mr. Chairman, that sections 502, 503, and 504 are the result of the major work contributed by Mr. PICKLE, to whom I referred earlier. In that regard, the Banking and Ways and Means Committees have worked harmoniously in this area, and it is further evidence of the cooperation that our committee has received from that committee.

Third. Section 505 enhances detection and prevention of money laundering schemes. It is also designed to prevent further abuse and improve detection by enhancing regulatory agency supervision over financial institutions in Bank Secrecy Act compliance. Institutions are required to establish and to maintain procedures to assure compliance, and the regulatory agencies are required to review these procedures in each examination and to fully describe problems in examination reports. The agencies are given both cease-and-desist powers and the authority to impose civil money penalties.

The Banking Committee regards banking examiners as "cops on the beat." They are the first line of defense in combating drug money laundering schemes using financial institutions. These provisions of the act are designed to help the "cops on the beat" by providing them with the tools to monitor compliance and to enforce it, where necessary, to compel the establishment of proper procedures. Not only will these requirements serve to motivate banks to adhere to the adage of "know thy customer," they also lay the foundation for constructive improvements in both the prevention and detection of money laundering cases.

Such abuses cannot be tolerated, and the survival of drug traffickers will be severely curtailed if their ill-gotten gains from drugs are detected and cut off.

Fourth. Sections 507, 515, 516, and 517 amend the Change in Bank Control Act to increase the time banking regulators are given to investigate individuals who are attempting to acquire banks and savings and loans. They also require the banking agencies to conduct their investigations of such individuals to closely scrutinize the notice applications and, if need be, to subpoena witnesses and documents of those persons or entities proposing to acquire such control. Recently, there was a case in Florida in which the FDIC removed the directors and officers of a certain bank. These individuals and their associates, who had acquired control of that bank, were drug dealers. As important as prosecution and conviction are, it is equally, if not more, important to provide for the detection and prevention of these illegal acts through vigorous regulatory bank examinations. This provision goes a long way to strengthen the banking regulators' ability to crack down on drug trafficking, such as the Florida case to which I have just referred. A major contribution in this area was made by Mr. WORTLEY of our committee, and Mr. BARNARD.

Fifth. Section 508 directs that the Secretary of the Treasury take certain corrective actions. It allows the Secretary of the Treasury to order financial institutions individually, or as a group located in certain geographic regions, to obtain and retain information involving cash transactions of over $3,000. Similar authority is given the Secretary for the cash sale of bank checks, cashier's checks, traveler's checks, or money orders of over $3,000 as well.

Our hearings revealed that Miami and Los Angeles were favorite localities for money launderers. The targeted recordkeeping and reporting requirements are necessary to ensure that the Secretary has all the necessary authority to monitor suspected activity at an individual institution, or in a specific geographic location. While such broad authority to target may already exist, the need to prod Treasury's vigilance in this area, given its past performance, is apparent in order to compel its commitment of sufficient resources and to stress the importance of such targeting, where appropriate. I wish to thank our colleague, Mr. TORRES, for his valuable contribution to this section of the bill.

Sixth. Section 510 amends the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 to clarify the type and amount of information the financial institution can voluntarily give to law enforcement authorities without notifying the customer. Under the act, customers, in most instances, must be notified that a demand for his or her records has been made, and afforded an opportunity to challenge such access in a court of law. There are, however, several important exceptions to the notice and challenge requirements, not the least of which is the exception for a grand jury subpoena. The Right to Financial Privacy Act seeks to strike a balance between the privacy rights of bank customers and the need of law enforcement agencies to obtain financial records in legitimate investigations. Section 510(a) continues to strike that balance. Section 510(a) clarifies the type of information a financial institution (or its officers and employees) may voluntarily give to law enforcement officials under 12 U.S.C. 3403(c). Specifically, section 510(a) would permit an institution to provide such officials the names, addresses, account numbers, the nature of and a description of the possible violation. No information provided under this subsection may include the financial records of a customer. It clarifies existing law by expressly defining the extent or type of information includable in a notification to proper law enforcement authorities, and responds to doubt and misgivings raised by financial institutions and their bank counsel on this matter. It also preempts State or local law which would otherwise prohibit disclosure.

Section 510(b) exempts financial institutions from the notification requirements to insiders of financial institutions under RFPA. It permits a financial institution or a supervisory agency to provide to Federal or State law enforcement agencies the financial records of any officer, director, employee, or controlling shareholder of such institution whenever there is reason to believe that such records are relevant to possible criminal activity against financial institutions.

RFPA was never meant to protect those insiders who violate their position of trust and who may also have an account at the institution in which they serve, and the Congress will not tolerate such conduct.

Seventh. Section 511 provides the Secretary of the Treasury with civil summons authority to assist in carrying out Bank Secrecy Act responsibilities. It gives the Treasury Department civil summons authority to examine a financial institution's records and to obtain testimony of its employees for investigating civil violations of the Bank Secrecy Act. It is designed to enhance Treasury's authority over miscellaneous nonbank financial institutions such as foreign currency brokers, whose examination responsibility has been delegated to the Internal Revenue Service. Treasury could also use this authority if a bank was noncooperative in civil penalty cases, or to follow up on noncompliance in bank examinations.

Eighth. Section 512 makes more stringent the qualification for exemptions. It also improves the Bank Secrecy Act by requiring more scrutiny of an institution's so-called "exempt list" of enterprises that need not make reports of currency transactions. It also improves procedures for maintaining such lists, and getting them on such exempt lists. As our hearings on the Bank of Boston showed, where firms controlled by reputed organized crime figures appeared on the exempt list, much more care and scrutiny is needed in this area. Therefore, Treasury, under section 512, will be required to review all exemptions when an institution undergoes a change in control or management.

Furthermore, institutions would be required to provide a detailed description of why a person is qualified for an exemption, the signature of the person receiving the exemption, and a certification to Treasury that the person is qualified for it. It is expected that past abuses of the use of these "exempt lists" will be eliminated.

Ninth. Section 518 requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to initiate discussions with central bank government officials of other countries to establish an exchange system of information geared to eliminate the international flow of money derived from illicit drug operations and other illegal activities.

Realistically, Mr. Chairman, it is virtually impossible to control the international flow of illicit narcotics from foreign countries without their cooperation. Our recent hearings demonstrate that the use of offshore banks for money laundering purposes has increased substantially. Of the $50-$75 billion that is estimated to be earned annually by drug trafficking in this country, $5-$15 billion of that sum is attributed to offshore operations from countries that have so-called bank secrecy laws.

Banks in this country, as well as banks in bank secrecy countries, are essential components in the entire offshore money laundering scheme. Banks have what the money launderer needs to be successful. They have the physical facilities to accept large amounts of cash, issue checks, make loans, and receive or send funds by wire.

By requiring the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to initiate discussions with foreign government officials and central bankers, section 518 provides an essential step in eliminating drug trafficking from the shores of this country.

Tenth. Section 519 provides substantial criminal penalties by increasing the maximum $500,000 under current law to up to $1 million for an individual and up to $5 million for a financial institution when there is willful violation of the act which involves a violation of another law or which constitutes a pattern of illegal activity.

Mr. Chairman, in summary, title V of the omnibus drug bill is primarily designed to deter, detect, and prevent the drug trafficker from abusing financial institutions for their ill-gotten profits. The abuse of our Nation's financial institutions for these dastardly deeds will not be tolerated. In the final analysis, drug trafficking cannot survive without its intricate web of financial dealings and use of financial institutions to secure its profits. Title V of this bill, if fully implemented, will strike a severe and crippling blow to drug dealing and other organized crime.

Mr. Chairman, in our Nation's Capital at the present time, there are, unfortunately, certain politicians who think that taking "pot shots" at Federal employees will somehow secure those politicians' return to Washington. And all too often, the Federal employee is used as the scapegoat for all the ills that befall the executive branch of this Government. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, as we debate the omnibus drug bill, that there are two outstanding civil servants who deserve special praise for their work in combating, among other crimes, drug trafficking and money laundering, and who stand as the highest examples of dedication to the public interest.

One is Robert Stankey, now retired after many, many years as a Treasury employee, who dedicated a good deal of these years to combating drug trafficking in the Office of Financial Enforcement at Treasury. Bob was with Treasury at the time of the inception of the Bank Secrecy Act, and he, at Treasury, more than any other person, was responsible for the development of that act into an effective law enforcement tool and the cornerstone in Treasury's financial law enforcement program. The Banking Committee relied heavily on Mr. Stankey's expertise over the many years, and he is an outstanding example of what a dedicated public servant can do despite the lack of resources and commitment of his superiors over these years.

The second individual I would like to give recognition to today, is Richard Wassenaar, Assistant Commissioner (Criminal Investigation), Internal Revenue Service. Mr. Wassenaar, who began his Government career as a special agent with IRS in Chicago in 1963, rose through the ranks to become the first Assistant Commissioner for Criminal Investigation, IRS, in May 1982. In 1983, he was a recipient of the President's Meritorious Service Award. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Wassenaar's recent testimony before the Banking Committee and his tireless efforts in working with the members and committee staff on drug trafficking and money laundering, have made a lasting and invaluable contribution to the Comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act, now title V of the omnibus drug bill.

Mr. Stankey is now retired and Mr. Wassenaar is presently afflicted with a serious illness. Their dedication to public service, and especially their particular contributions in combating drug trafficking and money laundering, will never be forgotten by this member, and I am sure I speak for all members of the Banking Committee, as well.

□ 1515

Mr. Chairman, I am proud of the fact that our committee once again acted in a truly bipartisan manner in this legislation. I commend the Members on my side of the aisle, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. LUNDINE, Mr. TORRES, and Mr. BARNARD, in fact each and every Member, for their total dedication toward achieving an excellent bill. On the other side of the aisle CHALMERS WYLIE, our ranking minority member, extended throughout the legislative process his total cooperation. GEORGE WORTLEY, in the area of international central bank cooperation with his hearing attendance and extensive investigative activity, contributed significantly to the final result. BILL MCCOLLUM, by his service on both Judiciary and Banking, is entitled to great credit and that is why we have come up with a great title V. What a team we have had.

It is my hope that this legislation will be adopted unanimously, expeditiously, and signed into law at an early date.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN] has consumed 8 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the ranking member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill to strengthen the efforts of our Government to overcome the epidemic of drug addiction sweeping our country. I will speak to title V, which is the Banking Committee title, but I want to recognize first, the importance of the leadership contribution to this omnibus bill which we have before us and to other committee members who have contributed to the process of this landmark legislation which is before us today.

I, too, want to compliment the chairman of the full Banking Committee, Mr. ST GERMAIN, for his diligent efforts in bringing us here today. He and I introduced legislation back in July to stop money laundering schemes and smurfing and to help make drug trafficking a business which is going out of business, we hope.

Subtitle A of title V—the comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act amends the Bank Secrecy Act, the Right to Financial Privacy Act, and the Change in Bank and Savings and Loan Control Acts to establish new requirements and procedures in order to combat money laundering.

In hearings before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions, we received testimony that the drug trade generates an estimated $80 billion a year—all in cash. The drug traffickers are desperate to launder their illegal money into legitimate-looking funds. According to Business Week, IRS officials have seized currency being shipped in or out of the United States in vacuum cleaners, Monopoly games, cereal boxes, and boxes of disposable diapers.

How will title V of this omnibus antidrug bill help in the fight against drugs? By stopping the practice of money laundering through our Nation's financial institutions, we will hurt the drug traffickers where they care the most—in their pocketbooks.

First, the legislation amends the Bank Secrecy Act to make "smurfing" illegal. Smurfing is the act of structuring transactions in order to avoid the $10,000 reporting requirement threshold. The Banking Committee's legislation strikes another blow at money launderers by allowing property related to money laundering to be seized and forfeited to the Federal Government.

A second area of law that the Banking Committee's legislation amends to help law enforcement in cracking down on money laundering is the Right to Financial Privacy Act. The committee in this title attempts to strike a balance between the privacy rights of financial institution customers and the need of law enforcement agencies to obtain financial records in legitimate investigations. The Privacy Act amendments contained in title V of this omnibus antidrug bill clarify the type of information a financial institution may voluntarily give to law enforcement officials, hopefully laying to rest the doubts raised by financial institutions on this matter.

A third area of law which this title addresses is the Change in Bank Control and Change in Savings and Loan Control Acts. This title would require the appropriate regulatory agencies to conduct even more thorough investigations of person(s) applying to acquire control of a financial institution. The regulators are also given additional time to review applications for change in control.

Finally, the committee recognized that the drug problem—and related problems such as money laundering—are not just confined to our Nation. This proposed legislation requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to initiate international discussions to establish an information exchange system with respect to eliminating the international flow of money derived from illicit drug operations and other criminal activities.

The Banking Committee reported this legislation title V last July by a vote of 47 to 0. The Banking Committee's provisions deserve our full and strong support. H.R. 5484 deserves our full and strong support.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNDINE] a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNDINE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the narcotics omnibus bill of 1986—the product of many hours of hard work by almost all of the House committees. I commend the leadership for putting together this legislation which will make a significant contribution to this country's war on illegal drugs.

The bill attacks this problem in many different ways. As I see it, the most important of these are interdiction, education, treatment, and law enforcement.

Interdiction is the key to ending the flow of illegal drugs into this country. Toward this end, I am very pleased that this bill authorizes additional funds for more Coast Guard and Defense Department personnel and equipment for drug interdiction activities, and mandates a study on the appropriate role of military personnel in the national effort to control and reduce drug abuse.

Last year, Congress agreed to an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill to provide for the hiring and deployment of 500 tactical law enforcement team members [Taclet's] for the Coast Guard. These Taclet's were to be deployed aboard naval vessels to assist drug enforcement officials in their efforts to stop drug trafficking. Fifteen million dollars was appropriated last year to fill these positions, but to this date, very few Taclet's have been hired.

I planned to offer an amendment to this bill which was not ruled in order, which would have required that these Taclet positions be filled within 90 days of the passage of this act. I am sensitive to the fact that it takes time for money to move through the Federal pipeline and for positions to be filled. However, given the enormity of this problem, and the potentially beneficial effect that the Coast Guard's interdiction efforts could have on this problem, I feel it is necessary to fill these positions without further delay.

Another way in which we can make a dent in the international drug trade is to condition our foreign aid to countries with drug-dependent economies, on that country's drug eradication efforts. To help reach this goal, I am very pleased that the Drug Eradication Act of 1986, which I introduced earlier this year, has been included, in its entirety, in this omnibus drug bill. The inclusion of this language will allow the use of U.S. economic leverage through international lending institutions to achieve the eradication of drug crops in developing countries. It requires that drug eradication plans be developed within 1 year, and implemented by the drug producing countries as a prerequisite for U.S. support for assistance from the multilateral development banks [MDB's].

I am also pleased that the omnibus drug bill authorizes $350 million in each of the next 3 fiscal years for programs to educate our Nation's young people about the horrors of drug dependency. By including this funding in the bill, I feel Congress is sending a message to the Nation that primary and secondary schools need to teach drug education classes to prevent innocent children from falling victim to drugs.

In an effort to educate the general populace about drug abuse, and especially our children, I had considered offering an amendment to this bill to require the Federal Communications Commission to include in its licensing requirements, that radio and television stations devote free air time to drug education programs. In the case of drunk driving and cigarette smoking, radio and television public service announcements have proven themselves to be a very effective way to educate a great number of people. If the television and radio networks and stations respond to a call for voluntary program of drug education, then a requirement will not be necessary. However, if voluntary efforts are insufficient, Congress should enact such a requirement.

In addition to our educational efforts aimed at preventing drug abuse, we must provide treatment facilities for those individuals who desire it, or are susceptible to addiction. The omnibus drug bill authorizes grants to the States for drug treatment and rehabilitation services with the stipulation that priority be given to treat individuals between the ages of 15 and 24.

Currently, the Federal Government spends almost eight times as much on law enforcement as on drug treatment and education. I feel this bill takes an important step toward adjusting our spending priorities, and increases our commitment to drug treatment and education.

Under the broad heading of law enforcement, I feel that the Federal Government can do several things to fight a war on drugs. First, I am pleased that money laundering provisions have been included in this bill.

"Money laundering" is the term which is used to describe the practices through which criminals disguise the origin of money obtained through illegal activities such as drug dealing, prostitution, gambling, racketeering, or investment fraud. According to the President's Commission on Organized Crime, literally tens of billions of dollars in illegal funds are laundered through U.S. financial institutions every year. The largest portion of this money comes from drug dealing.

The inclusion of this provision in the drug bill will make it very difficult for those who deal and traffic in drugs to funnel their profits from these illegal activities into the payments system.

To assist our law enforcement efforts further, the majority leader, Congressman WRIGHT, will offer an amendment which I authored to encourage the judiciary to assign Federal judges to courts in districts with large backlogs of pending criminal cases arising out of drug enforcement efforts. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

There are several Federal districts including the southern and eastern districts of New York, the southern district of Florida, the southern district of Texas, and southern and central districts of California where there are over 1,000 backlogged criminal cases. It was my intention in drafting this amendment to inform the judiciary that Congress places a high priority on alloting judicial resources to areas where narcotics cases are backlogged.

Finally, I want to express my support for Representative RANGEL's amendment to the omnibus drug bill. I was a cosponsor of H.R. 526, the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1985, and I share his desire to see it included in full in the omnibus drug bill. I feel that it is very important to provide State and local governments with the means to increase their drug enforcement activities, and to develop more effective drug abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs. The bill currently provides the desired amount for treatment and rehabilitation programs, but falls far short of what is needed for State and local law enforcement. Mr. RANGEL's amendment will correct this situation, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Lastly, I want to praise my colleagues once again for developing this comprehensive legislation, the passage of which I feel will direct the Federal Government to use its resources to fight drugs in the most effective ways it can—through interdiction, education, treatment, and law enforcement.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY], who has worked hard and diligently on this bill. I know he has something we all want to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WORTLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we are on the brink of enacting legislation that I believe, and pray, will help stop the terror and sickness of drugs in our country.

There really is no need to speak of the destruction and human misery that are brought on by drug trafficking and use. We are all well aware of the problem. It is brought home to our living rooms each night by television news broadcasts. Or, in some very unhappy cases, it is brought home to us because a beloved friend or family member is a drug user or is involved in the drug trade. The seduction of being "high" or of quick riches is powerful indeed, and many learn to late that this path only leads to despair, misery, and grief.

The bill we are considering is an intelligent and aggressive approach to solving the drug crisis. It balances compassion with the need for strict enforcement of our laws: Federal funds are provided to build new prisons and to increase interdiction efforts as well as to assist drug education and treatment programs.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Banking Committee and a longtime advocate of stricter money laundering laws, I am particularly pleased by title V of the bill. This title originated in the Banking Committee and was the product of a number of bills introduced earlier this year to tighten and improve Federal laws against money laundering. I was pleased that provisions from my own bill, H.R. 3892, are included in the bill before us.

When I speak of money laundering, I am also speaking of its close companion drug abuse. The lifeblood of organized drug crime is the profits it reaps. This legislation strengthens our attack on the jugular of organized drug crime.

The Banking Committee heard hours of testimony revealing the great lengths to which drug traffickers will go to conceal the source of their profits. It became readily apparent that new Federal legislation is needed to combat money laundering because of its intimate relation to the illegal narcotics economy. Law enforcement officials say it is vital to be able to uncover a "money trail" that connects the criminals with drug crimes. A money trail is as important in crime solving as footprints or tire tracks left behind at the scene of a crime.

Our current drug laws are primarily effective against persons who actually handle illegal drugs. Unfortunately, the drug czars and the kingpins of drug distribution often avoid these laws by hiring others to do the "dirty work." However, there is one sure-fire way to identify the drug czars: They have large amounts of money available to them and they spend it. After all, the point of crime is to live a life of ease at the expense of others. These drug czars launder their money by making it appear that it comes from a legitimate business or investment. That is why tough money laundering laws are essential to prevent powerful criminal leaders from concealing the source of their ill-gotten gains.

Our banks, savings and loans and credit unions are routinely used to launder this drug money. I know my constituents would be outraged to know that their neighborhood financial institutions are being used to facilitate heinous drug crimes. We must take steps to guarantee that our financial institutions are only dealing with law-abiding customers who wish to invest and protect their hard-earned dollars. The drug czars need to be served notice that these institutions are off limits for their purposes of laundering money.

The legislation addresses this issue by updating and expanding our current money laundering laws. Stiff civil and criminal penalties will result for actions that cause a bank to not file, or to file inaccurate, currency transaction reports. These currency reports are currently required for cash transactions of $10,000 or more, and they are essential to law enforcement officials who can use them to identify drug traffickers.

In addition, structuring a transaction to avoid the currency reports is punishable by a new civil penalty. The bill also permits the seizure of assets if they are clearly traceable to monetary instruments which are transported in violation of report requirements. The maximum fine for currency reporting violations is increased from $500,000 to $1 million for individuals and up to $5 million in other cases.

The bill requires the Treasury Department to review a bank's exemption list for cash reporting when a change in management occurs, and it directs bank regulatory agencies to investigate persons proposing to acquire control of financial institutions.

Under the bill, a bank is allowed to provide law enforcement officials with information of a customer if there is good reason to believe such records are relevant to a criminal activity. The Treasury Department would also be required, in consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to initiate discussions with foreign countries regarding the development of international currency information systems that reduce the flow of illicit drug money.

I am also pleased that we will require foreign countries to implement more drug eradication programs before they are eligible for multilateral development bank assistance. Stopping drugs must focus on the supply as well as the demand side, and there is no acceptable reason for the United States to share our resources with other countries unless they are serious about stopping drugs.

Our Nation is currently engaged in a very real battle with the insidious disease of drugs. The symptoms are painfully apparent: Broken families, ruined lives, and high crime rates. Furthermore, widespread drug abuse means a decline in our Nation's overall productivity because of absenteeism and wasted talents. And tax revenues are lost because of the billions of dollars that make up the underground economy. As a result, law-abiding citizens shoulder a greater share of the cost of government than they should.

There is a need for solutions—now, not later—and I have no doubt that the legislation before this House will prove to be a vital component in the overall antidrug campaign.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [MCCOLLUM] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman very much for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anything more important to the American public today than what we are doing in this legislation. No one thing is going to solve the problem of drugs in this country, no piece of legislaiton, no one item in this bill.

But we hope that, combined together, the things that are in here will do it. As I see it, there are five ways to fight the war on drugs.

One is to attack the demand side, the usage which is running rampant in this country. The bill gets at that partially, but it takes a lot more public and private effort than we can do as legislators if we are going to solve that problem.

No. 2, we get at eradication. We have to do that. We have to eradicate the plants that are grown in foreign countries in many cases in order to stop the drug flow into the country.

Three, we have to have a strong interdiction program. That is where we fought most of the law enforcement battles, and there is a lot of effort in this legislation to enhance that.

Fourth, we have to have stronger deterrents, that is were higher sentencing and tougher criminal laws come into play. We are trying to do that in the bill.

But the areas that we are dealing with here at this moment that I think has been so overlooked, we have to get at the profits that these big drug racketeers are making. We have to stop the flow of drug money in and out of our banks and financial institutions in this country and abroad to refinance more drug operations. The Colombian drug kingpins are worth much more today than any American Mafia families have ever been worth. We have to get at that profit, and we have to get at it through the kind of legislation we have here and the money laundering bill today that the Committee on Banking and the Committee on the Judiciary have crafted. A new crime of money laundering and an enhanced provision or two in areas like the Bank Secrecy Act and the right-to-privacy laws, to make sure that those who are working in our financial institutions are on their toes, do not let moneys come through those institutions that they know are moneys that come from the illegal drug activities of the drug kingpins; to stop that flow, to stop the concealment of money that they know is from these illegal activities. It is only if we have these kinds of enhanced provisions in our law, encouraging banks to come forward and cooperate with Federal authorities while still protecting the confidentiality of the consumer, we can have the kind of drug enforcement necessary to win the war on drugs.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to a member of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bill, and especially in support of this provision. It is very important that we have interdiction and elevate interdiction against the flow of drugs into our Nation. But it is as important that we interdict the flow of money. Money is what makes this system get inside of our Nation and do the terrible activity it is doing across our country, in my State and every community across America.

Interdiction is elevated by the tough provisions of this bill. I rise in strong support of this bill and urge its passage.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a cosponsor of H.R. 5484, the omnibus drug bill. Today Congress will emphatically say "no" to drugs. And what's more important, we will be giving State and local governments and schools the added ability to say "no" to drugs.

Not a day goes by that we do not learn of a new tragedy or alarming revelation connected with the drug culture: star athletes dying; prominent figures arrested for "dealing"; lurid stories of "crack houses" which are no longer confined to the cities but expanding into suspecting neighborhoods; law enforcement officers expressing frustration and anger at the revolving door of justice that puts pushers back on the streets. As the drug culture grows, so does violent crime as more addicts become more desperate.

It is unusual when we can have such a bipartisan approach to a national epidemic. I am pleased that the bill agreed to by the leadership of both parties beefs up our enforcement and interdiction capabilities. It allows us to get some leverage out of our considerable foreign aid program to encourage major drug-producing nations to crack down on the drugs at their source. It provides stiff mandatory penalties for large-scale drug trafficking and harsher fines for certain categories of drug possession offenses. It also provides money for drug education and treatment as new "high-tech" drugs threaten even the first-time casual user with life-threatening addiction or instant death.

In the Banking Committee on which I serve, we have included tough new money-laundering provisions which give the Government more power to investigate individuals trying to buy banks, tighten bank transaction reporting procedures, and increase penalties. This section, together with the companion section reported from the Judiciary Committee, makes money laundering a crime for the first time and provides for a maximum of 20 years in jail and/or a $1 million fine. These sections also provide for civil and criminal forfeiture of the proceeds of certain money laundering crimes. The additional information law enforcement officials receive will help them track down drug kingpins and hopefully convict them and cut off their criminal trafficking in drugs. In addition, the forfeiture provisions mean that criminals caught money laundering their illicit profits will no longer be able to enjoy the rotten fruits of their labor.

I am pleased to join with colleagues from both sides of the aisle in supporting legislation to spell out clearly the Federal Government's interest and role in stemming the tide of illegal drugs. As a parent and as a former educator, I have to demand that the Federal Government do all in its power to help our young people, our Nation's most precious natural resource, resist the drug epidemic.

It is imperative that those of us in a position and with the ability to do so, those of us who can have some impact on the development of the mind and spirit of the young, be firm in both conviction and action against drug use. We can no longer tolerate the scourge of drug use and abuse through casual and ineffective drug policies.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it is not clear what has sparked this prairie fire of interest and concern about drugs. Perhaps the latest spark that set this off was Len Bias' tragic death. What is clear is that the tinder was very, very dry. In a real sense, there have been may Len Biases.

I was recently reading an article in the Detroit Free Press, and it talked about how the number of people in the tricounty Detroit area dying from cocaine use has increased eightfold between 1982 and 1985.

It goes on to quote the State office of substance abuse as saying:

> There are more people out there using more dangerous forms of drugs and the likelihood of dying is increasing. I'm glad this Congress and the administration are facing up to this. I'm glad the Banking Committee has joined many other committees, including the Select Committee, in attacking this critical, critical problem.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking member of the full committee for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I simply would like to rise as a member of the committee to say that it is very good to have the Banking Committee play a role in trying to turn the corner on this horrible drug trafficking problem.

I just came down from the Rules Committee, and we are talking about immigration reform up there, and one of the prime items of concern, of course, is coming right across this border is the flow of drugs along with illegal aliens.

Money laundering is a problem which I hope will be cured in this. I should say that in the committee I voted for this provision but have a little concern. My slight concern has been the juxtaposition of individual rights versus those of the institutions.

Nevertheless, I believe that, as an overall package in trying to address the drug problem, this is a good piece of legislation and I am pleased that our committee has played a major role in it.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act. Title V of this bill is the Comprehensive Money Laundering Act approved earlier this summer by the House Banking Committee. That bill was designed to impose strict new criminal and civil penalties on money laundering activity in this country.

Currently money laundering, the practice by which criminals disguise their illegally obtained funds to hide them from the law, is neither a criminal nor a civil offense. According to the President's Commission on Organized Crime, tens of billions of dollars are laundered through financial institutions each year. Most of this comes from drug trafficking. The U.S. Government loses about $50 billion a year through drug money laundering schemes.

Current law requires banks to report to the Government cash transactions of $10,000 or more. Through the structuring of transactions just below this minimum level, money launderers or smurfs as they are called, are able to evade the banks' reporting requirements.

This spring, the Banking Committee heard some incredible testimony from one of these " smurfs." Earlier today my colleague from Virgina, Mr. Parris, talked about such a smurf operating in my own city of Los Angeles. He went to numerous banks up and down Wilshire Boulevard in Los Angeles with piles of cash and asked for cashier's checks. He was "laundering" money.

He was taking the cash profits from drug sales and changing it into bank notes to send out of the country. This particular smurf said he was able to launder $100,000 a day without any questions asked.

In this way, the illicit profits from numerous drug sales are transformed into a manageable and transportable form. This, of course, eases their entry into the nation where the drugs are grown or manufactured, and allows them to pay those involved in the initial phases of drug production. Thus, drug money has become an unofficial form of American foreign aid. As the law stands now, however, this is all legitimate activity; money launderers are not criminals. Clearly, this is a grey area in the law that needs to be addressed.

Title V of the bill before us today makes it a crime for a person to structure a transaction in order to evade the banks' reporting requirements. It also gives the Treasury Secretary the authority to lower the $10,000 bank reporting requirement to $3,000 in a specific geographic area or at a specific financial institution. Furthermore, the legislation says that when someone walks in a bank and wants to exchange more than $3,000 for a bank check, cashier's check, money order, or traveler's check, that person must positively identify themselves and sign a form which will be kept on record at the bank. These provisions will make it more difficult for smurfs to evade the bank reporting requirements. They will also provide investigators with a record of who is making these illicit transactions. This will certainly curtail much of the money laundering activity that is occurring each and every day.

It is our duty as lawmakers to fight the war against drugs on every front. This money laundering legislation will make it more difficult for the profits reaped through illicit drug sales to be processed in the financial institutions of the United States. This legislation is a necessary weapon to fight the war on drugs. It is badly needed. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Comprehensive Money Laundering Act by supporting passage of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I think title V of the bill has been adequately explained. By making money laundering subject to very severe criminal penalties we will discourage drug dealers from using unknowing financial institutions to launder large sums of money derived from drug trafficing without a permanent record of the transaction being created.

Again, I want to compliment the chairman of the full committee for his diligent work over the last several years investigating this problem of money laundering and in producing this legislation.

But billions of dollars are moving through the banking system without leaving the trace necessary for successful presecution of drug criminals. We hope that this legislation will help us to trace the proceeds from illegal drug trafficking to the pushers, to the streets, on the planes and into the jungles to those who produce those addictive drugs which have destroyed the lives of so many of our young Americans and are threatening our very society.

Title V of this bill is a good title, the bill is a good bill, and I know that we will support it unanimously here today.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to conclude the Banking Committee section to a former educator and a lady who has a great interest in this problem, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to first of all compliment the chairman of the committee and the ranking member. Our chairman and his very able staff have been involved in studying this problem for many, many months and, in fact, years. The gentleman has been way ahead of the game.

We understand that drug abuse in this country is really prevalent and is so abominable. But one reason that it is so prevalent and that we have so much drug abuse is that there is heavy-duty money involved, billions and billions of dollars.

□ 1540

The average individual in this country has no way of tracking how much money is really being used for this whole area of drug trafficking. As a result, this legislation says that they can no longer launder money illicitly; that they will have to comply with bank requirements of reporting. If they do not, there will be very, very stiff penalties.

I personally think that in terms of the entire piece of legislation, this is one of the most important pieces because it targets the very, very central issue that so many greedy people are involved in this. They could not care less about ruining peoples' lives. They care about the profit and the money involved.

This is the one area that will address that problem.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support this legislation.

Drugs are a terrible plague on our society, and society has finally reached a breaking point. It is demanding that Congress take swift and effective action to eradicate this terrible plague. While this legislation before us today is not perfect, the war on drugs is too important for partisanship.

There are several amendments that I would have liked to have been made in order under the rule, but were not. Perhaps in conference we will have the opportunity to make the necessary changes to tighten up the bill as far as tougher enforcement and funding is concerned. Nonetheless I am glad that we have brought this comprehensive measure to the floor. It is a bipartisan package which does include a number of very good provisions that we desperately need to improve our counter offensive against the drug underworld.

Among those are provisions to: improve international narcotics enforcement, increase the Coast Guard's search, seizure, arrest and surveillance authority, expand the U.S. Customs Service's authority, authorize loans to civilian drug enforcement agencies for military equipment, create 5- and 10-year mandatory penalties for trafficking, increase fines throughout the Controlled Substances Act and authorize additional funds for DEA, U.S. marshals, and U.S. attorneys. The legislation also creates a new crime of money laundering and makes important changes to the Bank Secrecy Act and right to financial privacy laws to improve the ability to conduct investigations.

This legislation also authorizes substantial funding for new prison construction over the next 3 fiscal years. Specifically, $147 million for fiscal year 1987; $450 million for fiscal year 1988 and $500 million for fiscal year 1989. The compelling need for this sizeable investment in the Federal prison system is based in large part on the fact that since 1981 we have seen the Federal prison population increase 50 percent to the point that it is now 49 percent overcrowded. This increase in the Federal prison population is the result of an improved criminal justice system, combined with criminal justice legislation adopted by Congress. As we enact new criminal justice legislation that often results in an increased number of convictions and incarcerations, we must act responsibly to ensure that adequate funding is available to house those who are incarcerated as a result of our efforts and those of the Department of Justice. If we fail to authorize adequate funding for new prison facilities in this legislation, as part of a long-term commitment to improving the Federal corrections system, we will be compounding the problem of overcrowding, which in my opinion, has already reached crisis proportions within the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

Mr. Chairman, the drug problem in this country demands the best we have to offer. If we are really willing to take the necessary and truly effective steps to combat this terrible scourge, we must also be willing to toughen up our enforcement standards, reorder our overall domestic spending priorities and find responsible sources of funding for many of the initiatives included in this bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ORTIZ].

Mr. ORTIZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act.

Many today will commend this House for the rapid movement of such a comprehensive and important bill. It is an example of the strong leadership of our distinguished majority leader who has worked so well with the minority leader. Today the American public will see just how effective our legislative process can be when both sides of the aisle work together.

Mr. Chairman, no Member in this Chamber will deny that the drug problem in this country is a national epidemic. I can testify to the crisis that exists along the border. In my district, which lies along the Mexican border, the seizures of illegal narcotics has drastically increased. The enforcement efforts in Florida have forced the smugglers to use other routes. Today, the Mexican border routes are as bad, if not worse, than the historical Florida routes.

H.R. 5484 is a good bill because it is a comprehensive bill. We cannot only intercept smugglers. The flow of drugs will merely come through another route. We cannot only enforce our laws, for our prisons are overcrowded now. And we cannot only tell our children drugs are bad. We must help to eradicate those drugs in the source country as well as educate our young people about the dangers of drugs. That will help eliminate this country's demand for drugs.

This bill addresses the supply of, as well as the demand for drugs. We educate as well as rehabilitate in this legislation. H.R. 5484 is legislation which is badly needed now. I support this bill, and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation. I believe that our society is at the threshold of a devastating crisis. Drug abuse is poisoning the minds and lives of people of all races, ages, and income levels across the Nation. It is time for us to face this problem through a wide-ranging program of quick, forceful, and effective action.

The Omnibus Drug Enforcement and Control Act provides many of the tools we need to deal with drug abuse on a national basis. This bipartisan antidrug bill is the Nation's first comprehensive and coordinated attack on one of the biggest threats facing our society.

It attacks drug trafficking on a broad front. It deters crime by mandating minimum 20-year sentences for certain serious drug-related offenses. It helps to keep drugs from entering the country by giving the Coast Guard and Customs Service new authority. The bill also penalizes drug-producing countries that do not cooperate with U.S. antidrug efforts.

This legislation authorizes funding that would bring drug awareness programs into the schools, from kindergarten through the 12th grade. Children will no longer be ignorant of the dangers of drugs and the impact they can have on lives.

It also provides money to help treat and rehabilitate those who want to quit, but cannot.

This bill is a positive and practical approach to a problem that we can no longer ignore. We must fight the war on drugs, and we must win. Our future depends on it.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation and urge my colleagues to pass it by the greatest possible margin.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, for several decades, as a nation, we have been floundering as we try to swim out of what seems to be an ocean of drugs. At times it seems that we are drowning in drugs. This summer it has been as though a tidal wave of cocaine abuse has crashed down upon us. With the terrible sudden deaths of star athletes like Len Bias and Don Rogers, we have come to know that no one, no matter how strong, no matter how fit, how gifted, how successful, as those fine athletes were, no one can escape the dangers of cocaine and other narcotics.

At the other end of the spectrum we are seeing hundreds, perhaps thousands, of those who are most fragile—newborn babies—are being born suffering neurological disorders due to the cocaine addiction of their mothers.

This summer we have seen neighborhoods transformed, as though by arson, into combat zones of drug abuse and crime.

It was, indeed, prophetic that a century ago following the naive promotion of the wonders of the newly isolated drug, cocaine, by Sigmund Freud, the father of psychiatry, that he was severely attacked by his professional colleagues for having unleashed the third scourge upon mankind.

Mr. Chairman, today we are at a milestone in our Nation's long effort to combat the scourge of narcotic drugs. With the leadership of the speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader, the House of Representatives has developed the most comprehensive assault upon the problem of drug abuse.

Seven bills make up title VI of this package. Those bills were carefully developed since the beginning of this Congress by the Subcommittee on Crime, which I chair, and have been ordered reported by the Judiciary Committee. The provisions of this title have not been hastily developed for this bill but reflect careful consideration by the Crime Subcommittee.

This title, building upon the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act which we wrote in the last Congress, provides appropriately stiff penalties that will immobilze the organizers of drug trafficking syndicates.

The Designer Drug Enforcement Act builds upon the emergency scheduling authority to control designer drugs which the Crime Subcommittee developed in the last Congress. This title will close the loopholes that have permitted criminal chemists to manufacture and distribute deadly designer drugs.

We have created, for the first time, a crime of money laundering, that will enable us to prosecute those who assist drug traffickers in reaping their profits. This is a profoundly important new law enforcement tool that will enable us to target those who are bankrolling major drug deals. We have drafted this offense so that it is readily enforceable by the law enforcement authorities, and yet respects the rights to financial privacy that Americans are entitled to and that are essential to the operation of our private enterprise system.

In title VI, we have provided new mandatory 15-year prison sentences for career drug traffickers and other career criminals.

We have authorized calling a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control to develop an effective national strategy to combat drug abuse in the 1980's. This type of conference is in a long tradition of important conferences such as the Shanghai Opium Conference in 1909, and the Hague International Opium Conference in 1912, which established the framework for the International Control of Narcotics. This White House Conference is intended to play the crucial role of bringing together the best American experts to work out a strategy that will be effective.

We have provided vitally needed assistance to State and local drug enforcement activities. Title VI has a 50-50 matching grant program that requires the recipient State and local units of government, and a 100-percent grant program in the discretion of the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration in order that this money is most accurately targeted. We have provided for $100 million in fiscal year 1987 and $200 million in fiscal year 1988.

We have provided authorization for almost 400 more drug enforcement agents to investigate drug traffickers. We are increasing the DEA-State-and-

Local Drug Task Forces by 50 percent from 34 cities to 49 cities. We are providing 362 new positions for the Diversion Control Program which addresses the traffic in drugs which cause two-thirds of the deaths and injuries due to drug abuse, legitimate prescription drugs.

We are authorizing 200 additional assistant U.S. attorneys to take traffickers to trial, and we have provided for $1 billion for the construction of new prisons so that judges will have a place to sentence over 2,200 drug traffickers to long terms of imprisonment.

Mr. Chairman, there often is a lot of discussion about sending signals to drug traffickers. This bill doesn't just send signals, this bill provides major new tools for prosecuting these felons. Tackling this problem requires a balanced approach. We must have adequate resources for crop eradication, for interdiction, for domestic enforcement and investigation, for financial investigations, for the U.S. attorneys for prosecution, and for the Bureau of Prisons. at the same time, we must devote commensurate resources to reducing demand. We must have effective prevention and treatment programs, and we must not lose sight of the fact that a lot of people are hurting, they are in misery and they need help.

This bill will go a long way in fact doing just that.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman on the floor, as I have often done privately, not only for the fine work that you have done for the Judiciary Committee but it has made it so easy for me to serve as chairman of the select committee knowing that in the work of the Judiciary that we never really get involved in it because you have made more than your share of the contribution.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for his very kind remarks.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, while wearing the hat that I wear on the Banking Committee, I got up and spoke for a very brief moment about the key elements that are necessary to fight the war on drugs. I think this bill addresses every one of them.

Not to belabor those points, I am going to go over them briefly again because we have got to deal with them in some fashion. We have got to get control of demand; we have got to get control of eradication and get foreign countries more cooperative to destroy the crops that raised and produce these drugs.

We have to beef up interdiction, which a lot of this bill addresses. We have to get at the whole process in this country of deterrence and getting law enforcement tough to really get at that aspect of it, and we have to do something about what I think has been long overlooked, in the section of the bill the Judiciary produces we do get at, and that is getting at the profit motive that is involved in all of this where we have these drug kingpins from Colombia who are making more money are are far wealthier than anybody ever dreamed of in the American Mafia.

I think that the key provision, if there is one, and there are lot of good things, great things, necessary things in this omnibus drug package, but I think the key provision in this bill is the new money laundering crime that I am very happy to work so hard with the gentleman from New Jersey, my distinguished chairman, to produce. With the cooperation of all the members of the Judiciary Committee, I think we have produced a product that we can all be proud of and we should be proud of voting out tomorrow when we get to the final passage of this bill.

The fact is that we have had a gaping hole in the law for a long time in this area. There is no Federal crime against money laundering, although a lot of people seem to think there is. There are Bank Secrecy Acts that catch the amount of money that you have to report to the Treasury Department and others, but there is no crime.

□ 1550

Now under this legislation there will be a crime for knowingly concealing money from an illegal source, and that illegal source is primarily drug trafficking in this case. We need to stop financial institutions inadvertently or intentionally from passing money through their institutions, helping these criminals conceal the source and passing that money in most cases out of the country back to some other point where it will be used for the financing of further production of drugs to be shipped over to feed our young people and satisfy the demand that is here. This bill does that, and I am very proud of it.

We have in the judiciary section designer drugs. My colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], has worked very hard on that, and he will speak in a few minutes to that subject.

We have in it also provisions to enhance sentences. That is the deterrence aspect I spoke of a minute ago. We finally put minimum mandatory sentences in the law at the Federal level, and not only do we do that for hard drug traffickers at the 5- and 10- and 20-year level and life imprisonment, but we have an opportunity by amendment that will be offered here in a little while, tomorrow, to put the death sentence in an appropriate case onto this bill. And on Federal reservations we get tough on the users of drugs by giving minimum mandatory sentences for possession. I think we have to say that to those people out there who are using it. We have to get it to the demand side any way we can.

On the possession side we are not nearly as tough, and we should not be. But we are trying to deter it with those minimum mandatory sentences, with a thousand-dollar minimum fine for the first offense, with 15 days in jail for the second offense, and with 90 days in jail for the third possession offense. We need to enhance sentences.

We also have 17 new prisons which can be built. These are major prisons, Federal prisons, to house those people who are committing these offenses. Our prisons are already enormously overcrowded on the Federal level and on the State level. We need desperately to do something about the shortage of Federal prison space, and that is especially true with minimum mandatory sentences in this legislation.

While we are about it, I will offer an amendment tomorrow on the floor of the House to help the States in their effort to get more prisons and to save costs in the areas of housing the inmates who are predominantly drug-related in their offenses and who are overcrowding our State prisons today. That amendment will go to the question of whether they can find new markets for their prison industry goods so that they can sell those goods and so that they can have productive employment for prisoners as well as some degree of cost savings for those prisons. I hope that my colleagues will support that amendment as well.

I will also offer an amendment tomorrow dealing with one of our problems in the law with respect to destroying a lot of the goods, the narcotics, that are there today in storage. We need to clean that up under the law. We need to be able to get the cocaine and the marijuana out and not have it sitting around in warehouses and having it in a position that it would be certainly available for somebody to come in and make a big scene over it.

Last, but not least, in this legislation we are attempting to beef up our law enforcement agencies, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Customs, and the Coast Guard. In our judiciary area we are working very hard to do that with DEA. I do not totally agree with the grant program that is in our bill, but it is not a large amount of money compared to that in other sections, and if we are going to get resources anywhere, the Drug Enforcement Administration ought to have those resources.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] has consumed 5 minutes, and he reserves 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I congratulate all of the chairmen and the chairwomen who have been involved in this enterprise. This is really a first-class piece of work, and most especially I congratulate the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], who has just done a marvelous job, and I commend the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] also.

This is a real good bill, and I hope it stays a good bill. There are some problems that are coming up, and I want to alert the Members to them. There are some serious problems, and I would point out that these amendments that are going to be offered tomorrow, at least three of them, would be devastating, and I hope we can defeat them.

The exclusionary rule exception would be a grave mistake. Let me point to my colleagues that both the American Bar Association and the Judicial Conference of the United States are opposed to this amendment. It would allow the use in trials of evidence that has been illegally seized. That is a violation of one of the bulwarks of our freedom, the fourth amendment of the Constitution, the right to be free of unreasonable searches and seizures. We do not want the police or FBI agents or drug agents using illegally seized information.

I think it is going to be a great mistake if we approve the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] to allow the death penalty in certain cases. Even the President of the United States has stated emphatically that it would be a mistake. To quote the President, "We think the drug issue is too important and we want to approach it with the consensus of the American people so that it does not get involved in a side issue such as the death penalty." So the President is against it.

I would like to point out also that I believe the Senate could start a filibuster if the death penalty is inserted in the House bill.

Lastly, although it is not a Judiciary Committee matter, the amendments that would authorize the expanded use of the military in drug cases present a real problem. The part of the bill already expanding modestly the use of the military in drug cases is crafted very well, and it should not be tampered with. We really do not want to authorize the military in the United States to enforce civilian law. That is a very bad road to travel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BYRANT].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime for yielding this time to me.

I want to say that many Members, particularly from my side of the aisle, have spoken out about the concern they have with regard to the use of the military in the interdiction of drugs. I want to make this observation. The biggest cause of crime in the neighborhoods of the United States today is drugs. Any policeman will tell us that. Statistical evidence is available to tell us that.

In my own city last year, crime increased by 18 percent. In the same year drug-related deaths doubled, and in the same year the tonnage of drugs confiscated doubled as well. The connection is clear. The greatest threat to civil liberties in this country is a public that has given up on believing that our system is going to solve the crime problem, and unless we deal dramatically with this drug situation, we are not going to solve the crime problem.

The use of the military to interdict drugs at our borders is a natural and commonsense response to a problem that cannot be handled by local police forces and has not been handled by the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, or the Customs agencies, even though they have tried as hard as they possibly could.

I strongly urge the Members of the House to consider my amendment, the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER], and the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and to recognize that we are going to have to take dramatic action if we are going to interdict the drugs that are coming across our borders today.

Eighteen thousand flights a year cross our borders without authorization because of our radar ceilings. It is impossible for us to solve the problem unless we are to follow the logic and the commonsense response of using our military to protect our borders.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to consider those amendments favorably.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I might mention for the record that a number of my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee are in the Rules Committee at this very moment, and I know they want to speak at least briefly to amendments that they are holding for consideration when the House considers amendments tomorrow.

I think it is very important to point out the bipartisan interest that we have in expanding the impact of this bill upon the war on drugs by way of these amendments.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], for example, will present an amendment dealing with the exclusionary rule, which will broaden the authority we have to deal with criminal violations of the law.

□ 1600

It is critical for us to recognize that in the area of military involvement in drug trafficking and drug control we have both Democrats and Republicans providing amendments which will broaden the intent of the House in terms of military support for those efforts.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1½ minutes.

There are going to be two key amendments offered in this section of the bill. There are several, including a couple I am going to offer that I would like to think are critical, but there are going to be two that we really have to address and address with intent when this comes up tomorrow. One of them is going to be the death penalty that we have heard discussed today.

I disagree with the other gentleman, not my good friend here from California, Mr. EDWARDS, though, who said this was a problem in constitutional law. I do not agree with that. I think we have to get at this problem. We have to put the death penalty back in where it belongs. It was taken out of Federal law by the Supreme Court some time ago on a technicality. We have only put it back in a couple times. We have had very few opportunities to vote on the death penalty and certainly for hard drug dealers we need the death penalty.

Second, we have a chance to change the law with regard to the exclusionary rule. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will offer an amendment that will give us a chance.

So let those pieces of evidence come on in, even though they were seized in situations where there was an illegal search and seizure.

All too often we have had situations where the evidence has been denied by the courts because of some technicality.

There is entirely too often the situation where we have lost cases and lost convictions of really bad criminals out there, particularly in the drug world, because the evidence was denied simply due to a technicality. I think we need to pass both of those amendments very, very strongly, when they come up tomorrow and that will be a vast improvement on our judiciary section of this bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by thanking my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. HUGHES for his excellent leadership in this area. He has put together a most constructive package from the Judiciary Committee to reduce drug trafficking in this country. I appreciate his work on this vital subject and I thank him for yielding me the time.

The fact is all the statistical evidence shows that the vast majority of serious, violent crime in this country is committed by a small percentage of offenders known as career criminals. As the head of the Justice Department's National Institute of Justice, James K. Stewart told the Wall Street Journal, September 5, 1986, "to arrest an offender who may be committing five or six serious crimes a week is obviously more productive than apprehending the occasional thief or burglar."

Many of these career criminals are dealing in cocaine, crack, and hard drugs. I think it's high time for the criminal justice system to make it a top priority to go after these career drug criminals.

That's exactly what H.R. 4639 that I introduced earlier this year would do. That legislation, which is similar to provisions in this package, would allow the Federal and local prosecutors to team up and prosecute the worst drug traffickers in Federal court. This would be done by expanding the existing Career Criminal law to include "violent felonies or a serious drug offense, or both." Drug offenders convicted under this section would face a mandatory, minimum sentence.

Mr. Chairman, in 1984, I sponsored the House legislation that began a major Federal effort to prosecute career criminals. The major reason I now support extending the bill to drug offenders is that law enforcement professionals believe the current career criminal bill has been a significant help.

Yesterday, the Director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms told me his Bureau has indicated 103 additional cases under the 1984 statute and obtained 48 convictions under it. To date, 24 armed career criminals have actually received the 15-year enhanced sentence.

Moreover, I've seen the benefit of this legislation in my home State of Oregon. Our local prosecutor, Mr. Michael Schrunk and our U.S. attorney, Mr. Charles Turner, have done a tremendous job in teaming up to target and prosecute career criminals. They, like other law enforcement officials, support extending the 1984 legislation to career drug.

In the Pacific Northwest, our law enforcement officials need all the help they can get in fighting the drug scourge.

The Pacific Northwest is awash in drugs. An enormous amount of black tar heroin is coming in from Mexico. According to the Governor's Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse Programs, drugs and alcohol cost the State of Oregon $1.5 billion in treatment, lost income, corrections, and drug enforcement last year.

Drugs and alcohol abuse are connected with 50 percent of all police arrests, 30 percent of all suicides, and 68 percent of all emergency room trauma cases. The emergency room death rate has skyrocketed—this year 19 people have already died of cocaine-related deaths in Oregon hospitals, compared to 5 such deaths in all of last year. As of June 17, the medical examiner in Multnomah County blamed 45 deaths on the deadly tar heroin, almost half again as many as there were last year.

And, as elsewhere, drug offenders in Oregon often get off the hook. Drug dealers in Oregon and elsewhere know the overworked criminal courts, crowded jails, and police aren't likely to catch up with them.

This legislation increases the odds that these career criminals will be kept off the streets.

Mr. Chairman, by using a teamwork approach to target the worst career drug criminals, I believe we can make a significant dent in the drug problem in this country.

I want to again thank Mr. HUGHES and his great staff for working closely with me for two Congresses on career criminal legislation. I hope my colleagues will support these provisions and the entire package.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the gentleman from Oregon, RON WYDEN, has worked very hard in two Congresses on the career criminal bill. The gentleman has worked with our colleague in the other body, Senator ARLEN SPECTER. They have done yeoman work.

I want to congratulate the gentleman from Oregon on his excellent work in this area. I am very happy that we could develop this legislative initiative. Really, this just builds on that effort in the 98th Congress.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, thank you so much for those kind words. It is a pleasure to work with you.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is recognized for 6 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding me this time.

I want to say that it feels awfully good to be down here dealing with this issue at this time.

This last week in my home State of California I had the opportunity to speak to the National Association of Police Organizations and in discussing what the Congress was about ready to do, they were very, very pleased that we were acting on it; but believe me, they have not just discovered the drug problem. They have been dealing with it on a daily, weekly, monthly, yearly basis, for years and years and years. They are happy to receive the efforts of the Federal Government to assist them in what it is they have been trying to do.

I would suggest that this is a top to bottom problem that needs a top to bottom solution.

We need to change the attitude of the American people, or at least the attitude of the American people as expressed by their elected officials at all levels of Government.

I said on this floor before, and I feel very, very strongly about it, that we have over the last 15 to 20 years lost a good portion of a generation of Americans to drugs. When my generation came up and went through the school process, people were not quite ready to confront the awesome power of drugs and what it could do to us. A lot of people used it as a recreational thing. There was the idea that as long as someone uses it and it just hurts him or hurts her, it does not hurt the rest of society. Thank God we are over that point.

I think we really have to confront the fact that we have not been as serious as we have to be at all levels. I would defy anybody who has been on a college or university campus over the last decade to tell me that we have been serious about the problem of drug abuse at those institutions. I would defy a college president or university president to tell us that his institution or her institution has done everything they have to do in order to take care of the problem of drugs on their campuses. That does not just mean treatment, treatment which is important, but it also means cooperation with local law enforcement.

We have to change the attitude in America. Some weeks ago William Raspberry was writing a column about an appearance that Jessie Jackson made to a high school audience in which he basically asked how many of them knew that cocaine could kill, and most of them indicated that. Then he asked how many used cocaine, and a good portion of them indicated they had.

William Raspberry asked the question, "If ignorance isn't the problem, how is education the solution?"

I am not saying we ought not to have some education element in this package, that is important; but what I am saying is that if you do not have an essential ingredient of tough law enforcement to back it up, it is going to be meaningless.

Many of our children know far more about drugs than we will ever know.

The message we have to send clearly, loudly, and unequivocally, is that drug use is not tolerated on a college campus or anywhere else. This bill goes some way in doing that. I hope that we will support those elements of the bill that do that.

There is one area that is of some concern to me. I hope it can be worked out before we have a final vote on it. It has to do with an amendment to something I have been dealing with for well over a year, the designer drug. It has to do with an amendment that at last I was told was going to be wrapped up in the en bloc amendment, unless there is a change made. This amendment, unfortunately, I am convinced after talking with the FDA and after talking with the National Association of State Controlled Substances authorities, will create a huge loophole for people to abuse designer drugs as long as they have got a M.D. or Ph.D. after their names. It will basically say that even if a doctor is so bad that his or her authority to handle substances covered under schedules 2 through 5 have been rescinded, and 5 is something as meaningless as cough syrup, he will be allowed to work on designer drugs in schedule 5.

In other words, we would enable such individuals to handle analogs 5,000 times as potent as morphine, even though they would be prohibited from handling many less dangerous substances. That does not make sense to me. I think it is inadvertent, but a change is necessary in that amendment before it will be allowed.

One other message I think we have to give loud and clear is that we are not going to have a double standard. For a long time we have looked down at drug addicts in the streets. We said those are the guys who do the burglaries. Those are the guys to put in jail; but if you happen to be a professional football player or baseball player and you use it for recreational purposes, we slap your wrist and you get a standing ovation when you return to the arena the next year.

We have got to say that doctors—I do not care if you have an M.D. after your name—have got to follow the same thing that everbody else does, and unfortunately unless we work out the language in this one amendment, we are going to say that there will be a double standard, that someone who happens to have an M.D. after his name will be allowed to do this. Unless we make that change, that individual will be allowed to use controlled substances, designer drugs, on himself or others without first going through the regular protocol of the FDA and having animal studies.

Mr. Chairman, I just do not think we can allow that to happen. I hope we will be able to work that out before the Wright amendment is voted on.

We need tough law enforcement. We need a death penalty to be voted on and to be allowed for someone who has committed murder in furtherance of his drug trafficking. That is an absolute essential that we need out there on the street.

I want to commend the chairman of my subcommittee and the ranking member of the subcommittee for the enhancement of penalties that we have in this bill, it is absolutely necessary, and for the money laundering provision in this bill and for what I have been working on for well over a year, designer drugs. It is a plague in our country. It is particularly troublesome in California, but it is spreading all over the country.

Congress has awakened to this problem. We are now going to act on it. I hope we will get support for this with some of the changes I have mentioned.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and say that at long last, I have spent 23 years in law enforcement in the city of New York Police Department, and I wondered about the piecemeal approach in dealing with drugs. I knew it was futile. it was an effort, valiant men gave their lives, valiant men gave their efforts to it, but it was a losing fight.

At long last, simply because there is acknowledgement that America is being invaded in a most prolific fashion, that the Federal Government has responded, the administration and the Congress and the Congress is responding with this bill.

This bill from my perspective is enormous. The DEA, those tremendous individuals in the new task force, have been out there fighting the fight with bandaids really.

And laundering, a new aspect of it, everyone participating in a laundering process will be subject to criminal sanctions, not just the individuals who initiate it, but everyone associated with it. That clearly should have an inhibiting factor.

With relation to career criminals, that is a focus that has been established in the Bronx very successfully by the district attorney there, focusing on the career criminals. That is exactly what they are. They are criminals everyday of their lives. With the ability to focus in on them, we will be able to extract them from society at large and be able to really take the heart out of the entire operation.

And at long last, moneys for prison construction, we do not turn these people out into the streets anymore. We do not place inhibitions on judges. We provide prisons in order to arrest them, prosecute them, and put them away. It is where they belong. Take them off the streets of America.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] for his leadership in this undertaking.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I think the bottom line of this whole debate is that we all want and all America wants to get at this nemesis of drugs. We have been at it on one level or another for a long time and it is extremely frustrating, but we cannot lose sight of the fact that it is a war. It is a war that we have to put in every bit as much effort in winning as we do a war against some seen and known enemy where the military goes out and fights those battles. We have to have a strategy. We have to have tactics. We have to carry out the action. We have to have the resources. We have to have the command and control centers, some of which are in this legislation.

Most of all we have to have the following faith and dedication of the American people.

Not one provision alone, not one bill, no matter how big or omnibus it is, is going to solve the drug problem in this country. We have to have all of it working together. This bill helps a little bit. Hopefully, we will pass it with overwhelming colors when it comes up for the final vote with some amendments to it, but it is not the last word. We have got to get with it and support our law enforcement people and support the public in stopping the demand and every other aspect of the drug problem in this country. It is a war, but it is a war we can win.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the Judiciary Committee, the chairman and the ranking minority member for their fine work. They have made a great contribution here today. They have included most of the provisions, and I want to thank them for that, of H.R. 5269.

Let me also say that there are some very important provisions in this section of the bill. A lot of people do not recognize that half of the hard drugs that are consumed in this Nation today are produced in the United States through drug laboratories, but we find that only 13 percent of the time of the DEA is focused upon those because of shortages of personnel. This particular measure provides additional personnel and allows the DEA to target these clandestine drug laboratories that are producing drugs here in this country. That is one area, one choke point in which we can make a dramatic impact in a very short period of time once these agents are on line.

And let us not forget the fact that intelligence plays a very key role in the war on drugs. This particular provision provides for 100 new intelligence agents, intelligence agents that will not only serve the DEA and the Justice Department, but also fulfill their responsibilities to other law enforcement agencies throughout this country. One thing that we are in deep need of is tactical intelligence, timely intelligence. This measure will give us the opportunity to provide that, and I thank the Committee on the Judiciary for that.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, not long ago I participated in a joint hearing of the Select Committees on Narcotics and Children, Youth and Families. The subject of this hearing was crack, and the information we obtained made me very frightened indeed, not only for our children, but for our entire country. The testimony reinforced my longstanding view that we must increase our ongoing efforts to reduce drug supply and demand.

As the ranking Republican of the Judiciary Committee, I have had the opportunity to directly participate in the creation of drug enforcement legislation for many years. Only 2 years ago, we adopted the Comprehensive Crime Control Act, which strengthened drug penalties, bail and sentencing laws, and provided for forfeiture of drug assets. Now we have before us an omnubus drug bill, H.R. 5484, that, among many other things, further increases drug trafficking penalties, improves drug asset forfeiture law, and outlaws designer drugs and money laundering. $1.5 billion in funding for many new drug supply and demand reduction programs is included.

The value and effectiveness of the omnibus drug bill, however, is directly dependent on the strength of our continuing commitment. For this bill to have a lasting impact, Congress must see this effort as the cornerstone of a long term consistent and dedicated effort to eliminate drug abuse in this country. This bill, to really work, must signal more than a one time effort.

A long-term solution to this problem depends in large part on an effective, coordinated, and cooperative enforcement effort enhanced by all Federal enforcement agencies and our military. H.R. 5484 strengthens our efforts in this direction with resources and new tools for many of these agencies. We inadvertently create a problem, however, when we expand agency jurisdiction into so many areas in such a short time; this bill creates overlapping jurisdictions that may confuse responsibility, hinder cooperation, and perhaps, create waste through duplication.

Fortunately, in one instance we have avoided this problem through a thoughtful multicommittee response. Both Customs and Coast Guard have jurisdiction for some maritime air interdiction. We cannot, however, afford to fund the equipment twice so that both agencies could do this duty in the area of overlapping jurisdiction. We have solved this dilemma by authorizing four E2C surveillance aircraft in the Defense Department portion of this bill. We then give customs and Coast Guard the authority to use and maintain these planes subject to a determination by the cabinet level Drug Enforcement Policy Board as to whether customs or Coast Guard will have the lead agency status for maritime air interdiction.

This is one example of organizational planning in this bill. It is important, and if congressional efforts against drug trafficking are going to be successful, we will need to do much more of this type of multicommittee planning.

One area where I believe an expansion of power will not help our effort is the attempt to give the military power to make searches, seizures, and arrests. I plan to oppose an amendment to this effect. Although military involvement assistance in the antidrug effort should be expanded, the principal reliance should be upon civilian law enforcement personnel when it comes to the actual search, seizure, and arrest. This distinction goes back to the Civil War, was based on good reason then, and should be maintained for good reasons now.

In one other section of the omnibus drug bill, I fear that we may upset ongoing interdiction efforts. This bill establishes a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control. I question whether the convening of yet another conference is really necessary. We are well aware of the scope of the problem—that is what H.R. 5484 is all about. But what really concerns me about this proposal is the knowledge that the people actually coordinating, planning, and executing the interdiction effort are the ones who will be diverted from doing something about drug interdiction to organize and run this conference.

Title VI of H.R. 5484, which was the responsibility of the Judiciary Committee, makes great contributions to the drug enforcement effort by creating new law enforcement tools. The money laundering provisions of this bill for the first time make the laundering of drug money a crime in this country. By preventing traffickers from concealing or legitimizing their ill-gotten gains, we hope to take the profit out of the crime. This is one of the most effective parts of the bill because it goes to the heart of the drug trafficker's motivation.

H.R. 5484 also outlaws any manufacture of designer drugs outside the carefully controlled research environment of the food and drug laws. This will help prevent the creation of mystery drugs that are now manufactured legally under loopholes in the law. These drugs kill people or leave them with permanent disablements, like Parkinson's disease. Career criminals involved in drug trafficking will face mandatory prison sentences. Mandatory penalties are also established for drug trafficking, with a mandatory life sentence if death results from this despicable crime. No probation or parole is permitted in these sentences.

The Judiciary Committee also recommended the significant increase in authorization in H.R. 5484 for the construction of 17 new Federal prison facilities. Additional moneys for U.S. attorney and U.S. marshal resources are also included. This funding is yet another example of needed planning for our overall effort. It makes little sense to increase our interdiction commitment or to create mandatory drug trafficking sentences if we do not also provide extra prosecutors to try these cases or prisons in which to put the convicted traffickers. The prisons are 42 percent overcrowded today and the situation will worsen. This bill ensures that the system is healthy from beginning to end, which is essential if we hope to do a competent job against drug trafficking.

Mr. Chairman, although I have serious reservations about certain provisions in H.R. 5484, on balance, I believe it provides many needed improvements in our criminal laws. H.R. 5484 also recognizes the need for a more concentrated effort toward reducing drug demand. The omnibus drug bill hopefully reflects a genuine commitment on the part of this House to a long term commitment to the war on drugs. I will be supporting many amendments offered by my colleagues to improve H.R. 5484, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA], representing the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the omnibus drug bill of 1986. As has been stated throughout the day by our colleagues, the drug abuse problem in this country has reached the point where we no longer can tolerate its terrible impact on the people of our Nation. Drugs are crippling the lives of millions of our children, and killing thousands of them.

We must address the drug abuse problem firmly and concretely, pursuing every conceivable avenue to halt this growing tragedy. We must increase our education programs. We must tighten enforcement of antismuggling laws. We must stiffen the penalties for those who trade in drugs.

The omnibus drug bill of 1986 represents such a comprehensive approach to the drug problem, and the leadership of the House is to be commended for their efforts in developing this legislation and bringing it to the floor in a timely manner.

I would like to discuss the tit'e developed by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. Title VII proposes further changes in the Federal aviation laws to make them more responsive to the fact that airplanes and pilots are a crucial feature of drug smuggling. The Congress enacted the Aviation Drug Smuggling Act in 1984 which increased penalties on aviation drug smuggling activities. Title VII builds upon that earlier law.

Title VII would authorize the States to establish criminal penalties, including forfeiture of aircraft for certain violations of Federal regulations on aircraft registration and markings and pilot certification, particularly when fraud, forgery, or misrepresentation were willfully and knowingly involved. Improperly and fraudulently registered and marked aircraft are a common characteristic of the aircraft used in drug smuggling, and this provision would be a major tool to the authorities on the frontlines of the war against drugs.

The Public Works and Transportation Committee title would also establish new criminal penalties for violations of certain aviation regulations when the illegal transportation was of a controlled substance. Particularly, violators would be subjected to a fine of up to $25,000 or imprisonment of up to 5 years, if they operated an unregistered aircraft, served as an airman without an airman's certificate, violated regulations on display of navigation or anticollision lights, and operated an aircraft with a modified fuel system not approved by the Federal Aviation Administration.

Again, with these new penalties we hope to deter the ease of using aircraft in drug smuggling.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the House to pass this bill so that a comprehensive approach to this problem can be begun.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to again commend the ranking Republican on the Aviation Subcommittee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT], as well as our fine colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], for their efforts in this title of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT].

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my voice to those of my colleagues who condemn the spread of illegal drugs in this country. Unfortunately, private and commercial aircraft are often the methods used to smuggle those drugs.

Two years ago, the Public Works and Transportation Committee recognized this and took the initiative by helping to enact the Aviation Drug-Trafficking Control Act. That act strengthened the hand of the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] in dealing with drug smuggling. For example, it increased the period that an airman's certificate could be revoked for drug-related violations from 1 to 5 years. It also imposed criminal penalties for operating without an airman's certificate or using a fraudulent one in connection with drug smuggling activity.

But it is clear that more needs to be done. Therefore, we are pleased to join with other Members of this body in the omnibus antidrug legislation.

As the chairman said, title VII of this bill would give States the authority to establish criminal penalties for certain improper activities in connection with aircraft registrations. Drug smugglers have been known to forge aircraft registration certificates or obtain legitimate certificates by fraudulent means. The FAA apparently lacks the resources to uncover and respond to these illegal actions in many cases. This bill would therefore let States take up some of the slack. For instance, one who uses an aircraft with fraudulent registration could now have his aircraft seized either by a State or the Federal Government. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], is to be commended for his initiative.

Title VII would also establish new criminal penalties for certain violations of existing FAA regulations when these violations occur in connection with drug smuggling. For instance, smugglers are often aided in their illegal activities by flying with their lights off or by modifying their fuel tanks. These can be violations of FAA regulations in any event but they would now be criminal acts as well when done in connection with the illegal transportation of a controlled substance.

Finally, title VII directs the Secretary of Transportation to study the relationship between drug usage and highway safety.

Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that existing laws are not sufficient to stamp out the drug problem or stop drug smuggling by air. I seriously doubt that passage of this bill will totally change that. But I do believe that this legislation will provide important assistance to President Reagan and law enforcement authorities in their war against illegal drug trafficking. Hopefully, it will convince airmen that they risk not only their flying careers, but substantial fines and jail terms as well, if they engage in the prohibited activities.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of California). Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arkansas for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, section A of title VII of this omnibus drug bill is the product of several years of study and research of a problem that is prevalent in my district in Fort Lauderdale, FL, as well as in other border and coastal States hit hard by the drug smuggler.

I and my staff have worked on a legislative answer to the blatant abuse of our aircraft registration laws, and with cooperation from the Federal Aviation Administration I introduced a bill earlier this year, H.R. 5281, the language of which has been incorporated verbatim into this title of the bill.

The issue is fairly simple. Drug runners use private aircraft extensively to smuggle drugs into this country. In order to avoid any connection with their use of aircraft and the risks of their trade, they use false registration numbers on their planes, they file false registration forms with the Federal Government, and they make up false names and addresses of corporations that supposedly own these aircraft.

State and local law enforcement agencies that have jurisdiction over their local airports are aware of this practice and have the means to arrest and seize these aircraft that they believe are involved in the drug trade. The problem arises when local law enforcement acts to seize these aircraft, they are immediately thrown out of court because of Federal preemption. Technically, the courts are correct in applying the preemption doctrine in such cases, because Congress, through out creation of the Federal Aviation Administration, has preempted the area of aircraft registration.

This title of the bill cures that dilemma by delegating from the Federal Government to the States the right to enforce FAA regulations regarding aircraft registration.

This language does not give the several States the right to create their own different aircraft registration laws or regulations. What it does is give the States the right to create their own criminal procedure laws for enforcing the FAA regulations already in place.

Mr. Chairman, this is an excellent legislative cure to a blatant loophole that exists in our war on drugs and represents a compromise that we have worked our between State enforcement authorities and the interests of the Federal Aviation Administration.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize two gentlemen from my home district of Fort Lauderdale who helped identify this problem and worked hard to see a law passed that would allow them to do their job better. They are Sgt. Michael White, of the Fort Lauderdale Police Department, and Geoffrey Hochman, the legal counsel of the Fort Lauderdale Police Department legal unit. Without their persistence and help, this language would not have been drafted into bill form.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill, and I am very pleased to have contributed this provision to the bill.

□ 1625

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES].

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of California). Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was not objection.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is the first serious salvo in what must be an aggressive, all-out, sustained war on drugs.

As a member of the majority leader's Drug Task Force, and an original cosponsor of the bills introduced by my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH], I speak in strong support for this Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act.

This is truly comprehensive legislation. The area in which I concentrated concerned swift and sure punishment for those drug peddlers who prey on society, especially young people.

This bill gets tough with drug dealers. Recently, I read about a drug dealer in California who was given a lavish funeral with several Rolls Royces and an antique hearse. He has amassed huge sums of money by destroying people's lives. And he was proud of it even in death.

We must send a message across the country, that the war on drugs is on, and it will be won. We must let dealers know they will not make profits from drugs, they will not be free, and they will not be respected by their community.

By increasing penalties for drug-related offenses, this bill gets to the heart of the problem. I support the stiff, mandatory jail sentences established in the bill. Now we must ensure that our courts enforce these laws. This bill also authorizes additional funds for prison construction and maintenance, so there can be no excuse for allowing convicted drug offenders to run free.

This bill is omnibus in the best sense of the word. For too long we have talked about the drug problem, but we have been reluctant to commit the resources needed to really solve the problem. This bill correctly attacks both the supply and demand aspects of the situation.

We can not simply promote educational awareness and other demand side programs without also controlling the flow of drugs into the country and taking the profit out of dealing. By giving our agents the tools they need to interdict drugs, and by penalizing uncooperative drug source nations we will finally reduce the amount of drugs crossing our borders.

I would like to commend the leaders on both side of the aisle for their work in forging this truly bipartisan bill, and I would especially like to recognize the efforts of Mr. ENGLISH. If it were not for his perseverance and dedication to the drug problem over the years, we would not be debating this legislation today.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to have been part of this bill which gets to the root of our drug problem by attacking both the supply and demand, and I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of it.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to our fine colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, this problem of drug addiction is basic to the future of our country. Not only is it wreaking untold tragedy on contemporary America, on the hopes of families of kids for happy, successful lives, on the hopes of all of us for bringing our cities back to some kind of serenity, we know that drug-related crime is responsible for perhaps 60 percent of all the violent crime in our cities. It threatens the viability of cities. It threatens the viability of families.

It also threatens the viability of America's productive future. The surveys tell us that in 10 years, three-quarters of all jobs, all new jobs in this country, will require some degree of postsecondary education. That means anybody who is interested in a serious job will have to have completed high school and had some kind of additional training.

Place alongside that stark requirement the fact that one-third of all seventh graders have gotten involved in the drug scene and two-thirds of all high school seniors have been involved in the drug scene. Take very clear note of the fact that there is a clear statistical correlation between the intensity and length of alcohol or drug use and education success or education failure.

In a country that wishes desperately to be productive; in a country that wishes desperately to have an effective labor force so that we can be global competitors, successful global competitors in exporting America's goods and services, as we have always been, to maintain our wonderful standard of living, we are going to have to have an educated, skilled, productive work force that has at least a high school education, and for most of the new jobs, three-quarters of them, it is going to require more than that.

We know that prolonged in-depth use of alcohol or drugs spells education disaster for our kids. We must get to the point of teaching our kids that drugs are a no-no; that drugs lead down the road to failure, to family failure, to education failure, to job failure, and to very possibly death and the destruction of everything they hoped for.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation.

I am supportive of the paragraphs that cover the military as far as being used for drug interdiction in the fight on drugs. I think what is in the bill should stay there and I think we should give the military time and the President time to come back and tell us what the actually wants the military to do, to tell us in no uncertain terms how he wants the military to be used and then let the military, which includes the National Guard and Reserve, come back with plans how they can best fit into this program and do the best job.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the omnibus drug legislation and particularly title VII, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation's contribution to this important effort.

The first section of this title authorizes the States to establish criminal penalties, including the forfeiture of aircraft for violations of Federal aircraft registration laws. The States would be authorized to impose penalties against persons who forge aircraft registration certificates, sell or use fraudulent aircraft registration certificates, display false registration markings, or obtain an aircraft registration through false or fraudulent representations.

Presently, the States are preempted from dealing with these abuses. Although there a Federal laws against these types of actions, it is frequently States authorities who are on the frontline in the war on drugs. This section will provide them with another set of arrows in their quiver to stem the flow of illegal drugs in this country. As we all know, the use of improperly and illegally registered aircraft in drug smuggling is all to common and with this provision we hope to go a long way in making the use of these aircraft more difficult for the drug smuggler.

The second section establishes new Federal criminal penalties for violations of Federal Aviation Regulations in connection with drug smuggling. The illegal actions covered by this section include operating an unregistered aircraft, serving as an airman (pilot) without an airman's certificate, flying without lights, or operating an aircraft with a modified fuel system that has not been approved by the FAA. The penalties for these violations would be up to 5 years in prison or a fine of up to $25,000 on top of any penalties for violation of drug laws.

Again, with this section we are seeking to interrupt the ease of using aircraft to smuggle drugs.

The final section provides for a study by the Secretary of Transportation to determine the relationship between the usage of controlled substances and highway safety.

Mr. Chairman, we have an opportunity to do something to address the drug problem in this country. We no longer need just wring our hands over our inability to address the drug problem. This legislation before us is a comprehensive approach that I believe will provide very tangible benefits in the war on drugs.

Finally, I want to specifically commend my colleagues on the Public Works and Transportation Committee for their strong bipartisan efforts and contributions to this effort.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation and urge the Members to vote "yes" on the omnibus drug legislation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986 and especially in support of title VIII of that bill which was reported by the Education and Labor Committee by voice vote.

Experts believe that from 65 to 70 percent of all children have experimented with drugs. A recent survey of high school seniors revealed that more than half had used drugs. According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the Nation's high school students and other young adults still show a level of involvement with illicit drugs greater than can be found in any other industrialized nation in the world.

And more often, serious drug problems start with the abuse of gateway drugs like marijuana in the fourth or fifth grade.

Title VIII reflects the consensus that enhanced interdiction and law enforcement—however desirable—must be accompanied by drug abuse education and prevention. We need to turn the heavy pressure to experiment with drugs around into an attitude that says the cool thing to do is not do drugs.

Title VIII provides for grants to the States which, in turn, will make grants to local education agencies [LEA's] and for funds to be used to provide drug abuse education programs to dropouts. The Federal Government provides full funding in the first year. A 25-percent non-Federal match would be required in the second and third years.

The bill authorizes $350 million a year for 3 years to support drug abuse education and prevention. Frankly, it is not possible to operate a national program for less. Also, remember that this money is insignificant compared to the costs of drug abuse.

Experts estimate that Americans spend more than $100 billion a year on illicit drugs—the equivalent of half the Federal deficit. Drug sales are thought to be larger than the total net sales of General Motors Corp. and drug dealers earn more money than America's farmers.

Drug abuse costs are more than $100 billion in higher health costs, crime and violence, and lost productivity. For example, about 80 percent of all those behind bars—twice the rate in the general population—have taken drugs, and one-third of all inmates in Federal prisons are serving time for drug-related violations.

This bill emphasizes the crucial role of school-based drug abuse education and prevention programs to reduce demand for drugs. The committee recognized that there are many approaches to drug abuse education. States and localities should consider a broad array of approaches.

The bill provides incentives to develop effective drug abuse education approaches and facilitates the dissemination of knowledge about the best of them. For young children who have never used a drug, the emphasis should be on prevention. Data suggest that by the intermediate years, after kids have begun to experiment with drugs, early intervention programs are needed. Addicted youth should be referred to appropriate professionals for treatment.

In addition, the Secretary of Education is authorized to make grants to institutions of higher education. Funds would be available for preservice and inservice teacher training, summer institutes and workshops, and programs for law enforcement officials, community leaders, parents, and government officials. Not less than half the funds available to institutions of higher education must be used for programs of drug abuse education and prevention for students.

The committee bill reflects the priority we place on drug abuse education by creating a National Advisory Council on Drug Abuse Education. The council members—including representatives from entertainment and athletics—will act as spokesmen against drug abuse.

The fight against drug abuse must take place in the schools. We should also remember, however, that there is an extensive infrastructure of law enforcement, social service providers, health professionals, and others who deal competenty with drug abuse problems on a daily basis. The committee strongly encourages the establishment of linkages with existing programs and coordinating education programs with other programs.

□ 1635

Government alone is not going to solve this problem. Drug abuse affects all parts of our society, and the solution can only come through a joint effort like the kind this omnibus bill represents.

I want to commend the members of the Education and Labor Committee for working, to produce a bill that helps to balance our fight against drugs. This is a good bill and all members can be proud of it.

Drug abuse is not a partisan issue in any way. There is no Republican or Democratic way to fight drug abuse. The only way is to do it together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield the 10 minutes allocated for this section of the bill to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] for allocation as he sees fit.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we may be losing the most important battle in the war against drug abuse in this country. That is the battle for the future of our Nation's youngest school-age children.

The high drama of jungle warfare and border skirmishes with drug smugglers may seize the headlines, but our war on drugs will be won here at home, in our classrooms, and in the hearts and minds of our children.

In this war on drugs, we must fight on all fronts: against the street and schoolyard pushers; against the producers in faraway jungles; and against all the criminals who are getting rich ruining the lives of millions of Americans.

But the war will not be won until we have destroyed the market for illicit drugs right here in America. We will destroy that market when America's children learn and understand the awful devastation that results from drug abuse. We must equip our youngsters with this knowledge and with the training to combat the pressures that have lead them to experiment with drugs.

We cannot start too early in our children's lives with the education necessary to face and reject the lure of illicit drugs. None of us would stand idly by as an unwary child experiments with fire; just as the toddler learns that fire burns and its pain is agonizing, our children must learn early the dreadful results of drug abuse.

To this end, I rise in support of title VIII of the omnibus drug bill which implements a national program of antidrug education initiatives by providing grants to States for local education agencies and consortia to fund drug prevention, education, intervention, and referral services. From the individual family to the Federal Government, every sector of our society has a critical role to play in the war to protect our children's future. But no entity has a more critical role than our schools and the dedicated teachers who are frequently the most influential factors in children's lives.

The Committee on Education and Labor has crafted a comprehensive program to facilitate antidrug education programs for kindergarten through high school and postsecondary institutions. The need for these education programs is clear when we consider that the National Institute on Drug Abuse has reported that "this Nation's high school students and other young adults still show a level of involvement with illicit drugs greater than can be found in any other industrialized nation in the world." A recent survey of high schools seniors, sponsored by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, revealed that 54 percent reported using marijuana or hashish, 26 percent, stimulants, 18 percent, inhalants, and 12 percent, tranquilizers. Most disturbing was that cocaine use had risen to a new high of 17 percent and that more than one-third of the students did not feel that trying cocaine was dangerous.

U.S. News & World Report magazine estimated recently that Americans spend the equivalent of half the annual Federal deficit, upward of $100 billion, on drugs. Drug sales are larger than the total net sales of General Motors and drug dealers take in more money than all of America's farmers.

Title VIII of the omnibus drug package includes an amendment of mine which creates a National Advisory Council, made up of 15 to 25 Presidential appointees from the fields of entertainment, professional and amateur athletics, education, and the private sector who will focus national attention on drug abuse, its prevention. This effort will provide antidrug messages from role models for children in a variety of public forums, from television to personal appearances. We must deliver the same effective and credible message of America's intolerance of drug abuse as we have done with alcohol abuse. The National Advisory Council on Drug Abuse Education and Prevention will serve as the catalyst for the antidrug movement among our youth.

The focus on preventing drug use by our youngest school-age children must be accompanied by an intervention program for our intermediate and high school students who may have already started to experiment with drugs. These children and their families need the support that the school and community mental health professionals can provide. Title VIII supports a broad range of appropriate school-based initiatives aimed at preventing drug abuse.

During the committee hearing on this issue, we heard from several expert witnesses who represented some of America's most successful local and State programs. One common thread shared by all of the programs, from the Kansas City Project STAR [Student Taught Awareness and Resistance] Program to Governor Dukakis' initiative in Massachusetts, is the staunch belief that our children must be taught resistance techniques through intensive role playing and coaching to avoid peer pressure to try and use drugs. We know how to give our children the basic tools they need to resist drugs without the fear and stigma of not fitting in to the social setting of the school, this information needs to be disseminated throughout the Nation. Title VIII provides for this type of information sharing between successful programs, like Project STAR in my hometown, and communities that are looking for answers to the drug problems that they are experiencing.

One problem mentioned repeatedly during expert testimony on the Education and Labor title was the lack of technical information available to local education agencies on drug abuse prevention and education curriculum. Title VIII of this legislation requires the Secretary to provide technical assistance to State, local and intermediate educational agencies in the selection and implementation of drug abuse education and prevention curricula, approaches and programs.

Title VIII also requires the Secretary of Education and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a thorough 1-year study of the effectiveness of existing Federal, State and local programs of drug abuse education and prevention. This study will provide Congress and the administration with a comprehensive overview of what works in terms of drug education and prevention programs.

During committee markup, I added a local matching provision that will require a local 25-percent contribution, after the first year of a grant award, to antidrug education programs of cash or in-kind services, such as personnel or equipment. This local match provision was added in direct response to expert testimony during hearings which indicated that local community support is essential to successful drug education programs. Expert witnesses stated that the narcotic problem is a societal problem, and that it is crucial to mobilize the entire community in the effort to successfully combat drug abuse. The local match provision contained in title VIII will necessitate the interaction of schools, local businesses, civic and parental organizations in the fight to save our children from drugs. There is a waiver, however, so that the Secretary of Education can exempt a locality that cannot meet the match requirement for Federal funding due to economic adversity.

Mr. Chairman, regardless if we have more interdiction, stiffer prison sentences, additional law enforcement efforts and more prison construction, there will be some who will take the risk to sell drugs to America's youth. So long as there is a demand for drugs and a willing market for illicit drug products, America will be at the mercy of greedy drug dealers. We must start while our children are very young to teach them of the nightmare of drug abuse. These lessons must be taught at home and they must be taught in school, through our media and by our national role models. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting title VIII of the omnibus drug bill which will start all of America on the path of teaching our children to just say "no" to drugs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] has consumed 8 minutes. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, finally, the straw that broke the camel's back. Crack. That is what did it. For years, for decades, the drug problem proliferated our Nation; and yet, despite the valiant efforts of every level of Government, many arrests, many hazards, many more fatalities, we have pursued the normal, inefficient or inadequate course.

Those of us who have been in law enforcement met with frustration the realities of the day. When will people ever realize the enormity of this traffic? When will they understand that no one is immune? Slowly, ever so slowly, people realized it was not confined to the urban areas, to the ghettos and barrios of our Nation. They found it went to the suburbs: Yes, it went into the most affluential parts of our society.

There was some additional tension and additional response to it.

□ 1645

But with the advent of crack that just about swept our Nation, it presented a new dimension to the whole problem. There was a universal response from the administration and from the Congress, from the media, from society at large: "How can we meet this difficulty, this scourge?" Little did they think about the years that had transpired. But be that as it may, yesterday was yesterday. We are here talking about an omnibus drug bill that I am confident will be passed, will reflect the national commitment and I mean a national commitment on a persistent basis. It should not be a sometime effort. If this effort is to be successful at all, it requires constancy of purpose, determination to wipe out the problems and all of the evils that are attendant to this drug-trafficking business of ours.

Yes, I have been in law enforcement, and I have great admiration for law enforcement. But I am also realistic enough to know that law enforcement has not met the issue in a successful fashion. They have used all of their efforts and all of their energies and whatever other resources they had to the best of their ability, but they were not sufficient. This omnibus bill will provide some additional resources. Yet notwithstanding these additional resources, they will not alone be successful in vanquishing this foe. Education, education is critical. We cannot even estimate how much drugs come through our country. You give me a figure, I will give you a figure, and before we know it it is established as an authoritative figure. Some people say we are interdicting 10 percent, some say 6 percent; if you say 20 percent, no one really knows. Reality of the matter, no one really knows.

There is a market out there. There is a demand. And it is being met in very abundant fashion. Let us deal with the demand aspect. Tightening it helps considerably, not as much as I would like but certainly substantially more than we have done in the past; $350 million in the next 3 fiscal years, here we are talking about education, letting our teachers know, letting our school administrators know, letting our students know, our parents. All of them should be made aware and trained, trained.

I remember about 10 years ago serving on the Committee on Education and Labor, I made some suggestions about bringing law enforcement into the educational community. There was a hue and cry, "the ivory tower mentality made manifest. How can you trespass upon the sacrosanct community of education?" Well, my belief at the time was that the schools are extensions of the streets. Well, the educators have come to learn; they have been raped, they have been robbed, they have been pillaged. Now they learn, bring the policemen in. They have security forces within. Now they have a better understanding and it is helpful to some degree but still not adequate.

What is necessary is to get these children, yes, as soon as we can, as soon as we can. The facts are clear, once a child reaches junior high school, the decision to use drugs has already been made. Nearly two-thirds of all high school seniors report using drugs. Nearly one-third of all seventh graders say they have already tried them.

Twenty-five percent of our fourth graders say they feel peer pressure to try drugs. Twenty-five percent of fourth graders.

You cannot start early enough. Kindergarten is where you start. You start that education there, you start that with all the other educational situations and bring this in; education, reduce the demand, reduce the market, make them know the agonies of drug addiction.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, this is an extremely important and frustrating subject. I served as attorney general in Vermont back in the late 1960's and early 1970's. Even then we had a serious drug problem, but the predominant problem then was marijuana. Here we are again, many years later, faced with a drug crisis, but the problem now is cocaine, a much more serious problem.

Further, I also spent 2 weeks this year on duty with the Navy apprehending people transporting the drugs into the country, a very frustrating job and one which is doing very little to stem the tide, with only about 6 percent being interdicted.

To me the only answer is to destroy the demand. We are going to have very little luck in trying to destroy the supply.

The way we do that in my estimation primarily is through education.

That is why I support the education provisions of this bill as being probably the only real legitimate answer to the problems that we are facing.

A national consensus has formed concerning the use of drugs in America. There is a sense that things are getting out of hand. Young children smoking crack. Teenagers on PCP. Athletes, businessmen, and soldiers dependent on cocaine. These are all drugs that can ruin a life and endanger the safety of others. It is absurd to say that interest in this problem is only a creature of the media and politicians. The individual and societal damage caused by drug abuse is all too real.

Of course, drug abuse is nothing new to the United States or any other country for that matter. Likewise, there have been previous efforts to reduce the flow of drugs into the country and reduce their use in the population. While most of these efforts have met with only limited success, we cannot use that as an excuse to surrender in the face of a growing problem.

I support the general provisions of the omnibus drug bill being considered today. If we are to make any headway in this area certainly international diplomacy, law enforcement, treatment, and prevention must all be involved. However, it appears that some of these efforts will continue to have only limited success. For example, it is estimated that law enforcement intercepts only 10 to 15 percent of the narcotics entering the country. I believe that it is in the areas of education and prevention where we will have our greatest impact.

I am a cosponsor of H.R. 5378, the bill reported out of the Education and Labor Committee, which forms the basis of the education and prevention provisions in the omnibus drug bill. This legislation would provide national leadership in the area of drug abuse prevention. H.R. 5484 recognizes the fact that it is best to start young in making children aware of the dangers of drug use and that schools should be one of the places that this education takes place. This is highlighted by a new Gallup Poll which found that drug use in the schools is viewed as the No. 1 problem in the Nation's schools.

The education portions of this bill would: Establish a national program to provide technical assistance to schools, create a clearinghouse and identify research priorities; fund State level programs for training, demonstrations, and drug abuse prevention among school dropouts; and provide local education agencies with funds to implement a coordinated drug abuse prevention and education program.

America has been called a nation of consumers. Unfortunately this is as true for drugs as for many other luxury items. We consume 60 percent of the world's production of illegal drugs. There is no doubt in my mind that turning off the demand is our best hope for making progress in this fight. I hope that other Members of Congress will agree with me and join me in supporting this legislation.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California reserves 2 minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield our 2 minutes to the minority leader [Mr. MICHEL] the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. And Mr. Chairman, I will yield the additional 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am in strong support of educational programs designed to inform children about the dangers of drugs. It is also essential to show them how to resist the social pressure of others who encourage them to try drugs. But this is not enough. Schools must discipline those children who take and distribute drugs if we ever expect to successfully combat this serious problem in our schools. It is totally counterproductive to hold classes and assemblies to educate students on the hazards of drugs if they can take or distribute drugs on school grounds without fear of suffering any consequences by school authorities.

Thus, it is absolutely essential that we discipline those who abuse drugs or who deal in drugs on school grounds. At my suggestion, this bill was amended by the Education and Labor Committee to require the enforcement of rules and regulations of student conduct relating to drugs. Educational agencies cannot receive grants unless they have in effect and enforce student disciplinary codes prohibiting drug related conduct.

I believe school administrators should accept responsibility for keeping both drugs and students under the influence of drugs off the grounds of their schools. The only way to do this is to firmly and effectively discipline guilty students. Unfortunately, in recent years administrators have become increasingly reluctant to discipline students who seriously misbehave. Some say this reluctance is due to a fear of being sued by parents. But whatever the many reasons may be, the prevalence of drugs in our schools demands that administrators regain their authority for enforcing standards of conduct and receive the support of the community for doing so. I believe, and I think the great majority of parents would agree, that teachers and principles should return to their previous roles serving in loco parentis during that time period when children are entrusted to their supervision and care, especially when it comes to the issue of drug related behavior.

Therefore, in this legislation, the enforcement of a disciplinary code is established as a condition of receiving a grant. For the first time, the Federal Government is making a statement that it backs up local administrators who discipline students for serious misconduct—namely, misconduct related to drugs.

I wish to emphasize that due process must be provided in the enforcement of these disciplinary codes by school administrators. When a student has been accused of drug related misconduct, that student, must, at a minimum, be given a chance to be heard to present his or her side of the story before any disciplinary action is taken. Furthermore, the student conduct codes must be implemented and enforced on a nondiscriminatory basis.

My second amendment approved in committee requires educational agencies to coordinate with Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials. If schools do not cooperate with law enforcement officials, they cannot receive a grant. School administrators must bring in law enforcement officials when necessary, particularly in those serious cases where students are distributing drugs on school grounds.

The State of Massachusetts has provided an excellent model of school-police cooperation which I would strongly urge local school districts to emulate. This cooperation is centered around a memorandum of understanding. Communities in Massachusetts are encouraged to formulate a written memorandum of understanding between the school superintendent and the local police chief outlining the procedures each will follow for dealing with students caught using or selling drugs and setting out a process for school-police cooperation.

Cooperation with law enforcement is essential is we are to have effective programs. Students will not take seriously classroom instruction if we are indifferent to drug abuse in the school.

Let me briefly outline some of the recommended contents of a memorandum of understanding.

The school should have a specific administration official designated for referral of all drug related incidents.

A teacher who suspects a student of engaging in drug related conduct should escort him or her to the designated official.

The official should give the student a chance to respond. If the student denies the charge but the official has a reasonable suspicion that the charge has merit, the official may search the student and his or her immediate possessions or locker.

Any illegal substances found should be turned over to the police. The student's parents should be notified immediately.

The school should agree to report to the police all incidents of possession of alcohol or drugs by students. Names of students could be withheld in certain instances.

The school should report to the police any person reasonably suspected of selling or distributing drugs or alcohol on or near school property.

The local police should designate a specific person to work closely with the school.

If the police are called by the school because a student has been discovered in possession of or selling drugs, the police should come to the school and take custody of the student. Parents must be notified immediately.

At the same time, precautions must be taken by both school and police officials to ensure that the educational process is not disrupted.

These are strong measures. But strong measures are needed to fight the serious problem of drug use in our schools.

Before closing, I would like to express a concern. As you know, the Education and Labor title of the bill has a limited authorization of 3 years. In the 1970's, Congress changed its practice of enacting continuously authorized programs and began to enact new programs for limited authorization periods. This, of course, requires Congress to reauthorize each program at the end of the specified authorization period if the program is to continue. The purpose of this reauthorization requirement is to provide periodic reevaluation of the need for and the effectiveness of existing Federal programs. I am afraid, however, that all too often Congress reauthorizes programs without meaningful oversight and evaluation, and, as a result, fails to weed out those which are not effective or which have outlived their usefulness. I would like to emphasize the importance of not making that same mistake when we are confronted with the question of reauthorizing this legislation. We must conduct a careful and meaningful oversight and if necessary, change or eliminate this program if it is not accomplishing its intended purposes.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCKERNAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCKERNAN] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCKERNAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity to comment on the drug bill before us today, and the drug problem which confronts this Nation. Every American citizen is adversely affected—either directly or indirectly—by drug abuse in the United States, and I applaud the leadership on both sides of the aisle for bringing this measure to the floor in such a timely manner.

For a number of years, the Federal Government has recognized the growing drug problem in the United States, but the approach that has been taken has lacked central coordination. Although Federal expenditures for drug-related activities have increased by a factor of 25 over the last 15 years, both Congress and the administration have failed to truly recognize the extent of this problem, the persistence of this problem, and how difficult it will be to eradicate drug abuse in this Nation. The bill before us today represents congressional awareness of the magnitude of American drug abuse, and is at least a step in the right direction to providing this Nation with an effective, coordinated drug policy that attacks this destructive element of our society.

One needs only to look at a few figures to realize what we are facing. We're facing an epidemic in which over one-tenth of the total U.S. population has tried cocaine, while one in five Americans have used illicit drugs of one form or another. This figure comes as no surprise: it is estimated that over 4,500 tons of illicit drugs are available to the American public—4,500 tons which can be sold easily on our streets, in the office and workplace, in our playgrounds and in our schools. It is particularly alarming to look not only at the number of people who regularly use some form of illicit drug, but at who the new groups of people are that are using them.

Tragically, drug use is spreading to lower and lower age groups. Ten years ago, or even 5 years ago, the thought of drugs being prevalent in the upper elementary or middle schools seemed beyond the realm of possibility. We know now that it is not. If left unchecked, the drug problem could and probably will spread at an alarming rate to the fifth, the fourth, and even lower grades, increasing by exponential proportions the drug crisis we have at hand. It is clear to us now that in many areas of drug abuse, we have waited too long—perhaps even the provisions of this bill will not adequately address drug interdiction, enforcement, and education issues sufficiently to stem the tide. But we can try to contain the problem. With the added influence and pressure that elder siblings and schoolmates provide, we need to eliminate the potential threat that this downward spread in drug use presents to all elementary school children, and we must take effective action now.

This bill does just that. The education component of this bill provides sound measures for eradicating drugs from our schools, and the areas around our schools. Funds are tied to effective objectives, but are provided in such a way as to allow local control over how best to deal with the problem. And, to prevent the spread of drug abuse not only in numbers, but in the age group for whom drug use is prevelent, I was very pleased that my colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee adopted my amendment, which directs the Secretary of Education to concentrate research efforts on grades K-4.

With an emphasis on curriculum and teacher training at the early years, I believe we can seriously curtail future substance abuse and dependence, and better prepare students for the pressures with which they may be faced to try drugs. We need to know what will work with this age group, and we need to let teachers know how to deal with this issue before drug abuse in elementary schools is completely out of control. My amendment helps to ensure that our schools have the tools and the talent to combat substance abuse at the early elementary level, giving us the opportunity to stay one step ahead of the drug epidemic.

There is no question in my mind that we need to beef up our attack on the demand side of the drug abuse problem—the users who keep the drug dealers, growers, and manufacturers in business. But we also need to strengthen our ability to deal with the supply side of this issue. I support the provisions of this bill which recognize the need for greater interdiction capabilities, and stronger measures to send a clear message to the illicit drug industry that we mean to get tough—and are willing to give our police, our customs agents, the Coast Guard, and our courts the means to implement a tough drug policy. This "get tough" policy doesn't just mean providing additional funds for law enforcement agencies and prison construction, although both of these are essential to an effective drug prevention campaign. It also means coordination at the Federal, State, and local levels to ensure that we are attacking drug trafficking in the most efficient, effective manner. It is for this reason that I am pleased that my colleagues of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee adopted my amendment to title IV of this bill, which states that the Coast Guard should coordinate their activities with other law enforcement efforts. Cooperation between different government agencies, such as the Coast Guard, local law enforcers, and the individual States, is essential if we are to accomplish our goals of beating back the drug epidemic that draws an estimated $120 million out of American pockets to support the demand for drugs, and which costs the rest of society more than $100 billion annually in increased health care costs, lost productivity, crime, and violence; and the total in human suffering is even greater.

In recent years, the Federal response to the mounting drug crisis has been stepped up law enforcement and interdiction. But the problems continue to escalate and the trends have become frighteningly similar in every community in this country. We need a two-pronged attack to combat drug abuse—we need to confront both supply and demand to win the war on drugs, and I believe that the enforcement and education aspects of this bill provide us the vehicle to begin this endeavor. Mr. Chairman, I heartily endorse the bill before us, and recommend its adoption by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank both the majority leader as well as the minority leader for having my two amendments included in the package to be offered en bloc. I also appreciate the efforts of both gentlemen for their excellent work on the drug package.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to thank Mr. Rick Salwen, a Dallas attorney and good friend of mine, for bringing to my attention a particular problem which is the subject of one amendment.

My first amendment concerns the curricula used in elementary and secondary schools. Specifically, it states that drug programs containing curricula for elementary and secondary schools specifically use only those which present a clear and consistent message that drugs are wrong and harmful.

There are a great number of materials available to teachers and school officials which are excellent and properly present the dangers of drug use and abuse. However, there are also some materials which are either neutral or somehow condone limited use of drugs. For example, there is a book entitled "Chocolate to Morphine" published by Houghton Mifflin in 1983 which is currently in use as a text in schools across the country. I would like to cite some passages which indicate the problems inherent in such a text which fail to present the clear and consistent message I referred to earlier.

One passage states:

> We will follow a middle course by presenting neutral information and by asking both sides to change some basic conceptions about drugs as a result of reading this material * * *. Preventing drug abuse is a realistic goal. Two approaches are possible. One is to teach people, especially young people, how to satisfy their needs and desires without recourse to drugs. The second is to teach people how to form good relationships with drugs so that if they choose to use drugs, they will continue to be users and never become abusers.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we should be presenting a neutral course regarding drug use nor do I believe we should even give children the suggestion that they may "use drugs intelligently".

Let me cite another passage. It says that "young people are going to decide for themselves whether to use drugs. The most that responsible adults can hope to do is give children the information that will enable them to use drug intelligently if they choose to use them at all."

In another passage, the book says "we have seen parents in good relationships with marijuana let their children take occasional puffs of joints in much the same way that some Jewish parents allow their children ceremonial sips of wine."

Let me also point out that some books are less overt and more neutral, yet I believe, equally objectionable. In another book—"The Encyclopedia of Psychoactive Drugs," published in 1985, the book is handsomely illustrated and "geared for teenagers." It is informative and presents facts about drug use and some of its harms but fails to directly and consistently say that drugs are harmful. For example, it contains cartoons picturing drugs as humorous. It contains pictures of picketers with placards saying that "Marijuana Is Wholesome."

My friend Rick Salwen from Dallas has informed me about a program currently being offered in Texas called CASPAR—an acronym for the Cambridge and Somerville Program for Alcoholism Rehabilitation. This program not only trains teachers but provides materials for use in an alcohol education program. According to CASPAR's own materials, their "Decisions About Drinking" book has been purchased by over 1,500 schools and agencies in 49 States and 7 countries.

These materials which I suspect were compiled with the best of intentions are simply unacceptable in their philosophy. Quoting from their materials: "CASPAR's approach has maintained that is is inappropriate for a public school to adopt a position either for or against drinking. The adoption of such a position by school personnel would entail the teaching of values that are bound to conflict with those held by parental and religious groups in the community. Schools must therefore formulate an alternative: to teach responsible decisionmaking in relation to alcohol use (for some children this might mean abstinence and for others nondisruptive social drinking, both of which the curriculum views as responsible choices that teenagers should be permitted to make), and by that means establish a goal which can be supported by abstainers and social drinkers alike."

Surely, Mr. Chairman, this program and others like it fail to send the proper message. My point is that it is not enough to let the children decide; we must tell them to "just say no." Drugs and alcohol are harmful and curriculum materials must indicate exactly that.

CASPAR's program contains some interesting materials which I believe are simply wrong. For example, in a cartoon, the reader is given the suggestion that it is okay to drink and drive, so long as the teenager is "careful" about his drinking. In a suggested discussion exercise, designed for children in the third grade, that a teacher "should emphasize positive, healthy uses of alcohol if students equate drinking alcohol with drunkenness." Finally, we find a sheet entitled "Ethnic Groups and Alcoholism." This sheet divides groups into categories of "low rates of alcoholism—including Italians, Jews, Chinese, and Greeks in the United States—and those with "high rates of alcoholism (WASP, Irish, Native Americans)."

Mr. Chairman, these materials are clearly unacceptable. But I do want to emphasize and do so emphatically—my point is not to unduly criticize any particular drug program. There are many good drug programs out there which do an admirable job, we should applaud them for it. Others are questionable. We should clearly send a message to those applying for this money to use their own good judgment in determining which materials to use and which not to use. Those materials used should only be those which clearly and consistently state that drug use is harmful and dangerous.

My other amendment, Mr. Chairman, places special emphasis on parental involvement in drug prevention and education programs, especially education on the symptoms and effects of drug use. It's not enough that parents take part in programs to help children who become victims of drug abuse. Parents and families need to have information available about how to recognize the symptoms of drug abuse and correct the problem early.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of these amendments. Before I conclude, I would like to thank Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri for his fine efforts in putting together this drug package.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the bill H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. I would like to commend Speaker O'NEILL, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. MICHEL for their timely efforts in assembling this bipartisan proposal to address the problem of substance abuse in this country.

Throughout our work here in the Congress, we are asked to set priorities. I can think of no greater priority than our children. Our children are our future and it is up to us to take on the responsibility to provide our young people not only with basic skills, but also afford them the opportunity to develop their minds and bodies to meet and overcome the challenges they will face today and in the future.

Yet, it is becoming more and more apparent that we are not fulfilling our responsibilities as well as we should. The statistics of substance abuse are alarming. We must also keep in mind that substance abuse is much more than statistics. Behind all of the numbers and the percentages are people, in many cases young people, who are in great need of assistance.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, which has jurisdiction over alcohol and drug abuse education programs, I was pleased to work with the my colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee to develop title V of this bill to enhance the Federal role in addressing the problem of substance abuse among our young people. Title V establishes a program of Federal grants to States for the development of comprehensive drug abuse prevention and education programs in elementary and secondary schools.

The committee heard from a number of persons who are concerned with the problem of substance abuse. Most of the witnesses spoke of the great impact of peer pressure on the use and abuse of alcohol and drugs among teenagers. M.L. Carr, former Boston Celtic, told us of a program which uses well-known personalities to stress to the young people that positive actions will create bright opportunities, but they, the young people, must be willing to test themselves. They must be willing to resist peer pressure and say "No" to drugs and alcohol and concentrate their time and talent to say "Yes" to opportunity. I am pleased that this legislation encourages development of such programs across the country.

Recently, the House passed H.R. 4650, the Youth Suicide Prevention Act. That legislation included my amendment which would require coordination of a school's suicide prevention efforts with school-based and community-based alcohol and substance abuse programs. I am pleased that H.R. 5484 also requires the coordination of efforts in these areas. Although we don't know exactly how the relationship between substance abuse and suicide is played out, whether it is causal or not, we do know it is important. I would hope that these efforts will help us discover this important link.

We have an excellent opportunity to not only address the needs of the abuser, but by supporting this measure, the House of Representatives will send a signal to our colleagues in the other body, the administration, and the American people that we are serious in our commitment to battle this problem. My colleagues, I ask you to join me in making this commitment.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I was honored to participate in preparing the portion of this bill under the jurisdiction of the Education and Labor Committee. During that work, I was anxious to see that school-based antidrug abuse programs would be closely integrated with communitywide efforts to stop drug abuse. I am pleased that school-based programs will be created and guided by advisory committees. Membership will include not just school personnel, but also parents, mental, social, and health service professionals and law enforcement officials. Through this mechanism, the school programs will be a key component of an integrated, communitywide effort to stop drug abuse.

I also commend the committee for recognizing the need to provide flexibility in funding so that the full range of effective approaches may be used in their most appropriate settings. Prevention, early intervention, education, and rehabilitation referral are all allowable activities under this act. Moreover, the funds may be used for year-round programs and funds unexpended in 1 year may be carried forward to the next.

When people in my district learned that we were working on this legislation, it let loose a floodgate of emotion. Everyone with whom I talked had some personal experience to relate about the sad effects of drug abuse. A brother, a nephew, a friend—everybody seemed to have a loved one whose life had been damaged by drug abuse. And all of those people who came to relate their stories left no doubt that they dearly want something done about this problem. They see their communities being destroyed by drugs. Our citizens want neighborhoods that are healthy, secure places in which to live. They want this legislation. This is a bill the American people place first on their own legislative agenda. It is an effort for which they want their tax dollars spent because they know the potential return on their investment. The people are right. We should pass this measure without a single dissenting vote.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO] representing the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. As a cosponsor, I urge the passage of this bipartisan effort to combat drug abuse and illegal drug trafficking in our Nation.

Our Nation finds itself in the midst of a drug epidemic while drug abuse and increased drug trafficking threatens the very foundations of our society. Drug abuse cuts across socioeconomic lines and does not discern between race, age, gender, and financial worth. The drug problem, which is reaching massive proportions, challenges the future of our Nation by attacking our youth and impeding progress. I challenge my colleagues to walk through any public housing project, as I recently did in Camden, NJ, and get a sense of the continuous drug deals, the pervasive use of drugs, and the feeding of further crimes such as theft, murder, and prostitution to finance drug habits.

But let us do away with the common perception that drug abuse is a problem of the inner city, the ghetto, the public housing projects. It can be found in our more affluent schools and we have fast become aware of the damage it causes as promising young athletes, such as Len Bias, fall victim to the horrors of drug abuse. The tragedy of drug abuse has ruined lives, families, careers, and futures and it is fast threatening our Nation.

Drug abuse is clearly a national problem that pleads for a national solution. The Omnibus Drug Act seeks to combat drug abuse on a variety of fronts. It strikes at the core of our drug problem by boosting eradication efforts, by bolstering enforcement against drug smuggling and drug use. By reinforcing the Coast Guard and Customs Service, the bill makes more difficult the smuggling of drugs into the country.

Importantly, this $1.5 billion effort reinforces efforts to educate our youth about the evils of narcotics and seeks to rehabilitate drug abusers. By focusing efforts on rehabilitation and education, we are not throwing money at the problem but seeking to eliminate the demand for more drugs. I find the $350 million authorization for grants to States to support drug abuse education and prevention programs an important first step in educating the public on the evils of drugs. As a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, I am pleased with the provisions approved by my committee to grant $150 million to the States for drug abuse treatment and prevention. My own State of New Jersey will be allotted $2.6 million for treatment and $1.5 million for prevention to combat a very evident problem.

Having focused on the pervasiveness of drug abuse in sports as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, I urge my colleagues to support the provision that creates an Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletics. The Commission would have 18 months to report back to Congress with recommendations for addressing the drug abuse problem among intercollegiate athletes. Drug abuse among athletes, which was manifested in the death of Len Bias, threatens the very role models for our Nation's youth. By ending drug abuse among college and university athletes we will be able to show many of other young people that drugs are a dead-end street.

Drug abuse is costing our Nation over $170 billion annually. Its cost in lives and our future is immeasurable. I urge passage of this vital and momentous legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, for the Commerce section, title IX, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS] for allocation as he sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, at the onset, let me say that I am supportive of this legislation. We have for some time needed a formal commitment from the Federal Government—a commitment of policy and money—a bipartisan, unified commitment and that's what this bill does. It also reflects a feeling on the part of the Congress to tell those dealing in illicit drugs that we mean business—that we're not going to take it any more—and that we're prepared to take sterner measures and will get thougher and so, I support and shall vote for H.R. 5484. I believe that passage will indicate to the American people that the Nation's leaders are committed to stamping out drugs and that we are going to get tough with those who seek to destroy the youth of our country. The drug problem continues to worsen and the moral fabric of our society is threatened. However, even though the bill before us today is basically good, there are some areas which need fine tuning. Mr. Chairman, later, when we get to the amendment stage, I, along with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. OXLEY, will be offering an amendment to seek to fine tune the Energy and Commerce Committee section of the bill.

We will seek to strike the provision which would establish the Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes. In a bill with a total price tag of close to $2 billion, an amendment seeking to strike a commission which will cost the taxpayers $650,000 may not seem important. However, there is a principle involved here and I am not alone in my opposition. In a Washington Post editorial this morning the question is posed whether we really need the Athletic Commission. I don't think so. Opposition to the creation of this commission was also voiced to me today by the program director for alcohol and drug abuse in the State of Florida.

Her feeling was the same as mine—wouldn't these funds be better used for treatment facility expansion and increases in salaries for underpaid drug counselors. Should we be using this drug bill as a vehicle to study recruiting practices of college athletes and the impact of television on college athletes. I don't think so. The White House conference which would be authorized under H.R. 5484 does have the authority to look into drug use among college athletes. If we don't use our finite resources to address the needs of young children who are waiting for admission to a drug treatment program, they will never have the opportunity to get to college.

I commend my colleague from Ohio, Mr. LUKEN, for his concern about college athletes. I know he is sincere and I don't like standing up here today criticizing his efforts. However, the fact is that this bill is not the appropriate vehicle to mandate a study of college athletes. The items which are specified for investigation by the federally funded commission are already being addressed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, at no cost to the taxpayers. We have a finite amount of dollars in the Federal coffers and a deficit that is an embarrassment. We are all here today in a bipartisan manner embracing an all-out war on drugs. We're not sure how we will pay for the programs yet; however, let's don't lose sight of the need to practice responsible fiscal policy. I urge my colleagues to support passage of my amendment and passage of the bill. It's a step in the right direction.

□ 1700

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the chairman of our Health Subcommittee, the Member who has played the greatest role in the area of drug abuse programs, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986. It is the strongest and most comprehensive attempt by any Congress in history to tackle the problem of drug abuse.

Legislative action is urgently needed. Drug abuse and drug addiction in this country have reached unprecedented levels. Americans are using illicit drugs and abusing alcohol and prescription medicines in greater numbers than ever before. We know this from the mortality statistics. We know this from admissions to hospital emergency rooms. We know this from reports of drug treatment centers forced to turn patients away for lack of space.

Mr. Chairman, in 1986 we have reached a point at which children are coming into contact with drugs and alcohol at frighteningly young ages. To parents the age of 13 signals the beginning of a young person's teenage years. It also signals an age at which our children will be exposed to and in too many cases, pressured—to use drugs. The results of this use can be catastrophic.

In his August 4 address to the Nation, President Reagan called for "a national crusade against drugs." In the address the President said:

All the confiscation and law enforcement in the world will not cure this plague as long as it is kept alive by public acquiescence * * *. We must now go beyond efforts aimed only at affecting the supply of drugs; we must affect not not only supply, but demand.

Mr. Chairman, it is increasingly clear that law enforcement alone cannot effectively deal with a public health crisis as complex and intractable as drug abuse.

The legislation before us carries forward on the President's call for a fundamental change in public attitudes toward drugs. If we are to have any chance of fundamentally affecting the incidence of drug abuse in this country, we must affect demand. The legislation before us will place increased priority upon the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse. It will provide additional funds to open up treatment programs and end the waiting lists.

The American public will no longer tolerate complacency on this issue. Since 1980, Federal support for alcohol and drug abuse treatment and prevention services has declined by 45 percent. We currently spend $230 million for support of State drug and alcohol abuse prevention and treatment programs. At the Federal level, less than $7 million is spent on drug and alcohol abuse prevention and education programs.

Prevention of substance abuse is addressed by three initiatives. First, existing drug and alcohol prevention programs within the Department of Health and Human Services are consolidated into a new agency for substance abuse prevention. These activities are currently underfunded, lacking direction and suffer from administrative neglect. Second, a clinical training program is initiated to train health professionals in better understanding the symptoms and proper treatment of drug and alcohol abuse as well as assure the availability of qualified drug and alcohol abuse treatment counselors. Third, $50 million is authorized for a block grant program to assist States in developing and implementing substance abuse prevention programs at the State and local level.

Title IX of the legislation was the product of deliberations by the Energy and Commerce Committee as reflected in H.R. 5334 which was reported on August 14, 1986.

The principal feature of that bill, and title IX of H.R. 5484, is the authorization of $180 million for activities to reduce the demand for drugs.

The $180 million would be allocated among three priority areas:

First, $100 million is assistance to States through a block grant for drug abuse treatment. These additional funds will permit States to expand their drug abuse treatment systems and eliminate the waiting lists of drug abusers seeking treatment.

Second, $50 million in assistance to States through a block grant for drug abuse prevention. This is the first time the Federal Government has ever committed large resources to develop a national drug and alcohol abuse prevention policy.

Third, $30 million for better administration and coordination of substance abuse prevention programs at the national level. These would include development of public service announcements, prevention literature, providing technical assistance to States and localities, and supporting clinical training of health professionals including drug and alcohol abuse counselors.

In addition, title IX of H.R. 5484 establishes a Congressional Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes.

The major focus of the Advisory Commission will be the use of drugs by college athletes, the role of colleges in discouraging the illegal use of drugs by athletes, and the need for mandatory testing of athletes for illegal drug use.

Finally, the legislation closes a loophole in Federal drug abuse law and will stop the sale of "poppers," a widely abused drug known by chemists as butyl nitrite. The substance is sold as room odorizer although it is widely used as an inhalant for its euphoric effect. It is viewed by many drug abuse experts as an important drug of initiation for children.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the legislation and am submitting the following detailed explanation of the provisions of title IX to be printed in the RECORD at this point:

ANALYSIS—H.R. 5484, TITLE IX—DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT OF 1986

SECTION 901. SHORT TITLE

The first section cites the Act as the "Drug Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986."

Subtitle A—Financial assistance to States and communities

Section 902 adds a Part D—"Emergency Substance Abuse Treatment and Prevention" to Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act. The new Part D contains four new sections 1935-1939.

Section 1935 (Authorization of Appropriations) authorizes $180 million in Fiscal Year 1987 for the allotments authorized by Part D and the activities of the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention.

Section 1936 (Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention) provides that of funds appropriated for the purposes specified in Section 1935, $30 million shall be made available for the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention (ASAP). The ASAP is established by Section 507 of the Public Health Service Act as amended by Section 905 of this legislation. The legislation requires that the Secretary allocate the first $30 million appropriated under Section 1935 for support of national activities sponsored by the ASAP. All funds appropriated in excess of $30 million must be allocated pursuant to sections 1937 and 1938.

Section 1937 (Allotments for Treatment Services for Drug Abuse).

Subsection (a) provides that two-thirds of funds appropriated under Section 1935 and available for allotment shall be allotted to each state for the purpose of providing drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation services for persons suffering from drug abuse. Funds will be alloted to each state pursuant to a formula prescribed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The formula will be based equally on the population of each state (ages 15-65) and on the population of each state (ages 15-65) weighted by its relative per capita income.

The General Accounting Office (GAO) worked closely with the Congress in devising the formula which the Secretary should use to allocate funds under this section.

The formula allocates available funds to states based on two factors: (1) the population at risk, and (2) a relative income factor which provides relatively more aid to low income states. The population at risk for a state is defined as the number of state residents ages 15 through 64 as reported by the Bureau of the Census for the most recent year in their Current Population Reports, Series P-25. The relative income factor for a state is defined as the ratio of its total personal income per person at risk to the corresponding income per person at risk for all states. The data for total personal income is defined as the most recent three year average of state personal income as reported by the Department of Commerce in the Survey of Current Business.

Table 1 shows each state's trial allotment calculated using the formula described below:

State Allotment = [POP (1.0-0.5 RIF/Sum of Numerator]AMT

POP=State Resident's Ages 15 through 64

RIF=Relative Income Factor

AMT=$100 million appropriation

The population data is as reported for July 1, 1984 by the Bureau of the Census, and total personal income is as reported by the Department of Commerce for 1982 through 1984. The 0.5 weight attached to the relative income factor determines the extent to which funds are targeted to low income states. A weight of zero would result in a formula based exclusively on the population at-risk factor.

Due to inadequacies in reporting annual population and relative income data for the territories and Puerto Rico, it is intended that the Secretary reserve ½ of 1 percent of appropriations under this section for allocation to Puerto Rico and ¼ of 1 percent for allocation to the territories based on their relative population.

Funds paid to a state under this Section would be available only for Fiscal Year 1987. The purpose of funds allotted under this section are intended to deal with an emerging drug abuse crisis which requires the training of treatment counselors and expansion of treatment services in response to increased demand. Allotments under this authority are intended to supplement, rather than supplant existing federal, state or local funding of drug treatment programs. In the event a state is unable to effectively use the funds available through this allotment during fiscal year 1987, unexpended funds will be returned to the Treasury or allocated proportionately to other states for use in Fiscal Year 1987.

Subsection (b) provides that funds allotted to a state shall be used to provide treatment and rehabilitation services for persons suffering from drug abuse. States should place priority on expansion or development of treatment programs suitable to the needs of young people who are most at risk of drug abuse and addiction. In contrast to other age groups, young people—particularly college students—are vulnerable to peer pressure and are often without the support of parents, spouses and community.

Many states provide alcohol and drug abuse treatment support through organizations with combined alcohol/drug treatment programs. In fact, of 5,901 alcohol and/or drug treatment units receiving funds from State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Agencies in FY 1985, 2,115 were combined units. In the context of a comprehensive, national public health policy, it is not possible or appropriate to arbitrarily distinguish between addiction to, or abuse of alcohol, versus illicit drugs or licit drugs.

Drug addiction is a complex medical and psychosocial phenomenon. Drug addiction does not differentiate between the social or legal status of the abused substance. In this regard, states should use funds available under this allotment to provide drug treatment services in regions of the state and to individuals most in need. The restriction in the statute, limiting use of allotments to drug abuse treatment, should not be construed to prevent a state from supporting the treatment and rehabilitation of an individual suffering from polydrug addiction or from providing financial assistance to a public or nonprofit private entity which treats alcohol or drug abusers. Assistance available to individuals under this section is not intended to distinguish between addiction or abuse of heroin, cocaine, prescription tranquilizers or alcohol.

Section 1938 provides that one-third of funds appropriated under Section 1935 and available for allotment shall be allotted to each state for the purpose of developing and administering a community-based substance abuse prevention program. Appropriations are allotted to states pursuant to a formula prescribed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services which is based upon the relative population of each state in the age group of 5 through 24. In developing a formula for allocation of funds under this section, the Congress worked closely with the General Accounting Office in selecting the formula most indicative of a state's need for substance abuse prevention services.

The formula for making allocations to states for substance abuse prevention programs is based on a state's relative share of the population at risk. The at-risk population is defined as the number of state residents between the ages of 5 and 24 as reported by the Bureau of the Census for the most recent year in their Current Population Reports, Series P-25. The following Table shows each state's trial allotment, calculated by multiplying its percentage share of the U.S. population aged 5 through 24 by a $50 million appropriation level. The population data is as reported for July 1, 1984 by the Bureau of the Census. Due to inadequacies in reporting annual population and relative income data for the territories and Puerto Rico, it is intended that the Secretary reserve ½ of 1 percent of appropriations under this section for allocation to Puerto Rico and ¼ of 1 percent for allocation to the territories based on their relative population.

Table 2 shows each state's trial allotment calculated using the formula described below:

State allotment=[POP/POPTOT]*AMT

POP=State Population ages 5 through 24.

POPTOT=U.S. Population ages 5 through 24.

AMT=$50 million appropriation.

The term "substance abuse prevention", is intended to include prevention of alcohol as well as other drugs of abuse. In this regard, states should place special emphasis upon the circumstances contributing to the onset of drug use by youth and a young person's later initiation into illicit drug usage.

To receive an allotment under this section, a State must submit an application to the Secretary which contains a plan for using the allotment in accordance with the requirements of subsection (b). Subsection (b) provides that states must utilize allotments for four activities.

1. Developing a state substance abuse prevention education program.

2. Developing community-based substance abuse prevention activities among school-aged children which will make the use of drugs unattractive to such children.

3. Developing of educational programs relating to the risks presented by alcohol and drug abuse to pregnant women and children.

4. Development of an education program relating to the risks of acquired immune deficiency syndrome among individuals who use drugs intravenously and relating to the transmittal of acquired immune deficiency syndrome from pregnant women to unborn children.

There is a critical need for public information and education programs by state governments to warn intravenous drug abusers of the dangers of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). Recent reports from the Public Health Service have said that more than a quarter of a million Americans will die of AIDS within the next five years. Other recent reports from the Centers for Disease Control have shown that an increasing number of those cases are among IV drug abusers. Many Americans—both drug abusers and people who are sexual partners of drug abusers—are unaware of the dangers of spread of the disease and will expose themselves to it, resulting in fatal illness, extended treatment costs, and lost productivity. States should use this authority to develop direct and accessible information programs about the nature of the disease's transmissiblity and about prevention of drug abuse and needle-sharing. There is also concern over the growing number of pediatric AIDS cases, cases which are principally infants born to mothers who are IV drug abusers. These children are born terminally ill, are difficult to find care for, and are very expensive to treat. It is intended that materials be developed by the states regarding the special AIDS risks that IV drugs pose to pregnant women and their children.

Funds allotted under this section are intended to support programs that will supplement school-based substance abuse prevention/education activities. Title Eight of this legislation authorizes funds for specific drug and alcohol abuse education programs directed at the nation's secondary schools. Prevention programs supported by the state through this section should be compatible with activities within the secondary school system, and give priority for non-school based prevention programs. These programs can include but are not limited to literature distribution, media campaigns, clearinghouse activities, speaker's bureau, scouting organizations, YMCA-YWCA, or other afterschool, community-based alternatives.

Section 1939 provides that funds allotted to states under Part D may not be used to (1) provide inpatient hospital services; (2) make cash payments to intended recipients of health services; (3) purchase or improve land, purchase, construct, or permanently improve (other than minor remodeling) any building or other facility, or purchase major medical equipment; (4) satisfy any requirement for the expenditure of non-federal funds as a condition for receipt of federal funds: (5) pay administrative costs; or (6) provide financial assistance to any entity, other than a public or nonprofit private entity.

Provisions of Title XIX, Part B, which are not inconsistent with subsection 1939(a) or sections 1937 or 1938, shall apply with respect to allotments made under sections 1937 and 1938. For example, Part B requires that states allocate a percentage of their allotments to mental health services. This restriction would not apply as it is in direct conflict with the provisions of section 1937 and 1938 which specify the purposes for which allotments are to be used. Section 1917 of Part B requires that states prepare and submit an annual report to the Secretary on its use of funds. Although an annual report is not specifically mentioned in Part D, subsection 1939(b) is intended to extend the requirements of section 1917 to funds appropriated under Part D.

Subtitle B—Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention

Section 905 adds a new Section 507 to Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act. Subsection (a) provides for the establishment of an Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention (ASAP) within the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration. The ASAP shall be headed by a Director appointed by the Secretary from individuals with extensive experience or academic qualifications in the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse. Subsection (b) specifies the responsibilities and jurisdiction of the ASAP. These responsibilities include:

1. sponsorship of regional workshops on drug and alcohol abuse prevention;

2. coordination of the findings of research sponsored by agencies of the U.S. Public Health Service on the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse;

3. development of effective drug and alcohol abuse prevention literature (including literature on the adverse effects of cocaine free base);

4. creation of public service announcements for radio and television broadcasting on the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse;

5. dissemination of prevention materials among states, political subdivisions, and school systems in cooperation with the Secretary of Education;

6. support of clinical training programs for substance abuse counselors and other health professionals;

7. development of educational materials to reduce the risk of acquired immune deficiency syndrome among intravenous drug abusers;

8. administer the state allotment program established by Title I of this legislation.

The Director of ASAP will be responsible for administering the Department's drug and alcohol abuse prevention and education programs and coordinating these activities with those of other federal agencies such as the Department of Education.

A special provision has been made in the legislation for the development of education materials to reduced the spread of the AIDS epidemic among intravenous drug abusers and their sexual partners. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) has begun efforts to develop innovative education projects for AIDS information, and the ASAP should work cooperatively with CDC to develop similar projects and materials for specific use with IV drug abusers and potential drug abusers and their sexual partners.

Subsection (c) directs the Secretary to establish a clearinghouse for alcohol and drug abuse information to assure the widespread dissemination of such information to the general public.

Subsection (d) directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish an advisory board to advise the Director of ASAP. A major component of a comprehensive plan to fight substance abuse is a public education campaign which makes effective use of the media. Consequently, a media advisory board is established to assist the ASAP in developing an effective educational effort that warns of the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse.

The advisory board is made up of 15 members, including representatives from the broadcasting, cable, newspaper, program production, and advertising industries as well as professional sport associations such as the National Football League, National Basketball Association and Major League Baseball. The principal purpose behind the board's composition is for the ASAP to have access to technical experts who can be of assistance in the implementation of campaigns aimed at educating the public about the problems of drug abuse. It is intended that the advisory board will be able to encourage the media to increase their ongoing efforts to raise public awareness of the need to prevent illegal drug use—particularly by adolescents and teenagers.

While the fight against drug abuse must be accelerated, significant contributions have already been made by many major media organizations. For example, the new long range alcohol and drug abuse campaign initiated by the National Association of Broadcasters is a commendable undertaking. Voluntary actions such as these can be an effective method of developing joint government and private sector initiatives. A coordinated effort, aided by the advisory board established in this subsection, will assist ASAP in developing an effective, long term public education campaign.

Section 906 (Coverage Study) directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to contract with the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a study of:

1. The extent to which coverage of drug abuse treatment is provided by private insurance, public programs and other sources of payment; and

2. The adequacy of existing coverage in treating and rehabilitating drug abusers.

The report should include recommendations for improving coverage of drug abuse treatment to address unmet needs. At present, there is little comprehensive or systematically-collected information on coverage for drug abuse treatment. A study is needed to identify gaps in policies, and to determine how those gaps might be addressed. Treatment has proven to be effective in many instances but inadequate coverage by private insurance and public programs is a deterrent to seeking cures. Drug abuse will remain an intractable threat to public health as long as people are unable to obtain effective treatment. A comprehensive study can be a start towards improving coverage and the quality of treatment services.

Subtitle C—Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes

Sections 910-918 of the legislation establishes an Advisory Commission on the Comprehensive Education of Intercollegiate Athletes. The primary reason for establishing an independent commission is to study the reasons for drug abuse among college and university student-athletes which has recently come to the nation's attention. These events have revealed that many participants in intercollegiate sports are not attending classes and are failing to receive a well-rounded education. A collegiate sports career, at the expense of an adequate education, does not prepare the student athlete for life and makes them vulnerable to drug abuse. Because student-athletes often serve as role-models for our youth and fellow students, it is important to focus attention on the problem of drug use among this group of young people.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) has conducted some in-house reviews of its own programs from time to time. This important issue had not, however, been examined by an objective, independent body in recent years. The Commission will provide a forum for a careful and dispassionate appraisal of the drug abuse problem among college athletes.

Subtitle D—Alkyl nitrites

Section 920 of the legislation provides that alkyl nitrites and their isomers shall be regulated under the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act and treated as a drug when sold directly to the public.

The purpose of this section is to prevent the continued abuse of alkyl nitrite inhalants known to drug abuse experts as "Poppers." These substances are sold over-the-counter in many States and municipalities. They are commonly used as drugs of abuse by children, teenagers and adults. The National Institute on Drug Abuse's 1985 High School Survey of Drug Use Among American High School Students reports that 8% of High School Seniors reported use of amyl and butyl nitrites. Although a number of States have taken action to ban or restrict the sale of these products, regulation is uneven and difficult to enforce.

The scientific literature documents that alkyl nitrite inhalants can cause severe health effects including headaches, delirium, confusion and in some cases death.

Alkyl nitrites are principally sold to consumers as so-called "room odorizers". Despite their sale under the pretense of a room odorizer, there is ample evidence that these products are marketed and purchased solely for their euphoric effect.

In light of the risk of injury presented to the public from the use of these products, they should be subject to Federal regulation by the Food and Drug Administration. Amyl nitrite is already classified by the Food and Drug Administration as a drug and its sale is restricted by prescription. By classifying alkyl nitrate inhalants and their isomers as drugs, section 920 requires that manufacturers of poppers demonstrate to the FDA that butyl nitrite is safe and effective for use as an inhalant. It is anticipated that the FDA will apply the provisions of Section 505 of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act to applications from manufacturers seeking approval to sell products containing alkyl nitrites or their isomers to the public. Section 920 is not intended to regulate the industrial use of alkyl nitrites for purposes such as the processing of film.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. ROWLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. ROWLAND] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as members of the Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse, we have spent the past 2 years listening to testimony from so many former drug abusers who talk about the ill effects, not only on their health and their livelihood, but certainly on their families. And it is unfortunate that it has taken a number of sports figures' deaths to finally bring this issue to the heart of the American people.

As the youngest Member of the U.S. Congress, I have had considerable opportunities to talk to many high-schoolers, junior high and grammar school about the problems of drug abuse. What we have seen happen over the last 20 years is staggering. Twenty years ago the perception of drug abuse was the thought of a heroin addict in an alley in a back area somewhere in the urban areas. Now we have found over the past 10 to 15 years considerable changes in the drug abuse world. We see more and more people, regardless of social or economic background, getting involved in expensive cocaine uses.

But we have also seen, and I find this day and day again with many young people, that there is a social acceptance of use of marijuana. We have passed a deadly time when the use of cocaine and the use of marijuana are being combined. Fortunately, the young people I talked to told me no, they are never going to get involved in cocaine, that it is too addictive and too hazardous. But it is OK, it is socially acceptable, to get involved in marijuana. Now the deadly line has been crossed that with the use of the cocaine as crack and you take the perception of smoking marijuana and combine those two, we are now lulling our young people into a sense of false security. We are finding that young people are easily taking up the fad of crack, and we are finding that more and more people are getting addicted, especially after the first or second use.

This particular bill gives us the opportunity to educate. It gives us the opportunity to rehabilitate. It gives us a chance to punish, deter, and effect a drug-free society, something that we all look forward to.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS], a member of the Health Subcommittee, who has played a great leadership role in the area of rehabilitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, an epidemic is sweeping our Nation; a blight which robs our country of its productivity, the elderly of their safety, and our children of their lives. It is the curse of illicit drugs.

Just yesterday I was on my way to see a doctor and, near the corner of H and 8, Northwest, I happened to see a young person laying out in the middle of the street. I thought he had been struck by a car, so I pulled over to assist. I questioned those who were standing around, and they said that this young man was a known addict and that he was suffering from an overdose. Perhaps, if we had already had the Substance Abuse Protection Agency, this man would not have been in this position.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. COLLINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, I want to take this opportunity to thank you for letting me explain my very firm belief of the need of this bill, H.R. 5484 to contain a provision that reduces unemployment and increases decent job opportunities for people captured in the drug abuse subculture, specifically and the vast millions of able Americans caught in the webb of unemployment, underemployment, and hopelessness.

I am, Mr. Chairman, one of the new comers to the U.S. Congress. On September 12, 1986, I will begin my fourth year as a U.S. Congressman. I am the first International Trade Unionist, elected to the U.S. Congress. I have spent more than 35 years of my life in the trade union movement. On the whole I believe that this bill is well drafted and comprehensive in its' approach, and comes to the floor of the House with 277 cosponsors and strong bipartisan support. But, I strongly believe that one very important element is missing from the bill, which would round out the comprehensive intent of the bill.

I am looking beyond partisan politics. I am looking to the future of our country. What hope is there for those that our society has counted outside of the mainstream of American life? What hope are we as Members of Congress creating for our young people, who have dropped out of school, who have been left out of the decent jobs, or any jobs and subsequently they have dropped out of our society. I am concerned about what kind of America we are creating for our children and grandchildren, when for the last year more that 8 million Americans have been counted among the unemployed.

Anyone who thinks that the young people involved in the drug abuse are employed in good jobs at decent wages is uninformed.

The sad truth is that a very large proportion of young drug abusers are people who feel cast off from society and because of that they see no opportunities for decent legal employment ahead of them.

Our future is being destroyed by the impact of drug abuse on our society. Large dollars can be made in the sale and distribution of illegal drugs in our country. In my district, the First District of Illinois, Chicago's south side. It is common knowledge that, people in all age groups selling drugs in the street. I have even heard that grade school kids selling drugs, not because of addiction but, as a means of getting money because their parents cannot give them money. This behavior must be stopped. Kids today are left without hope and do not see that staying in school creates a real future where decent jobs at good wages are available. We must reach these people who have lost hope due to drugs and give a real opportunity. Good jobs at decent wages create real opportunities for all Americans.

My suggestion would reaffirm the legal commitment that the President has the fundamental constitutional obligation under the Employment Act of 1946 and the Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act of 1978 for presenting to Congress an overall unemployment program under the law.

This suggestion also reaffirms that the Congress has the responsibility of making its own decisions. And that Congress should be informed of measures that can be implemented without any need for legislation.

I feel that my suggestion is a subject which should have been included in the bill and I am sorry that it was not. I strongly believe that the Members of the House should have the opportunity to consider my amendment as a fundamental part of the comprehensive approach of the bill. There can be no more important and realistic part of a drug abuse program, than one that results in having a good job at decent wages.

My suggestion deals with the missing elements in the drug abuse problem, employment.

My suggestion merely plugs this loophole.

Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee thank you for giving me the opportunity to explain my amendment.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the Energy and Commerce Committee has incorporated language into the bill creating just such a new Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention, which will institute and coordinate treatment, rehabilitation, and education services. The new Agency, to be established within the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, will be responsible for allocating funds for State programs, sponsoring regional workshops, and coordinating research findings.

Two-thirds of the funds for State drug treatment and prevention programs will be allocated on the basis of population. The remaining one-third will be awarded solely on the basis of the population between the ages of 5 and 24. This formula insures that the funds will be directed to the States in the most need and targeted toward the age group most at risk. Also, funding will be conditioned in a manner designed to insure that it benefits those in need and will not be used for general hospital services or administrative costs.

During committee deliberations, my colleagues and I found that one of the major tools required to reverse our youth's headlong flight down the dead end road of drugs is education and H.R. 5484 will support these efforts at the State level. I have worked hard to insure that the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention will be responsible for allocating funds for State educational programs, developing regional workshops, coordinating research, developing effective prevention literature, and inaugurating public announcements for radio and TV.

Each and every member of the Energy and Commerce Committee worked hard on this important legislation and all of us can take pride in the final form of the H.R. 5484. The treatment and prevention aspects of the bill will enable those entrapped by illicit drugs to again reenter society as productive citizens. Through education, those who are threatened, but who have not yet fallen into the pusher's snare, will be saved.

Mr. Chairman, it's time for America to end the scourge of drugs.

Drugs are flooding this Nation, sowing death and destruction wherever they go. Americans now consume an unbelievable 60 percent of the world's drug production. Twenty million Americans are regular marijuana users, 4 to 8 million more are on cocaine, and 500,000 are heroin addicts. Thirty percent of all college students will use cocaine at least once before graduation and 80 percent of all Americans will try some type of illicit drug before their midtwenties. Deaths from cocaine alone more than doubled between 1981 and 1985.

The drug epidemic is underming the very fabric of our society. The entire gamut of drugs can be found at every level—from the very rich to the very poor, among the old and the young, and in rural as well as urban environments. The devastation has also spread throughout every workplace. It is found among lawyers, construction workers, truckdrivers, police, firemen, and in every other occupation group; drug abuse raises its hideous head. Doped-up workers endanger the health and safety of those who depend on them. The cost to employers from lost productivity, absenteeism, and higher accident rates has reached $33 billion.

Drug dealers—dealers of death and suffering, who rake in profits totaling $100 billion annually—are stretching their vile tentacles into the hearts of our youth. The deadliest drugs have worked their way into high schools, seducing innocent children. Marijuana, cocaine, and PCP can be found even in elementary schools. Infants, born to addicted mothers, are forced to begin their new lives hooked on drugs.

In Chicago, drugs have threatened my constituents for years. Addicts, caught by the web of drug dependence, live from one fix to the next. Many, unable to hold a job, have turned to crime to support their habit. They rob and kill to scrape together enough money for the fix that gets them through the day.

The situation is out of control. The police have been overpowered. Honest citizens, children, and especially the elderly are afraid to walk the streets! Even in broad daylight. This horror simply must end!

H.R. 5484 will help curb this crisis. By authorizing $1.5 billion, the bill gives us the tools to begin our war on drugs. These funds will support the efforts of law enforcement officials to interdict and eradicate drugs at their source. Stiffer penalties will be imposed for drug-related offenses, with particular emphasis on targeting the pushers. The legislation provides for additional drug enforcement activities and coordinates these efforts.

H.R. 5484 also authorizes the President to impose trade sanctions against those nations which, as sources of illicit drugs, refuse to cooperate to reduce drug trafficking. This will insure that governments which tolerate the drug trade will find themselves shortchanged in the end.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5484 represents a major weapon in the fight to save our Nation from this scourge and I urge my colleagues to support it. It is for the safety of our streets, the health of our Nation, and the lives of our children that we must support this long-overdue legislation.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlemen from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill. Unfortunately, an amendment that I asked the Rules Committee to make in order was not approved. The reason that I offered the amendment was contained in a book published this year written by a man named James Mills entitled "The Underground Empire," where crime and governments embrace. The most unstabling aspect of the book was the first page which said—

Everything in this book is true. No names have been changed. There are no complete characters; no invented scenes or dialog.

Then he goes on to describe the real problem with interdicting the international drug conspiracy in the world.

We have persons in high positions of governments around the world, in Central America, in South America and in Mexico and in countries in Southeast Asia that are officials of their governments that are up to their eyeballs in the drug traffic.

When it comes to charging these people with the crimes they are committing in their own country, or as a part of a conspiracy that takes place in another country that ends up in this country because the product of the conspiracy, the drugs, are sold here, we can indict them here and charge them and arrest them when sometime they show up in the United States of America.

To really get this kind of attention we need a reorganization of the executive branch whereby we would have the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Defense in an advisory committee as advising an appointee of the President who could give direction. It is at the point where the Secretary of State of this country must be told that notwithstanding the need for good relations with other nations around the world, when an official of that government is involved in drug sales that end up in the United States we should be arresting that person and bringing them to trial in the United States. That amendment belongs in this bill.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation that is so critically important to the future of us all—particularly our young people, our Nation's most valuable resource. Specifically, I want to stress the importance of provisions in this legislation that I authored in committee which establish a media advisory board to assist in developing an effective media and education campaign aimed at preventing drug use.

Drug abuse is a growing cancer in our society today. Thousands of families across Colorado and America have suffered the pain of the addiction of a brother, sister or even parent. The use of cocaine and its derivative, crack, as well as heroin, and other illegal drugs is tearing away at the fabric of the American family. Drug abuse is decreasing productivity in the workplace, increasing criminal activity, and creating problems in our schools.

Our Nation has a $110 billion-a-year drug habit. Added to this is the total cost to society, which is just as staggering. In 1985, it was estimated that the money spent on illegal drug activities resulted in a decline in total business output of $18.2 billion and a loss of 414,000 jobs. Total use of illegal drugs has risen by 15 percent in recent years. Five million Americans are regular cocaine users, ignoring the fact that 563 people died cocaine-related deaths last year. Within the next 2 years, more than 20 percent of American high school seniors may have tried cocaine.

Drugs are clearly the No. 1 enemy of our Nation's young people. And our young people are the key to our future. To safeguard that future, we must directly attack the drug problem wherever and however we can.

Six-and-a-half tons of heroin come into the United States every year, and cocaine imports are expected to double this year from 130,000 pounds to 275,000 pounds. Yet, the Drug Enforcement Agency has only 2,300 agents worldwide, fewer than the number of police on Capitol Hill in Washington. Drug production has increased so much in foreign countries that there currently is a glut of cocaine on the market, prompting a dramatic price decline and helping fuel the spreading use of crack, or "rock" cocaine. However, the Department of State requested less than $40 million a year, or about 15 cents per U.S. citizen, for international drug control assistance. The Department of Defense spent only $15 million last year on drug-interdiction efforts, the cost of spare parts for one cruise missile.

We are spending less on treatment and prevention, two areas where we can be most effective in permanently controlling drug abuse. Direct Federal funding of drug treatment and prevention programs has decreased from $370 million in 1981 to $40 million this year. Agents have seized more than $1 billion of drug traffickers' assets, but the Office of Management and Budget directed that only $8 million of this revenue can be used for enforcement or prevention. This is senseless. All of the funds seized from illegal drug activity should be used where it can be most effective—in ridding our society of this problem.

We need to act immediately to control this crisis. Drug abuse must be attacked at all levels of Government and throughout our communities. This effort will not be successful unless we include parents and community PTA's, schools, police organizations, local, State and Federal Government, religious organizations and others in our communities who can be helpful. And such an effort cannot concentrate only on enforcement. It must also include an aggressive education program aimed at prevention and effective treatment efforts with special targeting to those who need the help the most.

Only through an all-out assault on this problem will we begin to make progress. This legislation before us fights drug abuse on five fronts: prevention through education, treatment, increased law enforcement, vigorous international narcotic control programs, and greater cooperation among local, State, and Federal governments and police organizations.

Moreover, when it comes to making the public aware of a problem, there is no greater resource than the Nation's mass media. The purpose of a media advisory board is to focus those resources on this problem in the best way possible.

Specifically, the proposed advisory board—made up of 15 media members including representatives from the broadcasting, cable, newspaper, program production, and advertising industries, as well as professional sports associations—would assist in the implementation of campaigns aimed at educating the public about the problem of drug abuse. The advisory board would also encourage the media to devote ongoing efforts toward raising public awareness of the need to prevent illegal drug use.

I am pleased to say that the representatives of media industries are themselves very enthusiastic about this proposal. In fact, I have received letters supporting the establishment of an advisory board from a number of organizations representing the media industries, including the National Association of Broadcasters [NAB], the National Cable Television Association [NCTA], and the Motion Picture Association of America [MPAA]. I am hopeful this undertaking can be truly a consensus effort.

It is by now clear that the media is an extremely powerful force in our lives that can play a very positive role in confronting many problems that plague communities throughout the country. For instance, the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, which I chair, has been very involved with the issue of encouraging the media to provide information to the public about alcohol abuse—a tremendous societal problem. Broadcasters heard our concerns and launched voluntary efforts to inform the public through public service announcements of the dangers of drinking and driving. Indeed, the NAB and the broadcasting industry in general deserve praise for their voluntary efforts related to alcohol abuse.

Moreover, while we clearly must accelerate the fight against drug abuse, it should be noted that significant contributions have already been made by many major media organizations. For example, NBC has dedicated hours of air time and other resources to the issue of substance abuse, and NBC public affairs campaigns have included an award-winning documentary and a series of public service announcements on the subject. Likewise, in the cable area, Turner Broadcasting has produced a number of special programs highlighting the dangers of drug abuse, and has developed an outreach program involving the distribution of lesson plans to schools to accompany the special programs.

While the media has made a good start, we must encourage even greater initiatives in the area of drug abuse—and that is the purpose of the drug abuse advisory board. The board would have the unique ability to make coordinated, intermedia recommendations on how to put the media's influence to work in positive ways to protect all Americans from the dangers of illegal drug use.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation that will help in the drug prevention effort by, among other means, informing the Nation's schools, businesses, and most importantly, parents and children, about the serious consequences of drug use.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 30 seconds.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud that the Congress is taking the lead in this bipartisan attack against the wide array of drug problems we currently face, with such comprehensive legislation as the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. Recently polls have indicated that the majority of Americans feel deeply that the most serious crisis which threatens our way of life is the sale and abuse of illegal drugs. I think that by offering legislation of this magnitude, which addresses so many aspects of our illegal drug problem, we have a better chance of defeating this arch enemy of the very survival of the United States as the world leader we now know it to be.

As I have observed the escalating problems caused by narcotics in our society, I have sponsored legislation that would remedy various facets of the situation resulting from the prevalence of illegal drugs, including:

The Repeat Drug Offender Penalty Enhancement Act, which calls for life imprisonment without parole for adults who distribute a dangerous drug to a child or teenager, after having already been convicted of the same crime;

The Narcotics Importation Manufacture and Control Act, which makes mandatory prison sentences of 20 years for convicted large scale manufacturing offenders, and 15 years for small-scale offenders, and disallowing probation and parole;

The Money Laundering Control Act, which establishes a maximum penalty of $1 million and/or 20 years in prison for offending individuals and a maximum fine of $5 million for offending corporations;

The Designer Drug Enforcement Act, which provides that a controlled substance analog intended for human consumption should be treated as a controlled substance, with the same penalties against its distribution and use;

A bill to require the use of the Armed Forces for interdiction of narcotics at our Nation's borders; and

A resolution to request that the entertainment industry take steps to assist in the national war against illegal drugs.

In addition to sponsoring bills aimed at correcting specific areas of the drug crisis, I am also pleased to sponsor the omnibus drug bill because I firmly believe it has the potential for much wider success. If we are to be effective in this effort, we must mobilize all our forces and abilities. This legislation has provisions calling for funding for state-of-the-art detection equipment for drug interdiction, and it calls for employing market access and foreign aid as levers for international cooperation on the war on drugs. The omnibus drug bill strengthens existing interdiction programs by providing additional personnel for the Coast Guard, Customs Service, U.S. Marshal's Service and the Drug Enforcement Administration. It also calls for education programs, including a reappraisal of existing drug education, in the belief that this is a logical approach to reducing the demand for illegal narcotics. Although some programs under the omnibus drug bill are not in the precise form I would have preferred, I support its passage. But I would emphasize that we must not lose sight that passage of the omnibus drug bill is only a beginning. We all must work together—in the same bipartisan spirit as this legislation was brought to the House floor—to spend the money in as effective a manner as possible. We in the Congress must not abrogate our responsibilities for oversight of the way these measures are administered and coordinated, if we are to attain the ambitious goals we have set for stamping out the scourge of illegal drugs and narcotics in the United States during the 20th century.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN] is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUKEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, during the past week we have heard from about 40 college presidents. We have not gone to the institutional NCAA but we have gone to the academicians, the people who are trying to run the colleges of our Nation and who have been impeded by the overcommercialization of the sports scene by the athletic directors.

We have heard from these presidents who have said that they are having trouble eliminating drug abuse on campus and that their effort depends largely on teaching our youth to say "no" to drugs. So education is as important as enforcement. They have told us that students respond to pressure, especially to peer pressure. They feel that one of the strongest peer pressures toward acceptance of so-called recreational drugs is given by their student athlete peers, the notorious drug-using, college sports idol.

Len Bias' death should teach us all to do a lot of thinking. Thinking about values, goals, and missions. When players are bought, rented, and hired not as students but as commodities, there is little or no intent to see that they use their intellectual skills, that they become well-rounded citizens, and there is something there to fill that void and that is drugs.

Many college presidents have lamented the existence of not only the athletic subculture on the campuses but also the corresponding drug subculture, and the two are entwined.

In a recent letter from the president of Kent State University, the president said:

Athletes use cocaine—American culture heroes use drugs—and the children know it.

The president of the University of Rochester wrote:

If athletic virtues are separated from the real world of career or study, then their application becomes wayward and uncertain and athletes gain the courage not to perform noble deeds but merely the guts to get a fix.

□ 1720

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, somewhat reluctantly I rise to oppose a couple of parts of the bill and talk about them briefly.

First of all, I think that any time we put together an omnibus bill like this there are going to be clinkers and there are going to be some problems in the bill. That was the case, I remember, back in 1968 when Congress ultimately passed the safe streets and crime legislation. There was a lot of money thrown at that problem at the time, and in my estimation there was a lot of wasted money. In some cases, because of our zeal to try to solve a problem perhaps too quickly, we tend to get in a situation where we try to outdo each other or in fact outbid each other in trying to solve the problem, all with the best of intentions.

Clearly in this case—and I speak directly to the section offered by my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, in regard to the NCAA—no one argues that there is a problem in the NCAA with student athletes and with drug abuse. But that gainsays the problem with the rest of the campus. Anyone who thinks that the rest of the campus is not involved in drug abuse, that it is only the athletes, simply does not understand the problem.

So my friend, the gentleman from Florida, and I will be offering an amendment to delete that particular section of the bill because I think it unfairly singles out a group like the NCAA. I think that they can speak for themselves and act for themselves, and in fact they have on many occasions, in this very area.

The second area is an amendment that is going to be offered by our friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN], and that will reduce from $180 million to $100 million the amount offered in our section of the bill, Energy and Commerce, for the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention and elimination of the authorization for community-based drug and alcohol abuse prevention programs. Again I think the money can be better spent in other areas, in interdiction and in law enforcement. We do not want to get accused of throwing money at the problem. I think, other than that, that this is a strong section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] has expired.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR], of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this very important piece of legislation to fight our Nation's drug problem.

The omnibus legislation before us takes a comprehensive look at the problem of drug abuse which faces our Nation and offers solutions to deal with all facets of the problem. I am very, very proud of the leadership that has been provided by Speaker TIP O'NEILL, majority leader JIM WRIGHT, the minority leader, BOB MICHEL, and others, and I am proud of my chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], and the subcommittee chairs, all of whom participated in aspects of the bill.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call on the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] for a colloquy with reference to our portion of the bill, the Post Office and Civil Service Committee portion. I would like to say very briefly, before calling on him, that we believe the example of how we treat our Government workers will hopefully spread across the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY].

Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] chairs the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. That subcommittee has legislative responsibility for matter contained in section 1004 of the pending bill.

The section establishes a demonstration program which will allow the Office of Personnel Management to contract with five plans, which the committee has selected. These projects will provide additional coverage for alcohol and drug abuse treatment.

The additional benefits will be available only to a limited portion of the enrollees in these five plans, and the benefits will be assigned in a random fashion to assure the statistical viability of the study.

The demonstration project will be funded completely outside of the Government and employee contribution computations.

Subsection (c)(1)(B) requires that the demonstration projects will cover only the number of people needed to constitute a statistically valid model for making the determinations required by the section.

Mr. Chairman, I have two questions for the committee. I do not wish to establish a legislative history that would lock OPM into a specific number. But, I would like the agency to have some guidance from Congress on the scale of the project contemplated. Am I correct, that the committee contemplates a sample population, under the five plans, that would probably not exceed a few hundred enrollees? And second, am I also correct that the statistical chance for any individual enrollee to be selected for the extra coverage is so small that the committee would expect OPM to disapprove any open season literature that used the existence of the demonstration program to market that plan?

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his questions and I appreciate his interest in the quality and success of this demonstration.

To respond to the gentleman's first question, I would just like to say that I am not interested, either, in establishing a legislative history that would lock the Office of Personnel Management into a specific number of enrollees who would be involved in the sample population served by the demonstration. The legislation specifically states that the OPM shall, in conjunction with the health insurance plans, the Federal agencies, and the Federal employee organizations, select a population to participate in the demonstration of sufficient size to assure that the necessary statistical information can be properly secured.

I, personally, do not know what that number is; and I think it is entirely appropriate to leave that decision to the experts who will design and conduct the demonstration. I would expect that the number of participants would be quite small, as are most demonstration projects, relative to the entire number of FEHBP participants, which is approximately 10 million.

In response to the gentleman's second question concerning the use of this demonstration as a "marketing device" which the big six plans could use to attract enrollees, I would simply like to point out that this legislation constitutes a good faith effort to test the efficacy of insurance coverage for substance abuse rehabilitation. The intent of Congress here is quite clear. We hope to have an opportunity to test a number of drug abuse and alcoholism treatment and rehabilitation options, offered in different settings. We intend that the value of such coverage will be measured, not only in terms of insurance costs and health costs, but in terms of benefits to job productivity, reduced absenteeism, and the general well-being of Federal employees, retirees, and their families. We intend that this information will be used to help improve the FEHBP—all plans in the FEHBP—so that the program is more responsive to the needs of its enrollees and more affordable for enrollees and the Government.

Clearly, a demonstration project is, by nature, limited in scope. The demonstrations authorized by this bill shall be established in not less than one and not more than four sites. I do not think that any carrier could or would use such a demonstration to attract Federal enrollees nationwide. The misuse of this demonstration as a marketing device is even more unlikely when one considers that the demonstration projects are not only limited to geographic sites, but may be targetted to sepecific agencies or specific groups of Federal enrollees.

The OPM and the involved agencies, plans, and Federal employee organization will determine how best to solicit and select a group of participants for the demonstration. I would just point out, however, that OPM prohibits any FEHBP plan from including anything in their open season brochures or advertisements that does not specifically relate to benefits which are available to all of their enrollees. And in this, of course, we are only talking about a few.

In short, I would not be concerned that this process would be misused as a marketing device, and I would expect that the OPM and the other involved groups would act in accordance with the intent of Congress in this regard.

So, Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's concerns, let me say that I am glad he raised them, but I really do think that everything will work out very well.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman very much for her response.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] has consumed 7 minutes.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1730

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, for this section, I yield the 10 minutes on our side to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] for allocation as he sees fit.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank our distinguished minority leader for yielding this time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of title X, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service portion of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986 and I want to commend the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR], for her leadership and initiatives with regard to this section of the bill.

As the Nation's largest employer, the Federal Government must take a leading role in the fight against drug abuse in the workplace. We know that no segment of our society is immune to the effects of drug and alcohol abuse. Rich or poor, suburban or inner city, black or white—all have been touched by the effects of drug abuse in one way or another. Because of the important job which the Federal Government is required to perform, it is the responsibility of this body to develop appropriate policy to facilitate and ensure a drug-free work environment for our Federal employees.

In a strong bipartisan effort, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has developed recommendations to address any narcotic or alcohol abuse problems among Federal employees. Specifically, the bill directs the Office of Personnel Management to provide drug and alcohol prevention, treatment and rehabilitation services to Federal employees and their families. In addition OPM must conduct education programs to inform Federal employees of the health hazards associated with alcohol and drug abuse, its symptoms and the availability of assistance. On the postal side, the bill makes the mailing of controlled substances a separate criminal offense. In addition, the bill directs OPM to establish a 3-year demonstration project to determine the feasibility and desirability of including certain benefits relating to treatment of drug and alcohol abuse among the benefits available under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program.

Mr. Chairman, these recommendations will address any drug or alcohol problems among Federal employees in an equitable and nonpunitive manner. Drug and alcohol abuse is prevalent throughout our society and strong measures are necessary to fight this debilitating problem. We must, however, be cognizant of the rights of the individual and refrain from imposing any experimental measures on the Federal work force which could jeopardize the morale of our employees.

In commending the leadership of this body for its vigorous bipartisan approach to this legislation, we should also recognize the tireless efforts of the President and First Lady in directing public attention toward this very important issue. This omnibus drug bill, together with the initiatives the White House has undertaken, we can begin a major assault in the battle against drug and alcohol abuse in our society.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have ever physically felt so satisfied watching my colleagues on both sides of the aisle address an issue as I have seen looking at this unbelievable solidarity here today on this issue. Under the Post Office Committee part of this bill, the post office is asking and willing to accept and will use the new authority we are going to give it to go after these vicious substances that are ripping our society apart. I wish we had the same sort of unanimity of purpose and feeling of solidarity on pornography, because the post office is the lead authority in Government to go after what they even have a new acronym for, CP, child pornography. Maybe that is another day to come.

I have not participated in this debate much and I do not have any strong statement, because there is a little bit of burnout in me on this issue, because I was talking just as every liberal Member of this House has been speaking today 21 years ago on television. In 1968 when I had a television show 4 hours a day, live everyday, everyday this issue would come up, 18 years ago. It was almost as though it was cleanly a conservative versus liberal issue. If you worked against the war in Vietnam, you were supposed on the flip side of that to get high, turn on, tune in, drop out, defy authority, ridicule your parents, call cops pigs and make light of drugs, and then when this Narcotics Committee, this select committee in the House was founded with the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] as a charter member, I was campaigning for my first term here in 1976, September I believe, I was just told the committee was formed. When I got here, there were no openings on the committee, so I asked if I could serve ex-officio and I served as a regular member for 4 years following those first 2 years.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and I went to the opium fields, the cocaine fields of South America, to the Shan Province of Burma in 1979, with the gentleman from Illinois, HENRY HYDE where one of those Chinese warlord armies tried to murder former Congressman Lester Wolff and you and I and whoever else was with him.

Over and over we would look at one another in committee hearings rights up until this summer when the CIA report was secretly given to us that it was tearing apart the fabric of our country and now we actually have competition between our parties. Good. Go for it. Between our ideologies, I knew that never until my liberal colleagues got involved in this issue would we ever make a dent in it.

I truly say at you, God bless you for making this no longer a cockamamie conservative issue, but an American issue.

The day we adjourned in August, my fifth grandchild arrived. Of my five, the third has just gotten married. Only my first two married have given me five already, and from my children and my five that are still all in their twenties, one just turned 30, you are going to give them a safer country.

When we went out to Hollywood in March of 1981, that is 5½ years ago, when the gentleman from New York and I and former Member Tom Railsback and former Member Jerry DeNardis, who is now an Assistant Secretary at Health and Human Services, when we went out to Hollywood with all of the best intentions, with a focus on one issue, cocaine, in March of April of 1981, we were ridiculed and pilloried. I remember Mr. DeNardis coined an expression something like, "McCarthyism in advance" or "judgment in advance."

Grant Tinker, who went on to become head of NBC, said that we were a witch hunting committee, that there was no cocaine in Hollywood, that it was a controllable problem.

Ed Asner, who was playing an undercover narcotics agent in some Universal film gets photographed in his undercover mufti garments, saying that we were fools and it was Congress coming out to make light of a problem that did not even exist.

Well, we were kicked in the face 5½ years ago, but until Nancy Reagan and Members of both ideologies in both parties decided our country was being shredded, finally we have unanimity of purpose and solidarity.

I ask the gentleman, does he think we are ever going to turn back and sweep this under the rug again?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman, we certainly are not going to turn back. I think we are on the proper track now. I hope that we are going to go forward with even greater momentum.

I thank the gentleman for his supportive remarks. He has been a longtime fighter in this battle and we welcome his supporting remarks today.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Well, I want to thank the gentleman from New York and all the long-term Members since 1976 on the Select Committee on Narcotics who have fought a tireless, unflagging fight, without any thanks or with seemingly no rewards, until this nice beautiful September day in Washington, DC.

For my children and my grandchildren, I say, God bless you again. I thank everybody and I wish we could approach all issues that rip our country apart, like pornography, in the same way we are approaching this all unified with one purpose, to not only protect our youth, but to protect all economic levels, all people and even those yuppies who are losing their Porsches snorting cocaine.

I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] from the bottom of my heart.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his supporting remarks, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is no threat to our society more severe, nor more immediate, than the threat posed by illegal narcotics.

The American people expect government on all levels to respond to this threat, with all the resources at their command.

With the passage of H.R. 5484, the House of Representatives can take the first step toward the establishment of a meaningful coordinated policy to deal with the drug menace.

As one of the cosponsors of the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986, I want to commend the majority leader, Mr. WRIGHT, and the Republican leader, Mr. MICHEL, for the work they have done to ensure that this legislation would be truly bipartisan.

The drug problem transcends all boundaries—income, race, and geography—and the national response to it must transcend the boundaries of political philosophy.

I congratulate President Reagan, and Speaker O'NEILL for their leadership on this issue, and I believe that H.R. 5484 is fully consistent with that spirit.

We have declared war on other seemingly intractable social problems from this Chamber in years past.

That the results of those efforts have not always matched the rhetoric with which they were launched has led some critics to imply that it would have been better not to have tried at all.

I do not subscribe to that theory.

Yes; we have spent billions of dollars trying to eradicate hunger, disease, and illiteracy, and yes; those conditions still afflict our society.

But gains have been made, and positive changes have resulted, in the lives of millions of Americans as a result of our efforts in those areas.

Today, we begin a similar effort on the problem of drugs.

It may not result in a drug-free society, but I believe it will make a measurable difference in the ability or our country to deal with this problem.

Let's not kid ourselves.

The traffic in illegal drugs is a $200 billion a year business in this country.

That business, and those who profit from it, are not going to disappear because of some tough talk from Washington or a few public service media ads.

We are going to have to commit national resources on a level that recognizes the scope of the drug problem, and we are going to have to be prepared for a long-term effort.

We can declare no victory with the passage of H.R. 5484. It is only a beginning in what must be a constant national commitment to effectively deal with drug abuse.

H.R. 5484 provides a framework for the development of the only kind of policy that stands a chance of success in this area; a policy that seeks to reduce both the supply of and demand for illegal drugs.

We shrink demand when we educate our young people to the dangers of even casual use of drugs, and when we treat abusers, in an effort, to wean them from their drug dependency.

We reduce supply when we make it harder to import drugs, and when we come down—and come down hard—on those who seek financial gain from the chemical enslavement of our citizens.

That is the approach of this bill, a tandem approach of vigorous drug education and strict enforcement of drug laws that will produce results.

It is an approach that will demonstrate to the American people that their Federal Government has heard their demand for action, and that it is serious about doing battle with the drug menace. H.R. 5484 deserves an overwhelming vote of confidence in the House and quick action in the other body.

I urge its adoption by my colleagues.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the people of Oregon were introduced to Tina Jo Sutton. Unfortunately, by the time we got to know her, it was too late to do anything about her life. Tina was a victim of drug abuse and addiction. But there's still time to make sure her death was not in vain.

We all know someone like Tina Jo Sutton. She visited Disneyland at age 5. By age 10, divorce has split her family. By age 12, she was experimenting with drugs. And by age 16, she was dead, a victim of drugs, dead in a cheap motel room.

Yes, we all know a Tina Jo Sutton and the lives of these young Americans fill volumes of statistics. These statistics show that the drug pushers are winning the fight, and are poisoning an entire generation of Americans. It's not really so much a battle against drugs as it is a rout, with the drug pushers so far ahead that only a major effort can even begin to close the gap.

In Oregon, heroin overdoses in the first 7 months of this year have already topped 1985. Burglaries, robberies, and assaults—so many of them drug related—terrorize our communities. Oregon ranks eighth in the Nation in serious crimes per capita, while Portland alone ranks No. 1 among cities in burglaries—and has for 3 straight years.

Sure it's going to take a lot of money to turn this tide. But it's really a matter of national priorities. It's too late for Tina Jo Sutton, but it's not too late to help the millions of young Americans like her.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I am proud to add my support to this omnibus antidrug legislation before us today. As a cosponsor of many of the individual bills which were used to form the core of this larger bill, I can attest to its tremendous scope, diversity, and vision.

I applaud Speaker O'NEILL in making the national fight against drug abuse and crime a high priority in these last weeks of the 99th Congress, and Majority Leader WRIGHT for spearheading this legislation through the numerous committees which had jurisdiction over sections of the bill. I think the various House committees which came up with this vigorous plan of attack to rid our communities, schools, and workplaces of the blight of drug abuse also deserve our thanks and appreciation.

Mr. Chairman, my Colleagues in the House of Representatives and my constitutents in Oregon know me as a Congressman who is hesitant to throw money at a problem in an effort to make it go away. This is true whether the problem involves national defense, education, housing, or agriculture. But I have never thought that the Federal Government could solve problems just by spending billions of additional dollars.

This bill will cost a lot of money. But it's money that we must invest now. At a time when Americans are spending $120 billion each year on illicit drugs, and the effects of drug abuse are costing our Nation an additional $100 billion annually in increased health costs, lost productivity, and related crime and violence, it is high time that we stop the rhetoric and begin taking some concrete action.

The reason this bill has a high price tag is very simple: drug interdiction, reducing illicit drug crops in foreign countries, and setting stiffer sentences for Federal criminals are solely the responsibility of the Federal Government, while educating our youth to the dangers of drug abuse and assisting those who have already fallen into the clutches of drug addiction are responsibilities which the Federal Government must share with State and local officials. This bill tackles all of these areas in the aggressive manner which this problem requires. And quite frankly it has become obvious that this difficult job cannot be accomplished without additional Federal funding.

As I mentioned earlier, statistics show how badly we are being beaten in this battle against illegal drugs: Our antismuggling air bases only have enough funds to operate 40 hours per week; only 5 to 15 percent of the tons of narcotics entering our country is intercepted; there are fewer Coast Guard personnel fighting to keep drugs out of our country today than there were in 1980; 80 percent of all Americans have tried an illicit drug by their mid-twenties; and younger and younger children are being caught up in drug abuse every year.

In Oregon the story is just as bleak. Black tar heroin, a cheap, yet exceptionally pure form of heroin, is finding its way to every corner of the State, and as I mentioned earlier heroin overdose deaths in Oregon in the first 7 months of 1986 have already surpassed the totals for 1985. We are also familiar with the strong connection between drug abuse and crime in Oregon. As black tar heroin and crack become wider spread, we see the incidence of burglaries, assaults, and robberies increase.

We know the statistics, but even more terrifying are the real stories which are heard from law enforcement officials, teachers, parents, and youngsters throughout this country. Stories like the one about Tina Jo Sutton. Mr. Chairman, the story of Tina Jo Sutton is being played out in every town and city in this country today. We must pass this tough bill today and work together as a nation to stop the waste of young, energetic lives like Tina's.

Mr. Chairman, we are at a critical time in the life of our country. We must use the vitality, strength, independence, and resources of our land and people to slow the use of illicit drugs. Anything less than an all out effort, which I believe this bill gives, would be a tragic, perhaps fatal mistake for our Nation.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to air a warning of caution to my colleagues and to the American people. Together we can make a temendous dent in drug abuse, addiction, and the crime which they breed. However, as soon as we take our eyes off of the problem, or lose focus of the goals contained in this legislation, we will turn around and find the problem staring us in the face again. Let's not forget about drug abuse once the elections are over, or about the devastating effects crack, black tar heroin, and PCP are having on our Nation once they are no longer in the headlines. We must pass this legislation today, but we must also make a commitment to continue fighting drug abuse and crime in the months and years ahead.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OLIN] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of final passage of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act, which was brought to the floor with broad bipartisan support.

This is the time for a comprehensive approach to drug enforcement. Recent tragic events, from drug-related deaths to the surprising development of young children turning in their parents for drug abuse, have kept the issue in the news and at the top of the public agenda.

H.R. 5484 provides the money the Coast Guard and U.S. Customs Service need to fight this major threat to American society—money that has been cut in recent years at the President's instigation.

It will define the appropriate role of the military in drug enforcement, assuring that we have full coverage without overlapping coverage. It will focus on the source of drugs, on the flow of drugs into this country, on the important role of drug abuse education in our schools, on the coordination of efforts at every level of law enforcement.

We all know that drug abuse has emerged as a serious health problem. Drug use, particularly among young people, is at an unacceptably high level. Drug trafficking is a multibillion-dollar-a-year industry which generates violence and corruption and creates a serious drain on the national economy.

And this bill itself is not cost free. A comprehensive approach to drug control will be costly. But that does not mean that we are abandoning Gramm-Rudman or surrendering in the battle to balance the budget. We still will have to conform our spending to the Gramm-Rudman target; through this bill, we are establishing a priority for drug enforcement. The tough decisions on how we balance the appropriation must yet be made. We will have to make them.

Clearly, a balanced strategy of prevention and education, detoxification and treatment, law enforcement, and international narcotics control is needed to eliminate the drug problem in this country.

The threat to our Nation requires an immediate, strong response. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this critically needed legislation.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this major antidrug legislation. It is incumbent on us to do something about the drug epidemic. Stronger law enforcement and interdiction are the most effective means available and this legislation provides substantially increased funding for these efforts.

Title X of this omnibus antidrug bill contains the recommendations of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. Our emphasis is on helping Federal workers learn about drug and alcohol abuse through education programs, and on helping those employees with drug or alcohol abuse problems to recover. The bill contains no authority for agencies to conduct drug testing of employees.

During debate on the rule for this bill, the minority leader said that the President has the authority to order drug testing without any specific legislation. I am not sure he is correct. Two constraints may limit the President's authority to issue such an order.

First, drug testing involves expenditures of Federal funds. And, as we all know, expenditures can only be made if they are authorized. Nothing in this bill or in current law authorizes the expenditure of funds for widescale testing of Federal employees.

Second, while the President has general authority under section 3301 of title 5, United States Code, to set standards for Federal employment, those standards must have some relation to the positions for which they are set. It is not clear that drug testing of all categories of employees meets this requirement.

The title from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service addresses the issue of drug abuse not by requiring Federal employees to prove themselves innocent of drug use, but rather by offering education and treatment for drug and alcohol addiction.

Title X directs the Office of Personnel Management to develop and maintain prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and services for alcohol and drug abuse among Federal employees. In order to encourage employees with alcohol or drug abuse problems to seek treatment, confidentiality of records in any program under these sections is assured.

The Office of Personnel Management is also directed to establish a Governmentwide education program for employees and supervisors. Through this program, Federal employees can learn about the health hazards of alcohol and drug abuse, the symptoms of alcohol and drug abuse, the availability of prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation services, the confidentiality protections for participants in drug and alcohol abuse programs, and the penalties for use of alcohol or drugs.

Title X requires executive agencies to develop employee assistance programs which offer treatment and rehabilitation to employees with drug and alcohol abuse problems. Title X also authorizes a demonstration project for the treatment of drug and alcohol abuse under the Federal Employee Health Benefits Program.

As I mentioned earlier, the bill does not authorize drug testing of Federal employees. Mandatory testing of randomly selected employees simply will not work. Urinalysis tests only indicate recent drug use, not current intoxication, not level of use, not addiction. They place the burden on individual employes to prove their innocence. At the same time, each dollar spent on drug testing is one less dollar spent on drug interdiction. Allocating money to testing employees rather than to law enforcement would delight drug dealers.

But while proponents of drug testing have a simple goal—to require Federal employees to prove they don't use drugs—they don't offer a simple way to achieve that goal. They don't offer any specifics at all. For example, who will pay for the test? Will the urinalysis be performed by the Government lab which analyzed the President's specimen, or by contractors? Which contractors have the capability to analyze so many specimens? What type of testing procedure will be used, and what is its accuracy? Who will pay litigation costs when an employee challenges test results and sues the Government? And so on.

In June, the Subcommittee on Civil Service released a staff report on drug testing in the Federal Government. I submit a copy of a summary of the staff study to be included with my statement, as follows:

DRUG TESTING IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—SUMMARY OF STAFF REPORT BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Purpose: Two reasons are given for conducting drug testing: (1) worksite safety, and (2) to deter off-the-job drug use. But urinalysis, unlike breathalyzer tests for alcohol, cannot determine present drug intoxication, so drug testing will not insure worksite safety. Routine, scheduled tests will not deter off-the-job drug use since employees can test negative by avoiding drug use for a few days or weeks prior to the test. Random testing is intended to work as a deterrent but it violates constitutional protections.

Cost: A drug testing program can be either accurate or inexpensive, but not both. Urinalysis by state of the art technology costs about $100 per sample. For the same amount of money required to test all federal employees once a year, the government could hire over 12,000 FBI, Customs Service, and Drug Enforcement Administration agents at annual salaries of $25,000.

Authority: Nothing in the civil service laws authorizes mandatory drug testing of federal employees, any more than it authorizes mandatory testing of employees for veneral disease, pregnancy, cancer, or contagious diseases like hepatitis.

Technology: Urinalysis can determine recent use of such drugs as marijuana, cocaine, amphetamines, barbiturates, and heroin. Marijuana residues stay in the body for up to 30 days; residues of other drugs stay in the body only 2 to 5 days. If the urine sample is not taken within 48 hours after drug use, all traces of the drug may have been excreted and subsequent urinalysis will not reveal drug use. Thus, to thwart a scheduled urinalysis test, a drug user would simply refrain from using drugs for a short time prior to the test. Further, since most drugs take from six to eight hours to go from ingestion to excretion, a urine sample taken an hour after an individual had taken drugs is likely to test negative.

Errors: The initial drug screening tests have error rates ranging from 5 to 20 percent. Test results can be affected by many factors, including an individual's body weight, liquids ingested prior to the test, over-the-counter medications, and foods such as the poppy seed buns on Burger King hamburgers. Quality control and chain of custody problems produce false positives (samples incorrectly identified as containing drugs). False positive error rates of up to 66% were identified in a study by the Centers for Disease Control. The Defense Department had to drop disciplinary proceedings against thousands of military personnel after sloppy quality control and chain of custody errors led a blue-ribbon panel to conclude that 97% of urinalysis tests at Ft. Meade were "not scientifically or legally supportable." DOD has since instituted strict controls.

Current Programs: Twenty percent of federal agencies currently test certain applicants or employees. Testing may be required of employees in defined critical jobs; during a pre-employment physical examination; as part of an accident investigation; or when an employee appears to be intoxicated on the job.

Legal Issues: (1) The Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects individuals against unreasonable searches and seizures. The government's taking of a urine sample is a seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. Some reasonable suspicion of drug use is required before an individual government employee can be required to undergo urinalysis testing.

(2) The merit principles of the civil service provide that federal employees can only be disciplined for off-duty conduct if it adversely affects on-duty job performance, and demonstration of a clear "nexus" or connection is required.

(3) Under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, federal agencies cannot discriminate against an individual with a handicapping condition, and alcohol and drug addiction qualify as handicapping conditions. Yet, agencies are not required to keep employees whose alcoholism or drug abuse prevents the employee from performing his or her job. Before taking any disciplinary action for performance problems, an agency must offer rehabilitative assistance (including sick leave to participate in a rehabilitation program) to accommodate an employee with a drug or alcohol problem. Thus, if a drug user were identifed through a urinalysis program, an agency would have to offer rehabilitative assistance and an immediate removal action would be precluded.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, let me summarize what the committee has proposed in this bill. It directs the Office of Personnel Management to report to the Congress within 6 months whether agencies have employee assistance programs, what they cost, how they are funded, the utilization rates, how they disseminate their information and services, how they train the staff dealing with individuals who have this difficulty, the training of the supervisors, the safeguards which would guarantee confidentiality.

Frankly, a lot of employees across the country would like to do something about their alcoholic or drug problems, but they are worried about confidentiality and recommend to us legislative changes.

It would also institute a comprehensive educational program for employees and supervisors. It would develop safeguards with regard to referrals and it would involve employment protection. We have to assure that if a person enrolls in such a program that their job is protected. We ought not to penalize them for taking their health into consideration trying to do something about the problem.

Finally, the legislation would require annual reports by agencies to OPM on these kinds of activities so that we have a record so we can evaluate and even do a better job and authorize the substance abuse treatment and rehabilitation project involving OPM and some of the agencies and Federal employment health benefit plan providers.

I think the way that we treat Government workers is probably a good role model for the way other corporations and the private sector, and indeed States and local governments, ought to take a look at how their programs are functioning. If we do not really provide the means for someone to be treated and the education for someone to be treated, we will never really solve the problem. I do believe that people who have the difficulty ought to be given a chance to correct their problem.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act. At the same time I want to commend the Speaker for his leadership in the development of this piece of legislation and getting it to the floor.

This bill represents a comprehensive approach to a pernicious national problem that has defied all efforts—at both the national and local level—to find a solution.

This bill authorizes a total of $1.5 billion for a number of highly integrated programs. The funds would be used for drug enforcement, interdiction, eradication as well as education and treatment.

What we have here is a bipartisan effort—and one that speaks eloquently for the need to act.

We can no longer allow the serious drug problems of our Nation to proliferate. The cost has become far too high both in human and economic terms.

Every day we read in the newspapers and see on television stories about young lives being tragically snuffed out. The lives of others are turned into helplessness and hopelessness while thousands of pushers and dealers get rich from the misery of others.

Certainly this bill will not overnight solve all of our drug problems. It is, however, the beginning of a comprehensive Federal effort to deal with what has become perhaps our most critical national problem.

I am especially pleased with the contribution of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service that would require the Office of Personnel Management to develop prevention, treatment and rehabilitation programs for all Federal employees, and to establish a Government-wide education program on the health hazards of alcohol and drug abuse, symptoms of abuse and availability of services.

I can see in this bill the opportunity for the Federal Government becoming the model employer in the Nation with respect to drug treatment and prevention programs.

I am especially pleased that a demonstration project proposed by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service was included in the omnibus bill. Under the project several methods of providing health insurance benefits for the treatment of drug and alcohol abuse will be tested under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program.

At the same time the bill authorizes $350 million every year in grants to schools to develop drug abuse education and prevention programs.

It is important for this body, indeed the whole Federal Government, to get out in front in efforts to solve this horrendous problem. It is a national problem—one that State and local governments cannot deal with on their own.

What we have here is a clear opportunity. We have both practical and compelling moral obligations to seize it.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] to handle the Interior and Insular Affairs portion of the bill.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to bring before the House for its consideration title XI of H.R. 5484 containing the Interior Committee provisions for this drug initiative. Chairman UDALL will not be able to be here because of his primary election yesterday and has asked me to manage that title on behalf of the committee. I am delighted to do so.

The Interior title is divided into three subtitles dealing with three aspects of our committee's jurisdiction. Indian Affairs, National Parks, and the Territories and Commonwealths.

A major part of our committee's jurisdiction relates to Indian affairs and Indian tribes. Subtitle A of title XI deals with the alcohol and drug problem on Indian reservations. There are over 260 Indian tribes and numerous Alaska Native villages in our jurisdiction with a membership population of nearly 1,000,000 people.

The alcohol and drug problem on Indian reservations and in Alaska Native villages, both in terms of the traffic in illegal substances and the devastating impact of alcohol and drug abuse, is the No. 1 social and health problem in Indian country. In recognition of that fact, our committee extensively considered and reported legislation, H.R. 1156, dealing with that problem among Indian youth.

When our committee was requested by the leadership to provide our initiatives for this omnibus bill, we used H.R. 1156, as reported by our committee, as the framework for our efforts.

As reported by the committee, H.R. 1156 is focused on the problems of Indian youth. While subtitle A retains this focus, it also expands and enlarges upon the purpose of that bill. Subtitle A provides for the development and funding of a comprehensive program to deal with the problem of alcohol and drug abuse on Indian reservations.

Since tribes are special units of local government with a wide range of responsibilities for their members, subtitle A contains provisions which span the spectrum of governmental efforts. Provisions and programs are included which deal with the suppression and control of illegal drug traffic through increased and enhanced law enforcement efforts. In addition, it establishes a variety of efforts in the area of education, prevention, and treatment.

While the subtitle does authorize new efforts and funding for Indian programs, I want to emphasize to the House that its major thrust is to coordinate existing Federal and non-Federal programs and resources with respect to this critical problem. In particular, private efforts, such as Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, and Al-Anon, will be most helpful and will not cost the Federal Government a cent.

Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government has a special responsibility for Indian tribes and their problems. Indian tribes receive little assistance from other Federal programs and almost none from State and local efforts. Subtitle A may represent the last best hope of effectively dealing with their most serious problem, that of alcohol and drug abuse.

Our committee, including both Democrats and Republicans, strongly support these Indian provisions. I urge the House to do likewise.

Another jurisdiction of our committee which has been impacted by the drug problem is that of national parks. Subtitle B of title XI provides supplemental funding for the national park police to increase their activity in drug investigations on exclusive jurisdiction lands administered by the National Park Service. Growing problems with the use and distribution of controlled substances occurring on Park Service lands, especially around the Nation's Capitol, make it imperative that the park police be provided additional funding for manpower, training, and equipment to combat the problem. Section 1131 authorizes $1 million for fiscal year 1987 and each year thereafter for that purpose.

Subtitle C is the U.S. Insular Areas Drug Abuse Act of 1986. This legislation would authorize Federal action, as well as the assistance for local action, needed to deal with the individual drug problems of the insular areas.

The subtitle was developed on a bipartisan basis by the leadership of the committee and in close coordination with our colleagues representing the insular areas—RON DE LUGO of the Virgin Islands, the senior insular representative; FOFO SUNIA of American Samoa; JAIME FUSTER of Puerto Rico; and BEN BLAZ of Guam—as well as the Northern Mariana Islands representative, Froilan Tenorio.

The U.S. insular areas are in a very real sense, the Nation's insular borders in the Caribbean and the Pacific. Puerto Rico is actually within the United States for customs purposes and the other insular areas are United States territory.

Drug traffickers know this. There has been intelligence for several years now on the large-scale use of Puerto Rico and the nearby Virgin Islands for transshipment of the most deadly narcotics to the United States mainland.

In these Caribbean islands the fall out from this activity has been high rates of drug abuse and violent crime rates that are two and three times the national average.

The Pacific insular areas are farther from the States but on-island drug abuse problems are worsening.

U.S. Caribbean and Pacific insular governments have initiated campaigns to fight the flow of narcotics but are limited by a lack of resources. Further, Federal law enforcement agencies are not doing as much as they must to stop smuggling into and through these islands.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding, I do want to recognize the efforts of Mr. WAXMAN and the Energy and Commerce Committee regarding the Indian provisions of this bill. Subtitle A includes provisions relating to the programs of the Indian Health Service. We share jurisdiction with that committee on those programs and I want to thank Mr. WAXMAN for his cooperation and understanding in the development of that part of the Interior title.

Mr. Chairman, section 1142 would require the President to report to the Congress each year on the drug trafficking and other abuse problems of our territories and commonwealths. Information on drug smuggling into United States Customs territory from and through American Samoa, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Virgin Islands and from the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands, and Palau would have to be submitted. Information on both drug smuggling into and use in American Samoa, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands would also have to be submitted.

With respect to the entry of narcotics into Hawaii, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands, entry from Palau and other islands groups proposed for free association with the United States is a particular concern. This concern has been highlighted by the regional commissioner of the Customs Service, among others.

Section 1143(a) would authorize the Department of Justice to enable American Samoa to enforce Federal narcotics laws. It also authorizes the Department to provide equipment and technical assistance to the territory needed to enforce Federal and territorial drug abuse laws.

Gov. A.P. Lutali has made the eradication of illegal narcotics a priority. However, the fiscally strapped territory lacks the resources and expertise to combat drug abuse crimes.

The Drug Enforcement Administration office in Hawaii has attempted to provide some assistance to local officials but does not have the resources budgeted even to deploy an agent in the territory. Resources for local customs enforcement and police undercover activities are inadequate.

Local law enforcement agencies should be assisted in carrying out drug abuse operations. Training, on-island and at the DEA office in Los Angeles, should be provided. Case development should be augmented.

Equipment should also be provided by the Justice Department. This could include pistols and rifles; protective clothing; training equipment; speed boats and an aircraft to be used to detect cultivation as well as apprehend traffickers, and other needs identified by local law enforcement officials. At least $700,000 is intended to be made available through this authorization over the next couple of years.

Section 1143(b) is intended to establish minimum level of effort standards for Federal narcotics law enforcement efforts in Guam. It would also authorize the Department of Justice to provide equipment and technical assistance to the territory needed to enforce Federal and territorial drug abuse laws.

Through resources authorized by this omnibus drug control legislation or other laws, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Federal Bureau of Investigation would each be expected to increase their full time presence in the territory to at least two agents and the Coast Guard to at least four patrol vessels. Additionally, the Customs and Postal Services would be expected to assign agents to work with other Federal and local law enforcement officers in narcotics control efforts.

The authorization for assistance to the territory is intended to enable the Justice Department to provide both equipment and personnel. Over $1 million may be required for this purpose over the next couple of years.

Section 1143(c) authorizes assistance and authority for the Northern Mariana Islands similar to that provided in subsection 1143(a) regarding American Samoa. Interisland trafficking is of particular concern in the case of the commonwealth. Thus, it authorizes Federal personnel and equipment assigned to Guam, the southernmost Mariana island, to operate in the Northern Mariana Islands.

Section 1143(d) would authorize grants to Puerto Rico of $3.3 million to acquire two helicopters, $3.5 million to acquire an airplane, and $1 million to acquire high-speed boats. This equipment would be primarily used by local law enforcement officers but would also be available to Federal agencies when needed.

Through resources authorized by this omnibus drug control legislation or other laws, the Drug Enforcement Administration would be expected to increase its full-time presence in the Commonwealth to at least 26 agents, the Federal Bureau of Investigation to at least 96 agents, and the Customs Service to no less than 25 law enforcement agents. The Department of Justice would also be authorized to provide technical assistance to the Commonwealth needed to enforce Federal and Commonwealth drug laws.

There has been substantial intelligence on the use of the island as a major entry point for illicit drugs from abroad for several years now. The proximity of the island to the mainland as well as other nations and its inclusion within the United States for customs purposes makes it a particularly attractive spot for smuggling.

The Drug Enforcement Administration estimates that 80 percent of the drugs brought into Puerto Rico are bound for the United States mainland. Since the 20 percent of the drugs brought into Puerto Rico that stay on the island supply a drug user population estimated in the hundreds of thousands, perhaps more than 1 million American lives in the States and the Commonwealth may be hurt by the Puerto Rico drug trafficking problem.

Just a few weeks ago, 55 people were arrested and 6 others who were abroad at the time were charged with being part of a ring that smuggled large quantities of heroin, cocaine, and other drugs to the States. A dozen air, land, and sea vehicles were also seized.

A recent study in Puerto Rico attributes over 70 percent of the overall crime rate to drug-related crimes. Federal Bureau of Investigation 1985 crime reports indicate that the murder rate on the island is over twice the national average and the robbery rate is almost double the national average.

Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon has made crime control a centerpiece of his administration's program and the crackdown on drug-related crimes a priority. A comprehensive plan has earned the praise of Vice President Bush.

The assistance being authorized would help the Commonwealth implement this plan. It would contribute to resources dedicated to the effort by the Commonwealth itself from its own tight budget.

An important resource that would not be provided by this subtitle is a radar-equipped lighter-than-aircraft—aerostat—that the Federal Government should operate over the island to protect the United States border in Puerto Rico.

The bipartisan leadership of the committee believes that a means of providing such equipment should be found. It is our hope that one of the aerostats to be made available by another title of this omnibus legislation could be located over Puerto Rico. I would expect any such craft to be manufactured in the United States.

The aerostat is needed because current radar surveillance does not cover the entire island, particularly during portions of the day. Again, this means that the United States border is not watched and that the controlled substances which enter Puerto Rico through these gaps are then relatively easily transported to the States.

The inadequacies of radar surveillance of our border in Puerto Rico could also be overcome if personnel of the Puerto Rico Air National Guard, who are also commonwealth law enforcement officers, were authorized to operate on a round-the-clock basis.

Section 1143(e) would authorize grants to the Virgin Islands totaling $3 million to acquire two patrol boats; radar tracking equipment; protective clothing, ammunition, and other supplies, and for law enforcement personnel. It would also authorize grants totaling $1 million for programs to prevent narcotics abuse.

Through resources authorized by this omnibus drug control legislation or other laws, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Federal Bureau of Investigation would each be expected to increase their full-time presence in the territory to two agents and the Coast Guard would be expected to station at least one vessel in St. Croix. Additionally, the Customs and Postal Services would be expected to assign agents to work with other Federal and local law enforcement officers in narcotics control efforts. The Department of Justice would also be authorized to provide technical assistance to the territory needed to enforce Federal and territorial drug laws.

The use of the Virgin Islands as a transshipment point for cocaine, heroin, and other illicit drugs from abroad is a serious problem. The fallout from this transshipment activity has contributed to a local drug abuse problem that the territory does not have the resources to effectively handle.

Federal Bureau of Investigation 1985 crime reports indicate that the rates of violent crimes in the islands are more than two or three times the national averages.

The islands have attempted to combat these problems through a local narcotics strike force. Only five of the eight slated agent positions have been filled because of fiscal constraints, however.

The local effort is also handicapped by an inadequate level of Federal personnel and equipment. The assistance being authorized would augment territorial resources and enhance Federal efforts.

Included within this increased Federal effort should be a Coast Guard vessel stationed at St. Croix. Given the situation, we do not believe that the stationing of vessels in St. Thomas alone is adequate.

Like the assistance granted to the territory for narcotics law enforcement, the assistance granted for drug abuse programs is expected to be used over the next few years. It should be provided to local organizations with demonstrated expertise in responding to juvenile problems and/or drug and alcohol dependency.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], who will handle the Committee on the Interior and Insular Affairs portion of the bill.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986, and particularly in support of subtitle A of title XI, the Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986. This portion of the bill is an expanded version of legislation before the Interior Committee addressing substance and alcohol abuse among Indian youth. I am honored to have worked with Chairman UDALL on this legislation since the middle of the 98th Congress. As usual, this title demonstrates his deep and enduring commitment to our native Americans. It contains elements of legislation I introduced last year as well as elements of Congressman BEREUTER's bill on the same subject.

Some may ask why we need to deal with Indian substance abuse in a separate title of the bill. I would like to make the following points to my colleagues:

Alcohol and substance abuse is the most severe health and social problem facing Indian tribes and Indian people today. Nothing is more costly to Indian people than the consequences of these actions, measured in physical, mental, social, and economic terms;

Alcohol and substance abuse is the leading generic risk factor among Indians, and Indians die from alcoholism at over four times the age-adjusted rates for the U.S. population. Alcohol and substance misuse results in a rate of years of potential life loss nearly five times that of the United States as a whole;

Four of the top ten causes of death among Indians are alcohol and drug-related injuries, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis, suicide, and homicide;

The Indian Health Service, which is charged with treatment and rehabilitation efforts, has directed less than 1 percent of its budget for alcohol and substance abuse problems;

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, which has the responsibility for programs in the fields of education, social services, law enforcement, and other programs, has assumed little responsibility for coordinating its various efforts to focus on the epidemic of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people; and

This lack of emphasis and priority continues despite the fact that Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service officials publicly acknowledge that alcohol and substance among Indian youth is the most serious health and social problem facing the Indian people.

The Federal Government has an historical relationship, and a unique legal and moral responsbility to Indian tribes and their members. However, Indian tribes have the primary responsibility to their members, and this act recognizes this fact through the establishment by tribes of tribal action plans, which will be the driving force behind the coordination of tribal/Federal efforts. Without this tribal leadership, I believe that any program would be doomed to failure.

Pursuant to the tribal lead the Secretaries of the Interior and of Health and Human Services would be required to enter into a memorandum of agreement to coordinate their resources, at the local level, with the tribal plan. From our hearings it is clear that many resources do exist, but the left hand is unaware of the right hand's existence.

There are infrastructure authorizations such as new programs in training, law enforcement, treatment centers, and detention centers. This is necessary because we in Congress have done poorly in the past at providing basic infrastructure to many tribes. In fact, many tribes out of necessity are in violation of the law concerning detention of juveniles, simply because they do not have facilities.

The administration has recently come to the realization that this is a problem that requires immediate action. Secretary Bowen, within his general authorities, has instituted a new substance and alcohol abuse program at Indian Health Service facilities. This bill will complement this newly begun program and greatly benefit Indian tribes and their members.

From my personal experiences, I am committed to bettering the welfare of our native Americans. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read from a letter I received concerning the future of an Indian tribe in Arizona. The tribal chairman writes, in our Indian community,

Sixty-five percent of our juveniles are abusing alcohol or other drugs. Our young people are an important human resource to us, since half of the reservation population is made up of people under 25 years of age.

Mr. Chairman, we are passing this legislation not just to address the problems identified today, but to assure a future for our Indian tribes and their people. I strongly urge my colleagues to support title XI, the Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend both the Speaker of the House and the leadership on both sides of the aisle for this legislation, and I want to commend the leadership of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for title XI and particularly for subtitle C, which addresses the problems of the insular areas.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986.

The U.S. Virgin Islands is a microreflection of the mainland. Drugs, including crack, and alcohol are undercutting the fabric of our community.

The U.S. Virgin Islands is a known transshipment and refuelling point for cocaine, marijuana and, to a lesser extent, heroin. Weapons are also transshipped in and shipped through the territory. These items enter territorial waters by air, yacht, and even cruiseship, and their destination is the U.S. mainland. The fallout from their transshipment feeds a growing local market.

The lead enforcement agency in the Virgin Islands for this activity is the local government's Narcotics Strike Force [NSF]. Eight agent positions are slated for the agency, but currently only five are filled. This situation will be difficult to change under the local government's hiring freeze and fiscal problems. All five agents are currently located on the island of St. Thomas. They are transferred to St. Croix when needed for a specific operation, but surveillance is spotty and there is no real enforcement on St. John.] The extra force relies on help from three Federal agencies: DEA, FBI, and Customs. There are no DEA agents in the Virgin Islands, so help from that agency is through Puerto Rico. There is one FBI agent for the whole territory. Customs has agents in the territory, but none were assigned to enforcement until June, when two collections agents were transferred to enforcement duties. In short, manpower is our biggest problem.

There are no vessels regularly policing the territorial seas. The Coast Guard, a resource that enforcement agents have relied upon heavily in the past, has cut back its operation. It has removed its only boat on the island of St. Croix. This means that there is only one boat, located in St. Thomas, to police all three islands. St. Croix, the largest in size of the three main islands, is 40 miles away from St. Thomas.

Also, there is no radar tracking equipment for enforcement in the territory.

As a result of these limitations, air and sea vessels use the Virgin Islands and surrounding seas with impunity. Enforcement agents can only skim the top of the drug and weapons market operating through the area, and are frustrated that so much of the activity is beyond their reach.

In addition to the general authorizations for the States and U.S. insular areas, H.R. 5484 would authorize specific funding to bring the Virgin Islands more in line with standards of enforcement and prevention in this country. The proposal authorizes specific funding for enforcement equipment for the Virgin Islands Narcotic Strike Force, including patrol boats and manpower. Additionally, the bill underscores the expectation that government will increase the Coast Guard, DEA, FBI, Customs, and Postal Service presence and commitment to assisting the territory in its enforcement efforts.

The bill would also target another aspect of the drug crisis facing the territory: the consumer. One million dollars would be authorized for programs to prevent narcotics abuse. These funds would be available over a 3- to 4-year period to local organizations with a demonstrated expertise in responding to juvenile problems generally or to drug and alcohol dependency specifically. The intention is to allow independent organizations with high success rates, such as the Youth Multiservice Center in St. Thomas, to increase their capabilities and broaden their reach. Right now the need in the community for help is overwhelming these organizations. Enforcement alone cannot do the job. Public education and treatment of those who are addicted is a must. There is no other way to break the supply and demand cycle in the vicious marketplace of illegal drugs.

We cannot end this Congress without passing this legislation. Drug abuse is a major threat to the future of this country. I commend the Speaker and the majority leader for their leadership in introducing this legislation, and in developing the strong consensus of bipartisan support. The breadth and depth of the support is a credit to the House. I am also grateful to the gentleman from Arizona, Chairman UDALL, for soliciting my input, and for his appreciation of the critical situation in the U.S. Virgin Islands. I urge my colleagues vote in favor of passage.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. STRANG].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. STRANG] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this measure, H.R. 5484, and extend my praise and compliments to the leadership of this House, to the leadership of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and particularly to the leadership of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement Education and Control Act of 1986, and more importantly in strong support of title XI, the Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse, Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986.

Mr. Chairman, substance and alcohol abuse is the No. 1 problem in the Indian community today. Its causes are many, stemming from massive unemployment, poor living conditions, inadequate health care, substandard education, and from general remoteness. All these factors have contributed to a sense of hopelessness and a desire to escape reality.

While illicit drugs and alcohol are becoming more and more prevalent today; Indian problems are much deeper. Substance abuse includes the use of paint thinner, snorting correcting fluid, huffing gasoline, drinking lysol, sterno, and other wood alcohol products. Substance abuse of this variety has a high degree of brain damage, genetic problems, and in many cases death.

The prevention and treatment section of the Indian subtitle are aimed at addressing this "demand" for substances, drugs, and alcohol. I strongly believe that if a massive effort, coordinating Federal and tribal resources, as well as State and private, is not implemented, the future of Indian tribes is a bleak one.

There is a chance to convince the youth of Indian tribes that there really is a future of more and promises fulfilled, and that the escape from reality through substance abuse is not the answer. I urge my colleagues to support title XI, and support the future of Indian people.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. FUSTER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Puerto Rico

[Mr. FUSTER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] for recognizing the need for increased radar coverage in Puerto Rico. I also want to thank him as well as the other members of the Interior Committee, of the Select Committee on Narcotics, and of the leadership of the House for the attention they have given to the serious crime and drug problems in Puerto Rico and for the help they have provided me in drafting the parts of this bill that deal with Puerto Rico.

I am particularly grateful for their help in my efforts to assure that the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is given additional resources to continue the strong battle against drugs that we have been waging in the island for several years now.

The Omnibus Drug Act contains several measures important to Puerto Rico in fighting drug traffic through our borders. However, as the gentleman from Ohio has clearly recognized, there is an additional urgent need for increased radar coverage of the island. Top DEA and Customs officials in Puerto Rico have personally expressed to me that the Federal agencies in the island do not have the technical capacity to detect low flying aircraft, particularly at the southwest coast of the island, which is the one closest to Central and South American drug sources.

We cannot solve this problem unless one of the aerostats made available under other provisions of this bill is placed in Puerto Rico. I believe you and the other Members present will agree with me that this should be done. Puerto Rico has been recognized by the U.S. DEA as one of the three major entry points for illicit drugs from abroad. The U.S. district attorney in Puerto Rico has estimated that drugs worth billions of dollars are coming to Puerto Rico and the mainland through the island's border. Without adequate equipment, such as the aerostat, this huge gap will persist. It behooves us to do all we can to close this gap, by assuring that one of the seven radars is placed in Puerto Rico.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUSTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his statement. So often, our citizens in Puerto Rico have their safety overlooked. Certainly they are vulnerable as it relates to the international trafficking of drugs. That evidence has certainly been brought to the attention of the Select Committee on Narcotics, which the gentleman has been so supportive of, and I certainly support your recommendation.

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I want to join in supporting the request for aerostat and for other surveillance equipment necessary to provide this kind of protection in Puerto Rico.

It is certainly one of our important borders and is deserving of this kind of consideration in the protection it would provide for all of our borders.

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to join in supporting the gentleman's request. I think the gentleman makes an excellent point.

I know our subcommittee has reviewed many times in Puerto Rico the situation down there. There is no coverage. In fact, the radar points in the other direction.

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, today's omnibus legislation has many important features and represents a comprehensive counterassault on the alcohol and drug epidemic that threatens American society. To speak to its many provisions is not possible in the short time available, but there is one title in which this Member has taken a special interest and legislative role.

I am pleased to have had some role in the titles of this bill from both the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs Committee, where I serve. The money-laundering provisions, are, this Member believes, particularly important and overdue. I commend the leadership of these two committees. However, today I want to address the title submitted by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee are the provisions of H.R. 1156, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act, which was introduced and developed by this Member and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE]. In that effort, we have enjoyed the assistance and cooperation of the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs, Education and Labor, and Energy and Commerce. Special assistance has also been provided by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN], the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE]. Of course the leadership of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Interior Committee, Mr. UDALL, and Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, was critical.

While it is clear to all of us that alcohol and drug abuse is a widespread scourge, there is perhaps no group more devastated by it than Indian youth. Their testimony clearly demonstrates that the American Indian community recognizes this problem and supports the provisions in this title.

Indian people die from alcohol and drug abuse at over four times the age-adjusted rates for non-Indian people. In a high school on one of the reservations in my home State of Nebraska, a young Indian woman told me that 98 percent of the student body surveyed admitted to the use of illegal drugs, 80 percent admitted to drinking, and 52 percent of the 80 who drank did so to pass out.

On some reservations, over 70 percent of the contract health care money went to alcohol-related illnesses and injuries. Indian young people between the ages of 15 and 24 are more than twice as likely as non-Indians to commit suicide, and approximately 80 percent of those suicides are alcohol related. These grim statistics go on and on. Yet nothing has effectively been done about these intolerable conditions. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] and this Member decided 3 years ago that we would no longer stand by and allow the Federal Government to ignore its trust responsibilities in assisting tribes in their fight against alcohol and drug abuse. The provisions in this bill today are the result of years of work and negotiation which culminated in the markup by two House committees of the legislation that my colleague from South Dakota and I have sponsored through two Congresses.

Our legislation rests upon a simple strategy—that prevention education is the best approach to alcohol and drug abuse. The omnibus bill we are considering here today recognizes and builds upon that concept. And while we must certainly attack producers and distributors, and increase criminal penalties in our determination to rid our communities of substance abuse, substantial progress on eradication will come only with comprehensive prevention programs. These are the programs that will help young people to develop the internal resources to say no to the temptation—using, producing, and selling drugs—and using and abusing alcohol.

Mr. Chairman, like most Members, this Member believes that the provisions in this bill provide the means and reduce drug and alcohol abuse among native Americans, expecially the youth. This legislation will be enacted into law only after important compromising by both sides and some soul searching about our priorities.

I urge this body to maintain the bipartisan spirit in which the omnibus bill was conceived. The implications for all Americans are far too important to allow our political differences to undermine the passage of this critical legislation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 5484. I believe that it takes great strides in forcefully and successfully addressing the drug crisis which is having such an adverse affect on this society. I commend my colleagues who have worked so diligently on this legislation—they have done a fine job.

I am pleased to see title XI included in this bill, and I strongly support it. Title XI, among other things, requires the Departments of the Interior and Health and Human Services to investigate the problem of alcohol and drug abuse among Indians, and to identify and assess resources and program which could help reduce alcohol and drug abuse among Indian people. H.R. 5484 is, indeed, a comprehensive bill. By addressing the problems of alcohol and drug abuse among Indians, it will be tackling some of the toughest substance abuse problems faced by any individual or group in this country.

Alcohol abuse is an extremely serious problem for American Indians—it has adverse physical, psychological, and societal consequences for American Indians both on and off reservations. It also has adverse consequences on communities near reservations.

Indian Health Service statistics indicate that the age-adjusted alcoholism death rate per 100,000 population for Indians in 1982 was 35.8—this statistic compares to a national rate of 6.4. This statistic alone does not adequately convey the far-reaching impact of alcohol use and abuse on Indian people.

As the bulk of the Indian population is young, the burdens of alcohol use fall most severely on Indian youth. Deaths attributable to motor vehicle accidents, homicide, suicide, and alcoholism are reliable and disturbing measures of the incidence of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth. The two agencies which oversee the Federal trust responsibility toward Indians—the Indian Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs—have made little significant progress toward curbing alcohol abuse among Indians. H.R. 5484 authorizes a total of $94.9 million in fiscal year 1987 for numerous education, prevention, law enforcement, treatment, and other drug-related programs for Indians. We may soon see real progress in reducing the alcohol abuse rates for Indians, with its consequent social and economic costs.

Also included in this title is a project which is very important to the people of New Mexico—the Navajo Alcohol Rehabilitation Demonstration Program. This program, to be based in Gallup, NM, for 3 years, will be a demonstration program for the rehabilitation of Navajo Indians who are suffering from alcoholism or alcohol abuse. The Navajo tribe is the largest tribe in this country—I have personally witnessed the problems created by alcohol abuse among Navajos—as well as its adverse impact on towns surrounding the Navajo reservation. I believe that this project will have a positive effect on the lives of a great number of people. Successful results in the Navajo Alcohol Rehabilitation Demonstration Program can be replicated by tribes across the country.

I cannot overemphasize the significance of title XI. It is a clear national statement that Indian alcoholism is a serious problem with severe costs. I believe that this section will enable agencies to tackle head on Indian alcohol problems. I urge my colleagues' support for this title, and for final passage of H.R. 5484.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of today's Omnibus Drug Enforcement Education, and Control Act. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation which moves to strike down illegal drug activity in this country and hopefully put a dent in the illegal flow of drugs from abroad. With this bill we are trying to bolster U.S. narcotics control programs to stop the drug traffic at its source as well as establish Federal nationwide programs on drug abuse education, treatment, and prevention.

By enacting the legislation before us today, we hope to see the lucrative business of drug trafficking smothered before the drugs reach our coasts. The U.S. Coast Guard and the Navy will begin working as a team in the interdiction of maritime drug smugglers. The Department of Defense will start an operation of loaning highly sensitive radar equipment to Federal drug enforcement agencies to enhance drug surveillance and interdiction, particularly along the southern coast.

The omnibus drug control bill attacks the drug problem at its roots as well as take aim against the demand. The war on drugs cannot be won unless action is taken at home to stifle the availability of illegal substances once they have made their way into the country. H.R. 5484 revises the current Federal penalty structure for certain drug offenses by establishing mandatory minimum sentences for certain drug offenses. We are hoping to deter the would-be drug trafficker from getting involved in drug trafficking and penalize those who are continuing to make drugs available on the streets.

Another target in the drug war are the investors who make their living from the lucrative drug trade. I am extremely pleased to see that a bill which I originally cosponsored has become a part of this overall Drug Enforcement Act. The Money Laundering Control Act has been incorporated into the bill in an effort to crack down on those individuals moving or "laundering" illegally obtained funds. Those facing money laundering violations would not only face criminal penalties of up to $1 million and 20 years in prison, but also forfeiture of criminal and civil procedures.

Some of my constituents have contacted me concerned about the drug problem in their community and, more importantly, concerned about the impact the drug problem could have on their children. I share their deep concern and feel that more needs to be made to establish drug abuse education curriculums in the schools. This bill mounts a Federal campaign against drug abuse and focuses on education, prevention, and treatment. Teachers, counselors, and other public service personnel in communities around the Nation will be participating in a campaign against drugs through Federal grant programs. A nationwide agency for the prevention of drug abuse will work in coordination with State grant recipients to ensure a high visibility of education and prevention programs.

Realistically, the battle on drugs will not be won overnight. This bill will not completely end the demand or supply of drugs. However, what we intend to accomplish here today is to reduce the amount of drugs which make their way into the United States by strengthening the Coast Guard, the Customs Services, and the Armed Services so they can contribute their resources to the fight. We also intend to deter those who engage in drug trafficking or money laundering from continuing to sell and make profit from the illegal activity. Finally, we hope to educate children about the hazards of drugs, and create an environment to help those who may have already fallen victim to drug abuse find a way home, to their friends and their families.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to recognize the work of the Interior Committee staff for their work on title XI, and in particular Miss Debbie Broken Rope of the Indian Affairs staff, as well as our chief staffer in the Indian Affairs Office, Mr. Frank Ducheneaux, and also Mr. Jeff Farrow, of our staff dealing with insular and territorial affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I also would like to express my appreciation to members of the staff, particularly Mr. Ducheneaux and Mr. Houtz, and I would like to in closing, Mr. Chairman, point out there is $94 million in this section of the bill for Indian alcohol substance and drug abuse. That sounds like a great deal of money; indeed it is.

The amount of money that this country is expending on an annual basis on trying to salvage the human wreckage as a result of drug, alcohol and substance abuse on our Indian reservations is staggering.

We owe, as a Judeo-Christian society, a commitment to the native Americans of this country that we will assist them in order to regain their dignity.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, title XII of H.R. 5484 addresses the problem of divided responsibilities and lack of coordination in the Federal antidrug effort. Title 12 embodies the text of H.R. 5266, which was introduced by me along with Congressmen GLENN ENGLISH and TOM KINDNESS, the chairman and ranking minority members of the Government Operations Subcommittee on Government Information, Justice and Agriculture. The full committee approved the bill by unanimous vote on July 19, 1986.

The Government Information Subcommittee has conducted a number of investigations over the past few years on the Federal Government's drug interdiction efforts. Those investigations have pointed to a lack of coordination among Federal agencies as a key source of the failure to stop the flow of drugs. The same problem exists with regard to drug education and treatment efforts. Responsibility for these functions is divided among numerous Federal agencies, leading to turf wars, bureaucratic infighting, and competition for budget dollars.

Title XII of H.R. 5484 requires the President to submit within 6 months recommendations for legislation to reorganize executive branch agencies to more effectively combat drug trafficking and abuse. In preparing these recommendations, the President is to consult with the Comptroller General, along with State and local law enforcement authorities, appropriate congressional committees, and the heads of Cabinet agencies with responsibility in this area.

Mr. Chairman, it is appropriate that this requirement for a fresh look at the organization of the Federal Government's anti-drug efforts be included as title XII of this bill. All that we have done in the remainder of this legislation to combat drug abuse at the Federal level will fall short unless we improve the organization and coordination of these efforts. That is the purpose of title XII.

Mr. Chairman, the test of title XII of the omnibus bill, H.R. 5484, inadvertently neglected to pick up a minor amendment to H.R. 5266 which was adopted by the full Government Operations Committee. That amendment deleted the word "international" from the provision requiring the President to submit recommendations for legislation. The purpose of the amendment is to eliminate any confusion over the scope of the recommendations that the President shall submit pursuant to this bill. At the appropriate time, Mr. ENGLISH, who suggested this change, may ask unanimous consent that this amendment be adopted to section 1203 of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, as well as the ranking minority members, and other members of the committee for the fine efforts that they have put forth in this particular area.

We have seen, I think, Mr. Chairman, a number of new assets that have been presented over the past 5 or 6 hours as we have gone from committee to committee, and various sections of the bill, showing what additions can be made to make this a real war on drugs.

We have covered the entire border, talking about military assets, law enforcement assets, education, treatment, we have covered everything. The real issue is, how can it all mesh together? Will it all mesh together? Can we really make this system work so that we do have a solid front in dealing with the war on drugs?

Mr. Chairman, unfortunately if we look at the experience of the past, we find that there are some very discouraging experience indeed. We find that different agencies and different departments compete against each other; competing with each other; with regard to the amount of substance that may be captured; who gets credit for capturing a particular violator; who is going to receive the resources; who is going to receive the credit; these struggles have gone on for years and years and have thwarted our law enforcement efforts.

It has in effect meant that we have had a piecemeal approach. Not only has it meant that each department and agency has had its own concepts, its own ideas of how to deal with this problem, it is even meant within these departments and agencies. We have had it divided down into regions so each region has their own approach, their own ideas, with no one really able to pull it altogether.

What this legislation requires, Mr. Chairman, it requires the President to make recommendations to the Congress in 6 months as to how we can pull it altogether; how we can make this system work; how we can make certain that this system accomplishes the goals that this Congress has for it.

Mr. Chairman, I have got to say that this may be one of the most important, perhaps some would say even the most important feature of that legislation. Let us make certain that the system we are putting in place today really works.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON], the ranking member of the Committee on Government Operations.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, title XII was introduced as H.R. 5266 and was ordered reported by the Committee on Government Operations by unanimous voice vote on August 5, 1986.

This title requires the President to submit to Congress recommendations for legislation to reorganize the executive branch of the Government to more effectively combat drug traffic and drug abuse. Those recommendations are required to be submitted to each House of Congress within 6 months after the date of enactment.

In the preparation of such recommendations, the President shall consult with the Comptroller General, State and local law enforcement authorities, relevant committees of the Congress, the Attorney General and the Secretaries of State, the Treasury, Transportation, Health and Human Services, Defense, and Education.

The large number of agencies involved is a symptom of the problem we hope will be addressed. Many different agencies have particular responsibilities for one aspect or another of our Nation's overall efforts against drug trafficking and drug abuse: eradication at the source, law enforcement, interdiction of smugglers, treatment of abusers, and education and prevention. As our concern over drug trafficking and drug abuse has increased over the past few years, umbrella and coordination offices have been created. They include the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System, the White House Office on Drug Abuse, the Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Forces, and the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board. We have found, unfortunately, that those umbrella or coordinative offices don't always have the authority to cut across jurisdictional lines or to demonstrate exactly what their responsibilities are.

Furthermore, we have learned that some of the agencies to which we have provided resources to deal with drug trafficking and drug abuse have not done the best job of managing those resources or working cooperatively with other agencies.

In the past we have reorganized the executive branch in the hope of improving the Federal Government's response to drug trafficking and drug abuse. For example, in 1973, we approved a reorganization plan which created the Drug Enforcement Administration. DEA could be the focal point of Federal antidrug efforts. The problems of drug trafficking and drug abuse are many and varied, they require the expertise of specialists in many fields. Accordingly, we find the wide naumber of agencies which have one responsibility or another.

For example, in the area of interdiction, we depend upon the Customs Service, the Coast Guard, and, for intelligence, the Drug Enforcement Administration. We also have contributions from the Defense Department. It is not at all clear that we are making the most efficient use of all the resources that these agencies now have or that they will have when this legislation is enacted.

Title XII does not dictate any particular reorganization. It simply tells the President that there is a need for some reorganization which will make overall efforts in this area more effective and efficient. I expect that early in the next Congress, the President will, in compliance with this title, send us reorganization proposals for our consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves 6 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, first the committees which contributed to this bill and Majority Leader Jim Wright are to be commended for the hard work they have done in drafting this legislation.

Obviously the drug problem in the United States is becoming more critical every year. It has destroyed lives in every area of this country, it has been the cause of countless crimes, it has exacted an enormous economic cost and it threatens the basic quality of life in the United States.

Recent numbers related to drug abuse are extremely disturbing. Cocaine importation has increased from 85 tons in 1984 to an estimated 150 tons in 1986. Coca production in certain South American countries has tripled in recent years. More potent forms of heroin are being found in possession of the addict population and crack—a freebase form of cocaine that can be smoked—is infiltrating our cities and suburbs. Almost two-thirds of our high school seniors have used illicit drugs.

The economic and social costs of drug trafficking and addiction to this country are high. Americans spend an estimated $120 billion each year on illicit drugs. The price of narcotics abuse to the United States amounts to more than $100 billion annually in increased health care costs, lost productivity, and related crime and violence. Drug related deaths and emergencies have reached all time highs in the past few years.

In recent years many have questioned what the role of the Federal Government should be in our society. It is clear that this is one area where a strong Federal presence is necessary, and where extra resources are needed. Today Federal law enforcement agencies only intercept 5 to 15 percent of narcotics being smuggled into this country. Unfortunately, due to the deficit crisis and the need to restrain spending funding for drug enforcement and drug education efforts has not increased in proportion to the problem.

H.R. 5484 represents a bold step forward in the battle against narcotics abuse in this country. It calls for a doubling of the current spending for Federal antidrug efforts, it strengthens criminal penalties for drug violations and improves drug education.

Specificaly, the measure:

Increases penalties for most drug-related offenses and establishes a minimum 20-year jail sentence—up to life imprisonment—for drug trafficking and manufacturing which results in serious injury and death;

Calls for a mandatory 15-year prison term for possession of a firearm by a person with three convictions for drug trafficking;

Increases funding for the Drug Enforcement Agency;

Provides greater assistance to State and local drug enforcement;

Increases funding for prison construction and operation;

Increases penalties for manufacture and distribution of designer drugs;

Increases funding for additional Coast Guard personnel and equipment;

Increases funding for Customs Service personnel and operations;

Toughens bank reporting requirements to prevent money laundering; and Provides $350 million a year for drug abuse education programs run by State governments, local education agencies, and colleges and universities.

In summary, the bill we are considering here today contains important improvements in our criminal laws, it gives more resources to those agencies which enforce those laws and it serves to focus the Nation on the importance of drug education efforts. It is a critical and much needed step in the war against drugs.

But while this bill deserves our approval, it disturbs me that we are treating the drug issue as we do so many issues: an event triggers nationwide concern about a problem, 3 weeks of media coverage and magazine covers follow, quick drafting of legislation occurs followed by passage by the Congress and signature by the President, and then we forget the issue as we move on to another crisis.

Someone once said that everyone is famous for 15 seconds. Well these days national issues can be characterized the same way. The attention span of the American people and Congress for national problems is growing shorter and shorter. We talk about issues, throw ideas around, maybe change the law in a few areas and spend some money, get bored and then go on to other problems. All too often we run hot and cold on issues that need a long-term, consistently applied policy. Remember the energy crisis, the farm crisis and the crisis in education? We are cheating this country if we dispose of the drug crisis in the same way.

In fact this quick fix approach actually works against solving the problem. People see extensive coverage in the media, frenzied action by Congress, then assume that everything has been taken care of and the problem cured. The drug problem has been with us for decades, and is obviosuly not something we can solve in 3 weeks or even 3 years. It will take years of consistent hard work to educate Americans on the evils of drug abuse, to improve our enforcement capabilities and to develop with foreign nations strategies for curbing production of killer drugs.

It would be a tragedy if we just pass this bill here today and then turn our backs on the problem. It is going to be with us a long time and it is going to require a lot of hard work at all levels: from the family to the highest level of Government.

Finally, I would like to remind the House of the other drugs we are not dealing with in this bill. These arguably cause even more destruction, but have been left out of the legislation we are dealing with today. While illegal narcotics caused 3,562 deaths in 1985, tobacco causes an estimated 350,000 deaths yearly. And alcohol related deaths are estimated at 100,000 a year. Certainly we should not let the fight against the abuse of these drugs be eclipsed by our efforts against illegal drugs. Our attack on drugs must be on a broader front.

My hope is that we will pass H.R. 5484. Then we must commit ourselves to keeping the focus on the drug issue in the coming years. H.R. 5484 must not be seen as a knee-jerk reaction to a media circus but as a serious commitment to a drug-free America.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCCANDLESS].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCCANDLESS] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCANDLESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this particular bill in hopes that it will provide a rifle direction rather than a shotgun approach that the Federal Government has been using in the past to solve this major problem.

As Chief Justice Burger has said, he feels this is the biggest crisis which the United States faces, even greater than the threat of communism.

Mr. Chairman, we as a nation are faced today with a crisis of epidemic proportions. The cancer of illegal drug use has continued to spread almost unabated for close to 20 years, and is eating its way through the heart of our society.

It has been estimated that in 1985 alone, Americans spent close to $120 billion on illicit drugs, more than 13 million people suffered some form of addiction, and that almost two-thirds of our Nation's high school children had experimented with illegal substances. The facts are scary but true, and now is the time to reverse them.

H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986, which we have before us today proposes to do just that. This long-overdue legislation takes a multipronged approach to the problem of substance abuse. In addition to providing increased equipment and personnel along U.S. borders to stop the import of illegal drugs, H.R. 5484 legislates dramatically stiffer sentences for those convicted of drug trafficking, and provides far greater funding to the States for educating our communities to the dangers and wrongness of drug abuse.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5484 promises to be the first step on the long road to a drug-free society. It won't be quick and it won't be easy, but I'm proud to be a part of it and relieved that we're on our way.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Austin, TX, Mr. JAKE PICKLE.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to join my colleagues in praising the work of the many committees that have contributed to the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. I specifically want to note the effort of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee. Their work can be found in title V of the Omnibus Drug Act and is titled the Comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act. Title V makes significant improvements in the Bank Secrecy Act. These new provisions are designed to convict not only small-time money launderers, the so-called smurfs, but also those who mastermind money laundering operations. In addition, it will allow the seizure and forfeiture of their laundered cash or property traceable to that cash. In other words, this title is designed to convict money launderers and take the laundered cash from them.

I specifically want to compliment the chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. ST GERMAIN, and the ranking member, Mr. WYLIE, for their leadership in this area. I appreciate their cooperation in refining the recommendations I proposed in my bill, H.R. 4573, to strengthen the Bank Secrecy Act.

Mr. Chairman, the Oversight Subcommittee of the House Committee on Ways and Means, played a constructive role in formulating these sections of the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. The subcommittee, which I chair, investigated the area of money laundering as a part of its responsibility in overseeing the operations of the Internal Revenue Service [IRS] and the U.S. Customs Service. As Members may be aware, the IRS, acting under authority delegated by the Secretary of the Treasury, is responsible for monitoring the currency transaction reports [CTR's] required by the Bank Secrecy Act. Under this reporting law, domestic financial institutions must report cash transactions of $10,000 or more to the IRS.

Members of the oversight subcommittee were surprised to learn of the vast amount of money that was being laundered. Although no precise figures were presented to the subcommittee, estimates of the extent of money laundering reportedly exceeds $50 billion, annually.

The magnitude of the money laundering problem directly relates to our battle against drugs. Money laundering is the life blood of drug trafficking. Money laundering schemes essentially convert drug money into legitimate currency or property, which goes undetected through our economy. Until we successfully interdict drugs, take the profit from drug trafficking by stopping money laundering, and educate people about the dangers of drugs, we will continue to lose this vital battle.

In addition, I should point out that money laundering is not confined to illegal drug traffic. Information presented to my subcommittee indicates that many businesses and individuals are laundering income from both legal and illegal sources. As a result, I am concerned about the impact of money laundering on the collection of U.S. Federal income taxes.

Title V is a reasonable and necessary response to several problems we have uncovered in our own investigation. First, there are loopholes in the Bank Secrecy Act. The current definitions were insufficient to convict those acting as money launderers. As a result, the U.S. Government has been unable to secure convictions of known money launderers in several Federal courts. I, together with the administration, drafted language to close these loopholes. It was included in my bill, H.R. 4573. These new comprehensive definitions are now in section 502 of the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986.

This new section exposes money launderers to criminal and civil penalties if they "cause" or "attempt to cause" a financial institution not to file or to file an inaccurate CTR. In addition, it creates an offense of "structuring a transaction" to evade reporting requirements under the Bank Secrecy Act. These changes will enable successful prosecution of not only small-time money launderers, so-called smurfs, but also those who mastermind money-laundering schemes.

Second, the oversight subcommittee found that the IRS was unable to seize or require administrative forfeiture of money or property traceable to a money laundering scheme. This result was that even if the money launderers were apprehended, the cash disappeared. Accordingly, expanded authority for the IRS to seize and forfeit laundered cash was included in my bill, H.R. 4573. These changes to title XXVI are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the chairman of the Banking Committee have exchanged letters on this point.

Section 503 of the act addresses the seizure and forfeiture issue. The legislation makes money or property traceable to a violation of the Bank Secrecy Act subject to seizure and forfeiture. An additional Banking Committee provision specifically mandates that there must be a court order to seize assets used to violate title XXXI. In order to ensure that the assets are not withdrawn from the financial institution while the court order is secured, the Secretary of the Treasury is granted authority to freeze assets for a period of up to 10 days.

Third, a final provision from my bill is included in section 504. This is a new civil penalty in money laundering cases. The new civil penalty allows for the assessment of the difference between the amount seized and forfeited, and the amount laundered. Where the actual laundered funds cannot be found, the Government may wish to assess this new penalty against the individual involved. In other words, the new penalty is designed to take all the profit out of money laundering.

There are additional provisions that provide additional tools to strengthen title XXXI. These have been ably explained by Chairman St Germain.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I urge a favorable vote of Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. It is constructive legislation that will aid in combatting money laundering and our national drug crisis.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time, and this would conclude general debate. I yield back the balance of our time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. ENGLISH] having assumed the chair, Mr. CARR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill, H.R. 5484, to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.
